ful confidence to us all. At times we seem "the Catholic remnant," so sad and isolated; our influence so hampered; our energies so confined. These temporary associations come to an end. The individuals who have met together for awhile, who have asked questions and awakened to new spiritual perceptions will go back to their own homes carrying these new principles and convictions with them ready to do their part in teaching others that which they themselves have received, and Staley's "Catholic Religion" or McGarvey's Catechisms will be the means of converting others who will then desire to know "Helps to Repentance" or the "Way of Penitence." All this is real missionary enthusiasm of lasting benefit to immortal souls quickened to a sense of sin, awakened to a need of that holiness without which no man can see God, a foundation of a deep and lasting service and love of God, worship no longer a respectable mechanical attendance at Matins and Sermon, unwilling and unmeaning and unfruitful, but a loving obedience to our Lord's command, at last tasting and seeing how gracious the Lord and how blessed are they who trust in Him and walk in His ways.

Free Libraries.

It would not be easy to overestimate the power of popular will. That which the people want is pretty sure to be. That which is, is because the people want it. What could oppose this to the extent of forcing upon them what they do not want we should be at a loss to say. The independence and directness of the popular voice and its power to assert itself is illustrated as well as any way in things political. It was intended and arranged for in the beginning that the President should not be elected by popular vote. A difficult problem was supposed to have been satisfactorily solved by the creation of independent electors. The independence was short-lived. The President was soon elected by popular vote, practically. After this it should seem necessary only to ask what the people want in order to know what will be, and what they will not have cannot be.

But there is room for much between what a person is determined to have and what he is determined not to have. In this intermediate space may be reckoned what he is willing to have, or what he will tolerate. According as the object recedes from the line of indifference toward the desirable or the undesirable accordingly he will be interested in obtaining or rejecting it. Near this line, and on either side of it, lie compulsory education and free libraries. He is not much interested in either. He submits to the education and he uses the library. One is not very objectionable or he would not have it; the other not much esteemed or it would not be free. We may rest content the people will decide for themselves what they want and put their own value on it. They will think no more highly of it because it is supplied free; but rather less, for it will be abused, whether books or anything else.

But there is a positive objection to free libraries. It is not likely to be denied that many thousands of books are in circulation that the world could very well do without. There can be no possible motive for writing them beyond the promise of gain. Whatever free libraries do to encourage this trade is a very active evil. They do encourage it if they create or extend the circulation. We have not in mind the line of untidy, vicious-looking girls, many of them only half grown, who are to be seen waiting for books in small libraries. For books find their way from one library to another and get into the hands of quite different persons, who, although in other circles of life, read for as little purpose or profit as any could. There are tasteless blades who think it necessary to be able to talk in society, who read any book and every book because everybody else is reading it, and each to the same end, for little or no other purpose than to have something to say and appear persons of leisure and culture.

The "Practical" Trousers Hanger and Press

is a device which is being used by thousands of men for hanging and pressing their trousers smooth as if ironed. It saves their clothing, time and patience, doubles closet room, and every garment is separately get-at-able. You cannot comprehend, without a trial, its comfort and convenience. The closet shown is fitted with the five dollar set. No one who arranges his closet with the "Practical" Trousers Hanger and Press could be induced to return to former methods or the ordinary haphazard fashion so prevalent.

Our $5.00 set consists of six trousers hangers and three closet rods. It is sent prepaid on receipt of price. This quantity meets the average requirements. Single hangers, 75 cents. Single rods, 25 cents. For $1.00 will send one trousers hanger and one rod, prepaid, and afterward, when wanted, the balance of the $5.00 set for $4.00.

The "Practical" Skirt Hanger

which is shown in the lower picture has won the approval of many women who appreciate the great value of this device, which enables them to preserve the shape and set of their skirts and with a great saving of closet room. Any skirt can be removed from the rod without removing others. You will find them indispensable. Price, express paid, $1. Each "Practical" Skirt Hanger consists of four separate skirt supporters and one Closet Rod.

GUARANTEE OFFER. Anyone purchasing the "Practical" Trousers Hanger and Press or the "Practical" Skirt Hangers may return them within 60 days, at our expense, if they are not perfectly satisfactory, and we will immediately refund the full purchase price.

A 100-page illustrated descriptive book (free on request) tells what thousands of men and women think of our devices, which, since they were introduced over six years ago, have universally satisfied the most exacting.

More Episodes.

One of the strangest "episodes" that has come to our knowledge is that of a parish in an important town, where the vacation habit is so necessary a feature of the rector's life that he deserts his people (224 communicants) for a month or more, deprives them of all opportunities of public worship. It is a place where city people go for their holiday, so it is not unhealthy—it is the only church in town; it is not a solitary example of this sort of thing, but only too common, how flagrant. The Bishop of that Diocese is very much shocked at the use of Incense, and threatens "ritualists" if they omit the Ten Commandments or Litany at Sunday services—his activity finds no expression in more important matters. However, there is less cause of wonder when a learned professor in his annual report to his bishop refers casually to his priestly ministrations as follows: "I have rendered no other services worth mentioning."

More encouraging is the study of the reports of the parishes of this Diocese as to frequency of Holy Communion, out of 153, 85 have at least a weekly Mass, but the "missions" make a poor showing, out of 13, 3 only teach people the true practice of worship; there is no excuse for any Priest to have any fewer Masses than the prayer book provides, yet we hear of those who think their people are not up to a weekly Mass.

Indulgences and dispensations are not confined to the Latin Communion, but thousands of sturdy Christians eat flesh meat on Friday, and absent themselves from all public worship on Sunday, as well as spend for their own amusement money that belongs to God and His service, such are often very much interested in individual pastors, and in some cases are regular Sunday school teachers; there is no doubt about it for they talk about the fact themselves. Something is lacking in the definite nature of their religion. We cannot but differ from the learned Dean of Christ Church when he deprecates Bishops and Pastors accurately setting forth such Christian duties in detail: it is important that nothing be taken for granted, but that all should be instructed as to their bounden duty and service.

One meets plenty of that strange sort of folk who "don't want name changed and are not ashamed of Protestant"; religion does not seem to trouble them much, they seem as willing to attend any kind of Protestant service as their own, and in many cases are glad of an excuse not to attend any public service at all, and yet they seem utterly unconcious how absurd they are, and how unreal—these are "stumbling blocks" to the Church's influence, hinderers of the progress of God's Kingdom.

There is a class of the clergy who do untold harm; they are much in evidence at summer resorts, and among them are to be found Bishops who are unmindful of Episcopal responsibility; they make the hearts of the Church's true children sad and sick; they teach what has never been the doctrine of the Catholic Church; they practice what has never been her custom; they have some sort of idea that their personal whim or taste has all the authority of Church law. The most flagrant of their acts is undoubtedly in regard to the reception of our Lord's Body and Blood; they invite all manner of strange people to come forward—those in deadly sin, heresy, schism, hatred of the Church and unbelief in our Lord and the Sacrament which He appointed to show forth His Death. It is an awful responsibility. No wonder the faithful are shocked; the whole act is sinful and wrong. Those who ought to be the guardians become sharers in the dishonor.

Parish Notes.

Rev. F. D. Ward returned August 25th.

The Catechisms begin on Sunday, September 20th.

The iron gate outside the kitchen door is now in place.

Telephone number again changed; now it is Locust 19-18 A.

Rev. C. C. Quin went for his holiday August 1st, and will return for first Sunday in September.

Office of Guild of St. Mary on Aug. 31st, the first Monday in September being a legal holiday.

The South Garden, with its green foliage and bright flowers, has looked very beautiful these August days.

Anniversary Mass for the repose of the soul of Hannah P. Smith was said in Crypt Chapel on Friday, August 14th.

The Choir returns Sunday, September 6th. Sung Mass at eleven and Solemn Even-song at eight o'clock.

Rev. E. N. Webber returned August 1st, and has taken Sunday duty at Sea Isle City, Rev. G. H. Moffett taking the week-day duty there.

The eight o'clock Mass will be resumed on Sunday, September 20th, and the 7.30 on week-days after Monday, September 14th.

Rev. G. H. Moffett will be away during the whole of September. Letters on parish matters should be sent to one of the other Clergy.

The repairs of keyboard of organ were completed in season for it to be used August 23d. The other Sundays the hymns were sung without accompaniment.

The new missal stand for St. Katharine's Altar, a thank-offering for recovery from sickness, M. F. F., has been finished; made by Reinhold G. Ledig.

The MAGAZINE has been mailed each month to the address given; if any forgets to send summer address or to have mail forwarded, it is not the fault of the publisher.

The copy of Raphael's "Transfiguration," which has hung for several years in St. John's Chapel, at the request of the artist-donor, was hung in the Crypt Chapel just before the feast.

Conduits for incandescent electric lights have been laid on Cherry Street. These may be of use to us in the future when the Sanctuary can be wired and lighted with electric lights.

Monday, September 14th (F. of Exaltation of Holy Cross), a Special Mass at 6.30 a. m. at St. Katharine's Altar. All members of the Guild of the Holy Cross should be present and make their communions.

The papers of the C. B. S. have been sent regularly to all the members in sealed envelopes, to the last address given. If anyone has not received the paper the fault is with themselves or the Post Office Department, and not with the Secretary of the Ward.

The Altar Guild has received a very grateful letter from Rev. J. G. Cameron, to whom a set of white silk vestments was sent for use at Skaguay, Alaska. Also word comes from Cragsmoor of the great joy and appreciation for the black silk vestments sent there. And the Priest in Charge, Rev. Dr. Faulkner, at Orr's Island, Maine, writes of the pleasure the mission there has in burse and veil.

All Saints Mission House, Cherry and Lambert Sts.

As the more active work begins, please remember that parish work is not an opportunity to have more of the time of the Clergy or Sisters, nor is it a way to be praised for what anyone does, however faithfully. There is no work available, probably, that you would like to do, only uninteresting odds and ends that require infinite patience and no thanks. Those who do the work under all circumstances have no time to humor or flatter unreasonable or irregular workers. We do not question that they do the best they can, but they must not be selfish or exacting.

Again it is needful to point out that communicants of St. Clement's are only those who make their communions, attend Mass on Sundays, give to the support of the parish as they are able. All others forfeit any privileges or claims. The Clergy are being continually asked to transfer persons who are personally unknown to them, who have neglected all parochial responsibility for ten or more years, and yet who imagine that their statement of past faithfulness is sufficient evidence for "taking their letter" to some other parish. Again we state, only those who are on the present list, which is revised according to the Diocesan Canon yearly, can be transferred to another parish; others must begin anew in penitence and love of God and His Church, which they have despised.

Ember Days.

The Ember Days again arrest our attention. It is no wonder that vocations are few and failing, the idea of the ministry that young men mostly see and which they rightly despise is that of those of the Clergy who show any but self-denying and devoted lives. They read or hear of pleas set forth for more money, Bishops on large salaries, Priests with yearly sums much in excess of what is needed for their own support. No wonder men turn back; it is not the type of service of Him Who called the first Apostles, and if it is all the Christian Ministry means to-day, men are quite right in refusing such a life. If one believes what one reads, the idea is always that the Clergy exist primarily for the salary that they can get, not for the life and service they can give in the Master's service. Even those who are supposed to work hard, for the most part, spend their time and energy in secular activities, clubs, etc., which have no relation whatsoever to the conversion of this world to Christ, the ministration of the sacraments of His appointment form a small part only of their usual life.

The call of Christ is for a man to give himself wholly to the spiritual work of the Church and that which relates to it. God's Will, not a larger stipend, is the main consideration in a true decision.

The Church needs men who are willing to give themselves to work for Him without thought for the morrow. Women are needed vowed to God's service. Pray that such may offer themselves willingly.

Sea Isle City.

The third party went back to town on Friday, August 7th, in every way the better for the visit to the sea. Sun, air, water and sand had done their part, and it was hard to leave them behind. The Sisters' kindly care, the quiet and order of the house and household, together with the delights, bathing, strolling, crabbing, fishing, clamming—that beautiful strand that offers its pleasures in such variety—even the fierce storms, with terrors of thunder, lightning and wind, were soon forgotten as the sun shed its light and warmth over the waters, or the silvery moon spoke of quiet and hidden joys. The stone harbor trip and the evening visit to the pier gave that touch of the unfamiliar that quickens interest. It was a glorious sight on Feast of Transfiguration (August 6th) that so many came to Mass.

The fourth party, eager and expectant, came to Ludlam street on Monday, August 10. Not many hours were needed for them to learn and take advantage of the customs of the house, and before night the happy, sunburned faces told their own tale. It was a household of 48. They were different people, but the same pleasures satisfied them. Every moment of their stay was precious; there was no waste; all at their disposal, they freely used. The tiny chapel "under the sea" was not forgotten—on Sundays, of course, but on other days as well, ferial as well as festal, found those who love our Lord there in the early morning. These came up on Friday, August 21st. It was the last of the regular parties. A small household remains until closing of house, clearing up, resting and shutting up the house.

Mr. Taws has been a good neighbor all summer; his fish basket always contains a share for the Home. On Friday, August 7th, a committee of ladies of Sea Isle organized a sale of home-made cakes, candies and ice cream at Dr. Wells' cottage. The committee, Mrs. Wells, Mrs. Taylor, Mrs. Doddridge and Mrs. Wahn, collected money for ice cream and other expenses. The friends, as they surely showed themselves to be by their coming, came in great numbers, and before the evening closed everything had been disposed of and a clear profit of $102 for the benefit of the Home was in hand, which was turned over later on.

We are sorry not to have a list of those who sent the cakes and candies for the sale, but the following made donations of money: Mrs. McClung, Greenman, Tiefentheler, Buckly, O'Rouke, Klemm, Class, Shamburg, Lewis J. Wahl, Gertrude Webb, Mary A. Whan, Henry Fleer, Messrs. Hinkle, Martin, Dr. Heintzelman, Misses Marion Whan, Wood, Agnes T. Kelly, Mrs. Kendall, Miss Hoskins, S. W. H. Wells, Messrs. Boney, J. N. Whan, Mr. Seth Taylor, Mrs. W. H. Wells, Mrs. Holzer, Reges, Bush, Mrs. Strickler, Miss Upperman, Mrs. Hoskins, A. Parker, Love, Bell, Anderson, a stranger, a stranger, guests at St. Augustine's Cottage.

The sale of fancy goods, toys, candies, etc., was held at the Home on Friday and Saturday, August 21st and 22d. A large stock of useful and attractive articles were donated. Only a few people attended, but the result was good—$75.

The services have been maintained regularly on Sundays and week-days. The chapel is very small; it is a long distance down the beach for some; perhaps it is not known to many. Still, the "fear" of Bishop Scarborough has some foundation. In time we hope a chapel of some kind may be provided that will assert its own existence. Our physicians have assisted in every way, Dr. Sinexon in certifying the good health at the start and Dr. Wells guarding it at Sea Isle. There have been no serious cases; it has been a happy summer.

It is much to be desired that the house should be larger; as a fact, it is unduly crowded. While no one complains, all know that such a situation increases the difficulty of management and the work. A little more room would make things more comfortable.

Many kind friends by their subscriptions and donations have done their share in all this, while others in their assistance and work have given that which cannot be appraised or adequately acknowledged. The interest and good will of many of the people of Sea Isle City has been much appreciated.

The editor of the Cape May County Times has put in a notice of Sunday services without cost.

A pleasant incident took place on Saturday, August 15th (Assumption B. V. M.). Before Mass a pair of branch candlesticks were blessed, in which candles were burning for the Mass. One of these is in memory of one of our own children, whose anniversary is September 8th—Katie Coles.

All in the house knew her, and many assisted at this Mass; the other was obtained from "thank offerings" from several people for various mercies and blessings.

Christian Education.

The outlook is sad, indeed; what the next generation will be no one can tell. When the old Christian principles are eradicated entirely, society will be in a forlorn condition. Parish schools are a thing of the past, teaching at home is almost never practiced, father and mother know little or nothing in the way of religion, most of them never have been taught, few go to Mass regularly, they do not know even how to say their own prayers, and they could hardly teach their children One hears that awful mockery "I must hear him say his prayers," or one overhears that common verse

"Now I lay me," etc.

One sometimes is told, "I must send them away to school, because I cannot manage them at home; but the discipline must not be strict, they would rebel." One says nothing. What is there to say that would be listened to or heeded?

One investigates the ordinary schools, even so-called Church schools, and finds the religious element so vague and faint that it is dangerous to send any boy or girl to them. The teaching, discipline, training may be of the best, but the idea of life, as God reveals it, is never referred to. Everything is non-sectarian, undenominational, in other words nominal—a sham and pretense. The religious standard of nearly all the so-called church colleges and schools has been steadily falling for many years. This is the way one of them advertises itself: "Established by Episcopalians and administered in sympathy with their tenets. It is not a church institution in the sense of being directed by the church. In the breadth with which its advantages are placed at the service of those of every creed, it is entitled to be called 'non-sectarian'." Could there be anything more humiliating? Is there any institution where boys and girls may be sent where the training and example are such that they will be graduated as churchmen, staunch and sturdy; churchwomen, devoted and true?

With sad hearts we see them sent away and with hopelessness we see them come home, every principle and conviction shattered and eradicated; here and there a fertile place, where the love of God is preserved, but they are despised, because they train still in the fear of God.

The All Saints' Sisters have a school in Germantown of the true sort; it is not large or popular, the instruction is good, the training is not neglected. We commend it to you.

Free Libraries.

(Concluded.)

Libraries are supposed to be a means of educating and to promote the true enjoyment of life. Their efficiency will not be determined by the number of books read, but by the purpose of the readers. If the purpose of a man, or woman, be to become sufficiently acquainted with a book to be able to talk about it, which might be slight indeed, that person is not being educated nor promoting anything but gossip. The process could only spoil any capacity there might be for appreciating what is good in literature or life. The public may use the libraries with the result of encouraging bad literature and cultivating bad taste. Without doubt this is the case. Stacks of books would rot unopened but for the readers who are insensible to the excellences of literature.

If then we take into consideration the precarious tenure of anything whose benefits are dubious enough to relegate it into the free list. Consider the acuteness and competency that give public approval. Consider the inconsistency of supplying books to persons who are in need of bread. Consider what the educational results can be which are counteracted by the deleterious effects of reading without regard to improvement, reading to kill time, reading for nothing, for vanity, for fashion, destroying the desire for what is great. Consider the floods of trash that can have no other effect than stupefying the mind and corrupting the heart. It will be seen there is little to be expected from the free library to direct the current of human life, and that the world could probably get along wonderfully well without it. Anyhow, this fad of yesterday is not a thing to go mad about.

Peace of Life.

The knowledge of the secret of a peaceful life has been esteemed a worthy pursuit by all men; ill success has not discouraged it. Man has sought out many inventions, but he remains as ignorant of this as ever.

It will be admitted at the same time that a pretty general ignorance of the Christian religion prevails notwithstanding all the teachers and churchgoers. Children grow up in Sunday schools and listen to sermons, yet their minds remain unfurnished with the rudiments of Christianity. There is no corresponding progress between religious and secular knowledge in the juvenile mind. When a child has finished the course of the common school he knows something about numbering—much more indeed than he knows about praying.

This is as it should not be; and arises, we imagine, not from skepticism or immorality, neither of which has operated on him, but rather because he has never been taught, nor does it occur to him that religion is of the least practical use in the world. So far as this world is concerned, education is to him everything, and can accomplish everything—public good—the perfection of humanity—and individual happiness. While religion is supposed to concern another and future world and has little or no bearing on the social and physical movements under Divine government.

When Christianity is set forth—or set aside—in this way it is not surprising that it commands small attention—that it becomes indefinite, and passes into a speculation, or at most exerts a remote and uncertain influence on thought and action. It is neither what man wants nor what God gave.

Christianity or no Christianity, mankind in every age have felt the need of and striven after that which could raise them above the world and the things of the world—wealth, power, pleasure, hopes, fears, cares, which distract the soul and spoil life. This is the one point at which all wisdom aimed in the enlightened past—and in the present—and will in the future, for it is the object that is worthy of man's ambition and the only one he will be satisfied to live for.

Well, suppose there is nothing in the world provided to supply this universal and high and anxious desire? It would indicate a purpose of God to satisfy the lowest wish of the lowest creature and abandon the chief desire of the most exalted to eternal unfulfilment.

Whatever then Christianity has to offer less than the satisfaction of the highest desires of man need not expect consideration. And on the other hand, so far as it can and has raised man above the world and himself, and is capable of supplying the one supreme necessity of life, it is entitled to the consideration of all persons thoughtful enough to know what they want, and is worthy of the divine origin it claims.

When Jesus Christ came He raised man above himself and made him partaker of a divine nature, gave him a new and a pure life, gave him the inheritance of all things belonging to the Spirit, and power and strength to have victory and to triumph against the devil, the world and the flesh.

With what consummate consistency does this religion meet and satisfy the deepest and best longing of the soul—the things that kings and prophets desired to see, and heathen philosophers and poets invoked.

And what Christ came to do and perfected with so much labor it is our duty to set forth, who pray for the rule of His kingdom on earth and the accomplishment of His design in the soul. A religion that is not restricted to an indefinite future, but has a present operation on the affairs of life. A belief carried into action that guarantees the happiness that can come only from God and which passes all understanding.

The question of course will be: Why is this offer not accepted? why is religion so generally neglected—its teachings so little heeded and its effects so inconspicuous?

It is not a very obscure fact that the understanding of the worldly is warped by the desires of the senses. Every gratification of the flesh tends to overthrow the reason until the distinction between right and wrong is almost effaced.

It is not to be supposed a man can apprehend the facts of religion who is intoxicated by passion. These are not the wise and enlightened thinkers among men who knew that virtue was the chief good in the world.

But if you demand an evidence of the power of religion to do what it professes to do it can be found in the lives of many in all ages who have resisted and risen superior to the world and their own weakness and reproduced in themselves the virtues of Jesus Christ according to the divine philosophy that whatsoever is born of God overcometh the world. Men who know what true happiness is—who have learned in whatsoever state they are therewith to be content. And like the blessed St. Paul, who suffered so much, yet said none of these things affect me, nor do I regard the loss of all things—not even life.

The "Practical" Trousers Hanger and Press

is a device which is being used by thousands of men for hanging and pressing their trousers smooth as if ironed. It saves their clothing, time and patience, doubles closet room, and every garment is separately get-at-able. You cannot comprehend, without a trial, its comfort and convenience. The closet shown is fitted with the five dollar set. No one who arranges his closet with the "Practical" Trousers Hanger and Press could be induced to return to former methods or the ordinary haphazard fashion so prevalent.

Our $5.00 set consists of six trousers hangers and three closet rods. It is sent prepaid on receipt of price. This quantity meets the average requirements. Single hangers, 75 cents. Single rods, 25 cents. For $1.00 will send one trousers hanger and one rod, prepaid, and afterward, when wanted, the balance of the $5.00 set for $4.00.

The "Practical" Skirt Hanger

which is shown in the lower picture has won the approval of many women who appreciate the great value of this device, which enables them to preserve the shape and set of their skirts and with a great saving of closet room. Any skirt can be removed from the rod without removing others. You will find them indispensable. Price, express paid, $1. Each "Practical" Skirt Hanger consists of four separate skirt supporters and one Closet Rod.

GUARANTEE OFFER. Anyone purchasing the "Practical" Trousers Hanger and Press or the "Practical" Skirt Hangers may return them within 60 days, at our expense, if they are not perfectly satisfactory, and we will immediately refund the full purchase price.

A 100-page illustrated descriptive book (free on request) tells what thousands of men and women think of our devices, which, since they were introduced over six years ago, have universally satisfied the most exacting.

Parish Notes.

The choir returned Sunday, September 6th.

The Rev. C. C. Quin returned for Sunday, September 6th.

The report of the Sanctuary Fund will be printed next month.

The Offices and Instructions of the various Guilds will be said this month according to the Kalendar.

The 8 o'clock Mass was resumed on Sunday, September 20th, and the 7.30 Mass on weekdays, September 15th.

All kinds of odds and ends, as well as clothing, will be gladly received for the Jumble Sale in November, to be held for the benefit of the Poor Fund.

Anniversaries of communicants have been commemorated during the month as follows: Joseph Christian Day, 8th; Esther Catherine Coles, 8th; Martha White, 12th; Julia Dunlap, 16th.

Clinton Searle, after over four years' service as sexton, resigned, the resignation taking effect the middle of September. Harry Johnson was appointed to the position and entered upon duties September 16th.

Mr. Howard G. Peppercorn has kindly made a working drawing and blue print for a silver holy water pot, which is to be made in Japan as a memorial of one who formerly worshipped at St. Clement's.

Pew Rents.

Pew rents are due in advance October 1st. By resolution of the vestry a $1.00 assessment on each sitting is added to pay Convention dues and for the Episcopal Fund. Checks should be made out to St. Clement's Church, and may be addressed 20th and Cherry Streets, or bills may be paid in the Vestry Room on Monday, October 5th, 4 to 5 P. M.

The Catechism.

The Catechism began for the winter on September 20th. Miss E. S. Moffitt has kindly undertaken a Bible Class for the older girls. The class is to study the life and teachings of Our Lord. At least two more teachers are needed, and there surely ought to be those who appreciate the privilege of helping to teach the children to love and serve God. If it involves some personal sacrifice, that makes the service just that much more acceptable to God. The prayers of the congregation are asked for the work.

The Sea Shore Home.

The house at Sea Isle City was formally closed and shut up for the Winter on September 10th. The fierce gales during the week of the 13th blew open the front door, the Chapel door and some of the windows and knocked away most of the porch railings. Compared with damage done in the immediate vicinity, this was very light, and speaks well for the stability of the house. It was soon repared sufficiently to weather the Winter, the railings and so on will have to be replaced in the Spring. A very urgent need is more room. The Sisters hope that it will be possible for them next year to extend the third story over the rest of the building. This would make several bed rooms, and comfortably increase the capacity of the house.

Holy Guardian Angels.

It is written, "He shall give His angels charge over thee, to keep thee in all thy ways. They shall bear thee in their hands that thou hurt not thy foot against a stone." Here let us notice first that these angels do not of themselves take the charge over us. That would be to intrench upon the prerogatives of our Creator, Preserver and Redeemer. It is a charge given to them. It is a power delegated to them. See how God of His infinite compassion and tenderness for us commands His highest spirits to watch over and guard us. "O my God, what is man that Thou art mindful of him, and the Son of man that Thou so regardest him? Thou madest him lower than the angels and yet Thou commandest that the angels should minister to and serve him."

Let each one think for himself, must an angel, a being so noble, so pure, so holy, attend on me? "O, wonderful condescension," says St. Bernard. "O, excess of goodness and love He hath given His angels charge over thee!" Now, who is this that hath given this charge? Even the Lord of angels; even He whose every behest, every motion of whose will they obey. The supreme majesty of God hath laid a command on His angels to become thy angels. They are to guide thee and keep thee in all thy ways. They do not loiter; they are not negligent in their trust. They execute it with diligence and tenderness. They bear thee up in their hands (though thou seest them not), so that no harm should happen unto thee, so that thou dash not thy foot against a stone, against sin, that stumbling block and rock of offense. They see our hindrances. They see the misery and exceeding sinfulness of the sins by which we are surrounded and hedged about on all sides. They see the snares, and traps, and pitfalls which the devil—the fallen archangel—has laid in our path. Therefore, they watch over us and guard us, and (in the words of Hugo of St. Victor) "this they do with great care in all places, at all hours, assisting us in providing for our necessities. They intervene between us and Thee, O Lord, conveying to Thee our sighs and tears, and bringing to us the blessings of Thy grace. They walk with us in all our ways; they go in and out with us; they observe us how we walk in the midst of a perverse generation, how we seek Thy kingdom and its righteousness. They assist us in our labors; they guard us sleeping and protect us in our rest; they rejoice in us when we rejoice in Thee, and they minister to us in compassion when we suffer or are afflicted even by Thee. Great is the care they have of us and great the effects of their love for us. They love him whom Thou lovest; they guard him whom Thou beholdest with tenderness, but they forsake those from whom Thou withdrawest Thyself, and they hate them that work iniquity, because, O Lord, such are hateful to Thee.—J. B. Wilkinson, quoted in "Daily Sections," vol. iii.

Spiritual Reading.

It sometimes happens that the clergy are asked to recommend books for spiritual reading, and the request is accompanied by a recital of what has already been read. It often brings consternation to the mind of the priest to imagine the mental indigestion of one who, in a short time, has devoured so much weighty matter. Books of profound power and the deepest spiritual insight, whose matter is so condensed that every word is of value, are rushed through as if the sole virtue in reading consisted in getting on to the next volume. Books belonging to high degrees of spiritual life are read before those which instruct in the first principles. And all this, as if getting through so many pages, or spending so many minutes, were in themselves things acceptable to God. The result of such hasty reading is woeful. No spiritual book was ever intended to be read rapidly and then dropped.

A small-sized volume of spiritual reading used daily should ordinarily last a year. This does not necessarily apply to lives of the saints, and other pious biographies, but it does apply to those books of abstract instruction familiarly called spiritual reading. At the end of one year a book may be laid aside, but at the end of a second, it could be taken up again for another term with profit. Some books should never be laid aside, they should last a life-time, even though others should be taken up. This implies reading slowly and rereading many times. It is not an exciting way to read, nor is it gratifying to one's restlessness, but it is the way that brings good results.

The matter of a spiritual book should be firmly impressed upon the mind, every page should be familiar, every chapter should be an intimate friend who is thoroughly known and appreciated. Special sentences should cling to the memory and be continually weaving themselves into the passing thought. In fact, the book should be known practically by heart. It is only in this way that the substance of what is read will be taken into the system of the reader and become part of him. When this is done the value of the reading is apparent. It has furnished material for prayer, for meditation; it has taught a soul something about God, something about itself, something about attaining Him. It creates in the mind a condition of thought friendly to spiritual facts, akin to the mind of God and capable of knowing the realities behind the words it has been learning. Many a meditation consists principally of drowsiness and wandering thoughts because there has been no proper spiritual reading. The mind is not familiar with the language of prayer, and the soul has no atmosphere of God—that is, a simple affinity with spiritual things of which one never thinks, but which has grown naturally from faithful, spiritual study. The Holy Spirit teaches devout souls by pious reading, and for worth and profit this exercise comes next after prayers.

Read little, read slowly, read carefully; and read not simply for reading's sake, but to learn things which can be put into execution for God.

Confidence.

The chief concern of a Christian is whether he is living in a state of grace; whether God is dwelling within him by His presence and power directing his thoughts and moulding his affections. This condition gives to every human act its true value and makes man to be what he is, for without it he is nothing. And whatever he will be in time and eternity depends upon his continuing in the same, for only by it could hope live.

The assurance of possessing God's friendship is grounded on the belief that He has performed an act on our account as definite as the act of our creation. But that God has performed this work in the case of anyone guilty of a great sin or that the man will continue in His friendship does not rise above a probability.

This is not all God does for the salvation of the soul. Since there is in the natural world an endless variety of influences prevailing to which the mind and heart are subjected, reason would lead us to expect, if Scripture did not compel us to believe that these things are ordered to concur in the working of the plan of salvation. To regard the work of the Lord and consider the operation of His hands is religious as well as reasonable. It elevates the mind and delights the heart; reveals the attributes of God and fills the soul with a thousand emotions of goodness. That God preserves the world is as much a matter of faith as that he made it. That he stretched forth the heavens and laid the foundation of the earth, and waters the furrow with the drops of rain and gives to all life and breath and all things. That the changes and chances of this mortal life happen according to the direction of God is clear revelation. That He watches over His people and invents means to deliver them from evil and make salvation easy is only the conclusion from reading any part of Scripture, than which nothing should appear to be more encouraging and consoling. We are constrained to believe the movements of men and things in the world are the definite acts of God on our account as much as the granting a single grace. That one as well as the other is the work of divine favor. That either is the condition of a meritorious life. That the comforting assurance of possessing one is accompanied by a confidence reposed in the other.

Still we are inclined to believe no proportionate attention is given to it and no consolation experienced corresponding to the complacency with which we accept the assurance of the forgiveness of sins. But rather we are in the habit of thinking the world is governed by some agency that admits of another explanation than God's care for His people. To our mind faith demands the same steadfastness in one as the other, and the man who is strong enough to rise above any doubt in the efficacy of a saving sacrament is strong enough to resist the insinuation that God is not particularly concerned in the smallest affairs of our life and does not direct and defend us with an omnipotent care.

If we quoted Holy Scripture where God interfered on account of His people to turn the course of events it would be difficult to know where to stop. And the same thing might be said if we referred to profane history. A great crisis is more impressive than a trivial circumstance, yet the obscure and the commonplace contribute to and render possible the remarkable and extraordinary: "A cloud crossing the sky at a season when rain was not expected was sufficient to overthrow an empire." "The light and the shadow of the earth changed places because on the afternoon of a summer day a peasant boy said to a Prussian in a woods, 'Go this way and not that.'"

It is difficult to see how a person who admits any work of God at all, the preservation of the Jewish and Christian Church, for instance, could confine his observations to the great things of the world, and suppose the familiar circumstances of his own individual situation were unknown to God or happened without His permission. There is no reason nor revelation nor doctrine to encourage it. If this was considered as it should be it would maintain a contentment and happiness which is so much craved, but which will never come but from the confidence that we are the objects of the ceaseless care of a God of wisdom and love.

In reviewing the lives of the great servants of God it is possible to confine observation and reflection to the deeds they have done without considering the conjuncture of circumstances that was ordained for the suitable execution of them. In the everyday life of the ordinary Christian there may be little to distinguish or much that is obscure and unintelligible, but that does not affect what God has done and consequently can do and may be expected to do. Not, indeed, for those who do not expect it, nor believe in it, but who willingly accept it and sincerely desire it. For the eyes of the Lord are over the righteous, but His face is against them that do evil, and all things work together for good, not to all, but to them that love God, whether it is what the world calls good or evil.

Devotion.

It cannot be denied, when the subject is seriously considered, that there are many misconceptions of what devotion really is.

We sometimes hear persons speaking of what is only a part of devotion, as though it were the thing itself. Some will return from a service where, as they tell you, they "felt a great deal of devotion." Here is plainly meant that a certain spiritual sweetness or gratification took hold upon them. Or else we hear the term used for the spirit of recollection; someone is spoken of as being very "devout," when what is intended is that he is careful and observant of all the acts which belong to the outward worship of God; that he never forgets when in church that he is in the presence of God. Sometimes, again, the word devotion is made to stand for frequent church going; a person is "devout" because he or she spends a great deal of time attending services. Of course, all these expressions have a truth and meaning in themselves, but they by no means represent the whole, or the true idea of devotion.

Spiritual writers tell us that devotion is a yielding up of the soul to God, by which it consecrates itself to His worship and service. St. Thomas Aquinas clearly defines it as "the will to do promptly whatever belongs to the service of God." And St. Francis de Sales tells us further, that devotion is a kind of love which displays itself in a certain promptness and eagerness—what he calls "vivacity"—in doing what the love of God would have us do.

As a well-known spiritual writer has said, devotion is "a solid, hard-headed, stout-willed, business-like affair, and not at all the sweet, fervid, heroic, graceful thing it is often taken for." Not that the qualities implied in these latter epithets do not belong to devotion, but they do not constitute the most important part of it.

It is by no means a luxury of the spiritual life, the monopoly of ecstatic and exalted persons, but it is within the reach of the lowliest Christian, and is to be developed in measure by everyone who has begun to serve God. Devotion brings the characteristic of tenderness into our worship and service of God, along with that of spiritual alacrity, of which we have spoken as belonging to it. It alone will prevent our religion from becoming a hard and cold and formal thing. It produces in the soul, on the one hand, the humble recognition of our own weakness in the sight of God, while on the other, it calls forth the brave, unfaltering trust in the Divine power and compassion, ready to pity and comfort in all our helplessness and all our strivings.

When devotion brings the beauty and perfection of God close to the soul, there follows a certain gladness of spirit, as the soul realizes that the only true enjoyment is to be found in God: "O how amiable are Thy dwellings, Thou Lord of Hosts! My soul hath a desire and longing to enter into the courts of the Lord; my heart and my flesh rejoice in the living God." Sometimes it shows God to the soul, far off, beyond the reach of its nothingness, unattainable by its weak desires. Then there is born in the soul what seems like pain, yet is not all pain, but has in it burning desire and the holy anxiety lest God hide Himself from the soul: "My soul is athirst for God, yea even for the living God; when shall I come to appear before the presence of God? My tears have been my meat day and night, while they daily say unto me 'Where is now thy God!'" Or at other times, devotion shows the soul its own sinfulness and vileness, and there is produced abiding sorrow and deep contrition: "I acknowledge my faults, and my sin is ever before me. Against Thee only have I sinned, and done this evil in Thy sight."

We may think of devotion as a certain character or property of the faithful soul, by which it is kept true to the service of God. And this property is produced and increased by the careful use of God's grace. So we shall expect devotion to be strengthened and kept alive by regularity and earnestness in prayer; by systematic meditation upon God and the love which is rightly due from us whom He calls His "children" by baptism. And along with prayer and meditation, by which we discover and ask for the grace we need, there must be the careful preparation for, and frequent communion with God in the Sacrament of the Body and Blood of Christ, through Whom alone all grace from God comes into our souls. Devotion is no spasmodic or fitful affair, a thing of sudden fervor or flaming ardor of soul, which lasts for a time and then dies down. It is in reality a calm and settled state, only arrived at by very slow stages, but towards which souls must be ever striving, growing more and more, as earthly life goes on, "unto the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ," Whose whole life on earth was one of truest and intensest devotion to God.

We need not, then, be deceived concerning devotion. It does not consist in a great number of pious practices, as if a man's strength lay in the multitude of things he had to do. Nor will devotion which is lasting and real, ever be produced by a sensible love of images and pictures. These may aid what is already spiritual in us, but they cannot supply it altogether. As has been well said, "this mistake first weakens the head, secondly turns us unreal, and thirdly makes us foolish." The indiscriminate use of devotional books, which are in many cases too high-pitched to voice the real soul's utterance of those who use them will not produce a healthy or robust devotion. It will more likely be sickly and sentimental.

The devotion which we must wish for, and use all the grace of God to possess, will be known by the strong and practical will—a will which does not depend upon itself, yet neither does it spare itself the least, in its efforts to love and serve God. It will be known by promptness of action, which keeps nothing back from God, and does not bargain for its reward before starting to do His Will. Cheerful perseverance will be an element of it; and also the willingness to suffer and to do violence to self, which, indeed, is possible only to true devotion.

To struggle against and overcome what is evil, and that hampers our progress towards God, is our necessary occupation as Christians in this world. And however halting and ineffectual must seem to us at times all our efforts in this struggle, yet let us recall those words of our Lord, which comfort and encourage, "Be of good cheer, I have overcome the world." So shall it be that as we find ourselves possessing in greater measure true and real devotion, we shall find also that joyous peace which God intends for, and which only He can give, to faithful souls, and which the world can never take away from such souls when once they have found it.

The Seven Archangels.

One of the many harms that have come to man from sin is that he was separated from the Holy Angels. We know that there are thousands and thousands of spiritual beings who have never for a moment given up their service and love of Almighty God, but man's rebellion removed him from the close union and intercourse that he might have had with them. And yet God, in His great love and mercy, willed that the Holy Angels should help and care for men. The chosen nation was an object of interest to them. A Guardian Angel watches over each one who has been made a member of Christ, and so has become an heir of the Kingdom of Heaven (Heb. i, 14). We are told in the Book of Tobit (xii, 15) that there are Seven who stand in the presence of God, and these have special union with men, for they are spoken of as offering the prayers of the Saints. The Prophet Zechariah may refer to these when he speaks of those Seven: "They are the eyes of the Lord which run to and fro through the whole earth" (iv, 10). When, at the beginning of his Book of Revelation, St. John salutes the Seven Churches, he delivers the message of Grace and Peace from God and "from the Seven Spirits which are before His Shrine" (i, 4). Afterwards he sees trumpets given to the Seven Angels which "stood before God" (Rev. viii, 2). But they bring, too, the seven last plagues when the time of mercy is over and are seen coming forth from the Temple in Heaven (Rev. xv, 1-6), and are commanded to pour out the vials of the wrath of God upon the earth.

But, more than this, we are allowed to know the names of some of these Archangels from Holy Scripture.

First, St. Michael comes before us. He is the Prince of the people of Israel (Dan. x, 21). He rescues the body of Moses from the power of the Devil (Jude 9), and he is active in leading the Angels under him against the powers of evil (Rev. xii, 7).

And next we may think of St. Gabriel how he, too, was allowed to have a special interest in the people of God, how he encouraged and revealed God's will to the Prophet Daniel (ix, 21), and how he brought the promise of a son to Zechariah (St. Lu. i, 19); but, above all, how he was honored by being sent with the greatest message that ever came to earth: "Fear not, Mary, for thou hast found favor with God. Thou shalt conceive in thy womb and bring forth a son, and shalt call his name Jesus," and heard her wondrous answer to the will of God, "Behold the handmaid of the Lord."

Then we may remember St. Raphael, the restorer of sight to the pious Tobit and the companion of his son Tobias (Tobit xi, 7; v. 4). And then St. Uriel who was sent to answer the difficulties of Esdras (2 Esdras iv, 1-36).

These are the only ones whose names are mentioned in Holy Scripture, but, according to tradition, the three others are called Sealtiel, Jedudiel, Barachiel.

But since the very names of some of the Angels have been revealed to us, we may believe they are intended to teach us some lesson. We may then learn that the Blessed Angels are not mere forces or powers, but persons with individual wills and minds—minds that have, by their own separate choice, been ever turning upward to the Source of all wisdom; wills that have been ever obeying in loving adoration the one perfect will of God, for a name tells us of a personality.

Then the very names will teach us of their different characters that no two are exactly alike in God's creation, and that the names given by God are not mere sounds intended to mark simply a distinction of one from another, but are the outward expression of various characteristics. And then we may learn how each can dedicate whatever powers he may possess to God and strive to give ourselves, our powers to Him Who has given them to us. —A. G. Stallard, quoted in "Daily Sections," vol. iii.

Westminster Abbey.

Separated by wide intervals of time and locality, there have been three Saintly Kings who were alike in this —that they conceived the idea of dedicating to the glory of their God, in or near their capital city, a house "exceeding magnifical," and in each case the temple so reared became in God's Providence a center of the national life in their respective kingdoms. But not even the Temple at Jerusalem, devised by King David and built by his son, nor yet the Abbey of St. Denys, which owes its chief glories to St. Louis of France, has been so long and so closely connected with its nation's history as has the Minster raised by St. Edward the Confessor, on the banks of the Thames in the middle of the eleventh century.

The King caused it to be built in the Norman style, which he had learned to know and love across the sea. He watched its growth with untiring care. He just lived to know that his work had been consecrated, and only a few days later was laid to rest within its walls.

The following day Harold, the last of the Saxon line, was crowned there, the first of a long series of coronations, for every succeeding English Sovereign has been crowned at Westminster, including our present King. Many have been married there, and by far the greater number have been buried there.

Year by year the Shrine of the Confessor became more famous. Rich and poor made pilgrimages and gave offerings to it, and at length Henry II erected a worthy tomb to which the Saint's reliques were translated on the 13th of October, 1163, a day ever since kept as his principal festival.

Just a century later Henry III rebuilt the Church in honor of its founder and himself bore the Royal Saint's remains to a new and exquisite Gothic Shrine. The beauty of its workmanship is said to have excelled even that of the marbles, gold and

ST. CLEMENT'S MAGAZINE

VOL. XIX PHILADELPHIA, DECEMBER, 1903 NO. 12

The Magazine.

Some time ago the MAGAZINE was enlarged to give space for advertisements, but of late these have fallen off, and so the income is reduced. The extra space has been filled with reading matter. With the next number, however, the size will be reduced to former number of pages. This will not entirely bring the expenses within income, so it is desirable to have a larger number of subscribers, and it is hoped that any who value the MAGAZINE as a means of information concerning parish matters will pay the annual subscription price.

Christmas Tide.

Every Christian should prepare to receive the Body and Blood of that Saviour who was made man for us, coming as a little child, born in Bethlehem. Sin alone prevents, and His Priests are ready and willing to hear the confessions and give absolution to the truly penitent. There ought to be a large and loving approach of the Faithful to the Holy Feast.

The Friday abstinence rule is not of obligation on the Feast of the Nativity. The Sisters ask, as in former years, for donations to worthy persons and families who otherwise would not share the Christmas cheer.

The Midnight Mass will be said in St. John's Chapel. It is not expected that persons shall make their Communions at that time, however. There may be some who cannot come early, and by speaking to one of the clergy they may make their Communions at midnight. It is expected that such shall observe a six hour fast of devotion beforehand. The attendance at the Solemn Mass is ordinarily very small. The Church ought to be crowded. The family and social observance of the day should not be at the cost of the worship due to the Holy Babe of Bethlehem.

Donations for the flowers are asked. A box is in the corridor for that purpose.

Missionary Box.

The Altar Guild during the winter hopes to prepare a box for Japan. Donations toward the cost of the material for vestments are needed and will be gratefully received. The Guild would like to make this box as complete as the one just sent to the Associate Mission, Wuchang, China: Chasuble, stole, maniple, burse and veil, amice, alb, girdle, purificators and corporal. Members of St. Saviour's Ward C. B. S. are asked to give donations toward cost of chalice and paten, etc., for this box.

PHILADELPHIA, DECEMBER, 1903.

St. Clement's Tide.

The Bishop of the Diocese, with gracious charity and with his accustomed courtesy, sent his usual greeting: "I sincerely hope that the observance of St. Clement's-tide by yourself and your congregation may be fruitful in increase of faith and interest in the extension of the kingdom of Christ throughout the world." None of us appreciate how far reaching is our influence. Through these many years this parish has striven, by its faithful witness to forgotten and neglected truths, to turn and strengthen others; and only God knows the power and extent of its aim, life, effort.

Much loving labor had been done by faithful ones that vestments, sacred vessels, ornaments, as well as the material fabric, might be bright, shining, in keeping with the uplifting joy, while the training of voices and preparing of human souls had not been lost sight of. We note the fact—the efforts were for the glory of God in honor of our holy Patron. The Procession of the Sodality on Sunday night was an inspiring act of worship, the altar decked and ready, people with high impulse and devotion waiting to do their part. The choir was accompanied by a quartette of horns and drums; the First Vespers of St. Clement were sung. The sermon by Father McGarvey on the "Earthly Warfare of God's People" touched that ever present note of this parish's life. The various guilds were well represented and bore their testimony to that militant note, while the Te Deum at the end was a fitting thanksgiving for all the wondrous things God has made known to us, the privileges He has given us.

One hundred and eighty-six came and made their Communion here, while others in remote places or at more convenient Churches did not fail to respond to the true note of joy in our Patron's solemnity.

At eleven the Solemn Mass was sung, Revs. W. A. McClenthen, C. C. Quin and F. D. Ward being the sacred ministers; the Rev. R. H. Paine, of Mount Calvary, Baltimore, was present in the choir. Gounod's St. Cecilia was sung with orchestral accompaniment, members of the Germania, under the leadership of Mr. William Stoll, formerly of this parish, Mr. Sears at the organ, and the solo work by Masters Charles Snyder, Alan Moore, Messrs. George Dundas and Harry Hotz. Any ordinary description would fail to convey any expression of the beauty and devotion of the service.

The offerings were for the Endowment Fund and amounted to $747.62. The total amount of fund is $10,026.95.

There was a large congregation, including many of the clergy. Loving and kind messages came from others, while the joy of the festival awoke many a response in faithful hearts and souls.

On Monday night the children were much amused with the tricks of Professor W. F. Hartz. There was a good attendance.

The Parish Tea on Tuesday night was a very happy occasion; people came in goodly numbers and others sent messages of regret. Some boys of the Penna. School for the Blind furnished an entertaining programme, ending with a Toy Symphony. Rev. Robt. Paine kindly gave a greeting and the Rev. D. I. Odell, of The Annunciation, came to express that loving sympathy which he always so generously bestows. All were happy and it needed not to say it, for it showed itself.

Parish Notes.

The swing doors are at last in place at the north of the corridor, but the glass is not ready.

Communicants are asked to make generous offerings for Sanctuary Fund on Christmas Day, using the marked envelopes.

Studies for the St. Katharine Altar have been begun, and also news of encouraging progress of the work on the new Ciborium has been received.

The Mothers' Christmas Supper will be on Wednesday, December 30th, at 8 o'clock. The Mothers' Meeting will be omitted Thursday, December 31st.

The Christmas Festival of the Catechism will be on Monday, December 28th, 2 and 8 P. M. It is expected that Tableaux of the Nativity will be given at night.

Mrs. Wm. Halsey Wood has been selected for the Bishop White Parish Library Society, Miss Brown having resigned. Subscriptions, etc., should be sent to Mrs. Wood.

A Fund has been started by two donations ($3.00) for the rebuilding of the present parish building when the time comes. No doubt other donations will increase it gradually.

Those who desire Christmas cards with Christian meaning are recommended to examine those at the Mission House always carefully selected. This year they are especially good.

The rummage sale, in aid of the Poor Fund, will be held at All Saints' Mission House, Tuesday, Dec. 1st. Articles of all kinds are much needed and should be sent to the Mission House.

It would seem only right that the faithful should observe Thursday, December 24th, being Christmas Eve, as a day of abstinence, since flesh meat is permitted on Christmas Day and the Feast of the Circumcision.

Subscriptions and donations for the past season of Sea Shore Home paid all expenses, and a balance is left to provide for the further alterations, improvements and repairs of the house. The complete statement will be printed later on.

Miss Adelaide F. Howell, 2121 DeLancey Place, represents the Church Periodical Club. She will be glad to put members of the Parish in communication with persons who will be glad to receive magazines, etc., after they have been read.

Solemn Mass was sung on Thanksgiving Day, a goodly number of people being present to thank God for the blessings of the harvest and to pray His continued blessing on our country and rulers. The offerings for the Poor Fund amounted to $149.05, and for the Episcopal Hospital $3.50.

The Bishop of the Diocese, having been asked as to the rule of abstinence on Feast of the Circumcision (Friday, January 1st), writes "to disapprove of requiring that the Feast of the Circumcision be observed as a day of abstinence." Flesh meat, under this counsel, may be eaten without scruple or fault on that day.

The elevator for the Mission House has been delayed awaiting the inspection of the shaft by the Building Inspectors. It is hoped to have their report in a few days. The cost will be about $2,500 at least, perhaps more. Very few people have responded to this appeal which is rather a surprise when one bears in mind the labors of love faithfully carried on these many years.

All Saints was fittingly observed, and the generous offerings of some few people has lifted the burden of the half yearly mortgage interest for this time. The number of communions was encouraging even if not altogether satisfactory. At night Solemn Evensong was sung as usual followed by Vespers for the dead. On All Souls' Day a large number of names were sent in for remembrance and for the help of the Holy Sacrifice for the souls. Solemn Mass was sung at 9 o'clock. Offerings amounted to $20.50.

A white Stole for the Priest assisting at Holy Communion has been given. The design is in harmony with the set of Vestments given last Christmas. At the top are St. Clement's chains and anchor with a spiked crown star-pointed at ends. At each end vine leaves and grape clusters with a panel on the one with St. Vincent as Deacon, on the other St. Lawrence as Sub-Deacon underneath the Divine Words of Consecration. The whole design is most beautiful, the coloring being exquisite shades of green, violet, red, with gold thread and small pearls. The work was done in the embroidery room of the All Saints' Sisters in Baltimore.

The Altar Guild has been working hard to finish the new set of Violet Vestments for Advent which consists of Chasuble, Stoles, Burse and Veil. Mr. Linton, who drew the beautiful designs, also kindly superintended the coloring, the dominant tone of which is deep rose pink. Latin Crosses adorn both front and back of the Chasuble, on which thistles grow at intervals, trellised in pink. At the junction of the arms on the front rests a St. Veronica's handkerchief, while the arms on the back are filled in by a Crucifix worked in deep flesh tints representing our Lord in the first flush of His Agony. The Stoles carry out the thistle effect, but the Burse and Veil are different from any worked by the Guild before. Running straight across them is a trellised cross meeting five small Greek crosses in the center. The whole effect of the set is striking and handsome.

"Disloyal" Practices.

Baptizing in private houses for convenience and not necessity.

Baptizing adults without proper dispositions and preparation.

Giving Confirmation without due preparation.

Giving the Blessed Sacrament to those who are not Confirmed and who do not intend to be.

Encouraging unprepared and unworthy Communions; also unfasting Communion, contrary to the custom of the Church.

Afternoon and evening Communions after one or two or three heavy meals.

Irreverent consecrations, not discerning the Lord's Body, carelessly leaving the Holy Gifts unconsumed and permitting to be handled without reverence.

Not affording opportunity for Communion on every Sunday and Holy Day.

Morning and Evening Prayer not said daily in church.

Taking part with "non-Episcopal ministers" in public services, marriages, burials, etc.

Officiating for those who already have a husband or wife living.

Publicly denying the Lord who bought them and teaching others so to do.

Saying the burial service and solemnizing matrimony in private houses without sufficient cause, the Church being the proper place.

Christmas Gladness.

The birth of Jesus Christ and the redemption of man is the subject set before the world at this season by the Christian religion. It teaches there is no salvation without the Incarnate Saviour. It is and should be a time of great joy.

Yet the Incarnation of the Son of God will not benefit us unless He is born in our souls by His Holy Spirit as really as He was born in the flesh. What joy can spring from His coming into the world if He has never come into our life? So far as we are concerned it would be the same if He had never come at all. It is possible there are some whose happiness is not affected in the least by this mystery. They would be quite as happy if no such event had taken place. For these persons there is no Saviour; for the nature of the operation of salvation is a change from misery to happiness both in this world and the world to come.

Happiness is commonly estimated by comparison. A man may be happy to-day because he was less happy yesterday, and that which he calls happiness to-day he will remember as misery to-morrow. That which is happiness to one man who has never enjoyed such good fortune before is not happiness to another who has always enjoyed better. Previous misery makes much for present happiness, as previous happiness intensifies present misery. Thus it is evident few reach that condition which all would regard as the extremity either of misery or happiness. Millions think themselves happy, few truly are so. They esteem themselves happy from the consideration of the misery they have escaped. Persons go into religious ecstasy because they have abandoned some vicious habit; the virtue they practice may be low enough, yet they fancy it is eminent because it is compared only with vice.

Others have no such experience as this at all—have never known the misery of great sin; have practiced virtue from their earliest years; never been remiss in any very important duty. Or in the case of a great sinner the advance to great virtue may be so gradual that it would be impossible to recognize any sudden change in the whole course; though a change there was, and necessarily instantaneous.

In order to experience great spiritual happiness it is not necessary to have experienced great spiritual misery, or that the change, the time and circumstances of the change should be particularly impressed upon the mind. A man can be a great saint just as well without first being a great sinner. It is not necessary a man should be a criminal so that he can be sensible of a great change.

It is probable the characters of professional Christians are no worse than the characters of persons not Christians. Christian congregations are not made up entirely or chiefly of reformed criminals. They have not lived grossly evil lives. It is more likely they have lived and are living the lives of common respectable worldliness, with indifferent minds and indevout hearts. When the time comes that they are converted, and it is from this class that most conversions are made, there will be no such sensible change that would necessarily throw them into ecstasy, though a great change will take place, and it will be instantaneous.

Any one can read for himself what kind of life the Scriptures demand of a Christian, outside of which no man shall see the Lord: except ye be converted, be born again, be a new creature, crucify the flesh, united with the life of God. This is not the change from the immoral to the moral, which is so perceptible and so gratifying; but the change to the religious, of which sensible consolation is no necessary part whatever.

Happiness results from any change for the better, but it is the happiness of degree and comparison, which is demonstrated every day by enthusiasts pretending to the height of perfection and happiness who are ignorant of the nature and attributes of God. Their religion is based on the new experience of decency, and they fancy it is divine.

Their happiness could not be shared by any one who has not experienced the misery of vice. The man of respectable life and refined tastes could not be affected by it at all, though he acknowledges the good there is in it and supports it accordingly, never supposing there is anything supernatural about it.

His miserable imitation is not a new life; it is only an improvement of the old. It is neither uniform nor stable; it is a sudden start and a phase of the mind. It is the product of external circumstances. It is not an inward, free, self-moving principle. And the happiness that results from it is necessarily as transient as the causes that have produced it.

The divine life is one thing, and the natural life, no matter how reformed and refined and moral and religious, is quite another thing. The life of God in the soul of the man who is united to Jesus Christ is an unchanging life of devotion and prayer; of conscientious action and constant watchfulness; an eagerness for divine grace to strengthen the heart and for divine knowledge to enlighten the mind; a life that knows truth and loves it, that knows duty and performs it; a character that scorns the vanity and deceit of a wicked world and uses the natural provisions of enjoyment for his comfort; that is temperate and contented and gentle and good, and is calmly looking to the eternity when that which is in part shall be done away and that which is perfect is come.

The Church Catechism.*

It is profoundly observed by a recent writer in regard to obedience that "the secular life of our twentieth century opens with this virtue held in no high esteem. The duty of the individual to determine his own conduct and profit or suffer by the consequences seems, on the contrary, to be one of our best rooted, contemporary, Protestant, social ideals." The accuracy of this observation is only too apparent; it is amply witnessed by the frequency with which the consequences are suffering. And undoubtedly none realize its truth more keenly than those to whom has been given the care of teaching and guiding souls. They find not only an unwillingness to obey, resulting in disobedience, which is the attitude of a rebellious child toward a father it really loves. They find also something lying behind that unwillingness, and this is the lack of sense of any obligation whatever to obey. This is the attitude of a child who should suddenly find himself receiving commands from a stepfather whom he disliked: he would simply deny any obligation of receiving such commands. This lack of sense of obligation is productive of great harm to souls and of disaster to the church. Its practical side is the assumption that God does not lay any definite obligations upon His people; that the Church of Jesus Christ has no particular truth to teach more than any system of ethical thought, and that the clergy of the church are to be pitied as obsessed by effete superstitions if they ever say to their people "you must." Pernicious as such an attitude is, it is alarmingly prevalent. A mighty effort is needed to throw it off before it settles permanently upon Christian character, deadening conscience, enfeebling faith, paralyzing will. The sense of obligation requires stimulating and strengthening so that it will be in every character a power which cannot be disregarded.

It is this necessity of a sense of obligation which is the keynote of Canon Newbolt's last book, and he presents the Church Catechism as the means of inculcating such a sense, not merely for the child, but for adult Christians as well. "Amidst structural services, offices and Liturgy," it stands in the Prayer Book as the code of obligation for every Christian. Its whole tone is one of certainty and authority: it admits no phrase doubtful of the value of its contents; it is solid and brief, furnishing the ground for right faith and true practice, and it presupposes at every instant the inseparability of right faith and right life. It presents three general obligations—renunciation, faith and duty. Each is emphasized and demands attention. Canon Newbolt has elaborated and explained these three obligations, making them alive and real. He follows the contents of the catechism itself, and draws out the wealth of the faith and moral duty it contains.

The tone of the book is almost prophetic, as of one who speaks for God in a wicked time. Evil is called evil and denounced as such. Obligations toward God and toward man are stated fearlessly, as by one who dares proclaim to just such a generation as this, parleying with sin and calling it beauty, social problems, nature. God is "of purer eyes than to behold evil." "The atmosphere is invigorating. The keen thought tears away flimsy excuses and lets daylight in upon the self-deceptions with which we would escape our obligations. It revives that hatred of evil which the love of God once implanted and which often has been long stupefied by the sin-laden atmosphere we constantly breathe. Here is a man praying 'deliver us from evil' who is conscious to himself of not one single effort to subdue the evil which is within him; who habitually despises and neglects all the helps which God has provided against sin, and has again and again done despite to the Spirit of Grace; who says 'Our Father' with the heart of a fatalist and 'hallowed be Thy name' from a conversation that dishonors it, 'Thy Kingdom come' from a life that knows no wider horizon than the limits of business or society, 'Thy will be done' with a heart full of covetousness, 'on earth as it is in Heaven' with a complete ignorance of and indifference to the things of God" (p. 281).

Specially striking is the plea for Christian education. This has woven itself throughout the book as if the writer were unconscious how large a place in his thoughts it holds. The result of children learning evil without learning how they may renounce it is that "a generation is rising up—wilful, disobedient, selfish and irreverent . . . . tainted with all the subtler indications of alienation from God." On the other hand, if children could be taught from the beginning the Faith which makes invisible things real and could be daily instructed in religion as an essential part of their equipment, then their characters would not be maimed and deformed and the spiritual faculties would not be hopelessly atrophied. Material advantage would not work disaster in hearts unfortified by sanctity. On this topic, as throughout the book, there is that clearness of perception and vigor of treatment which catches and presents elusive phases of moral truth so as to give them their true value and bearing on life and prevent their being warped by clever handling into false and misleading conditions.

Xmas Tide.

The Feast of Our Lord's Nativity was the goal of our Advent devotions and the loving preparation of the many "fellow-labourers" of St. Clement, the quiet pressure of work well executed was a proper greeting and welcome to that Infant Saviour for Whose honour it was begun. May His peace dwell in the hearts and lives of all who "understood" and so "magnified and praised God." 330 Communions were made. The offerings amounted to $1,199.62—cash, $324.12; Sanctuary Fund (31), $694.50; endowment, $5; other, $170, while liberal provision was made for the Xmas dinners and mothers' turkey supper ($188.50) and for various guilds and the Catechisms, etc.

At the Solemn Mass "St. Cecilia" was again sung. The soloists were Mr. Harry Hotz, bass; Mr. Freemantle, tenor, and Masters Charles Snyder and John McLauchlan, trebles. The organ was played by Mr. Sears. Mr. William Stoll, Jr., again furnished the orchestra and, with special courtesy to the parish, himself acted as conductor. As yet there has been no suggestion but that all was worthy of that "mystery of godliness" which musical instruments and human voices interpreted as the priests at the altar performed the Sacred Liturgy in obedience to the Lord's command.

The customary treats for guilds, etc., were held as follows: St. Nicholas and Holy Child on Saturday, the Catechisms on Monday, St. Katharine Tuesday, turkey supper on Wednesday. Still to come in January are St. Mary's, Choir mens' and St. Vincent's. The Clergy House and Mission House were bountifully supplied and many kind and special remembrances were sent, for all of which we are grateful. God's blessing rest on all the faithful in their lives, work and devotion during the coming year and enable them to persevere in the way of peace, that their names may never be blotted out of the Book of Life.

The Christmas entertainment for the children was given Monday evening, December 28th. It consisted of tableaux representing scenes from the Nativity accompanied by readings from the Gospel and singing of carols. The tableaux were the Annunciation to the Blessed Virgin, the Annunciation to the Shepherds, the Nativity, the Visit of the Shepherds, the Visit of the Wise Men, the Presentation in the Temple, the Adoration of the Christ Child. The parts were taken by the members of the Guild of the Holy Child. Much credit and thanks are due to those whose thoughts and labor provided scenes so simple, effective and beautiful. The tableaux were repeated at the Turkey Supper Wednesday evening.

Creditable examinations were passed by the children of the Catechism before Christmas. At the fête on the Sunday in the Octave the first prizes, the silver crucifixes, were awarded to James Covert and Jessie Forrester. Second prizes, special for this time, were awarded to Edwin Sharpe and Lilian Roach.

Children's Honor Roll.

During the past year the following children have been regular at 9.15 Mass on Sundays: No absences—Katie Levers, Clara Fortune, Louise Tapper. Only one absence—Alice Fortune, Elizabeth Fortune, Jessie Forrester, Elsie Forrester, Margaret Welch, Bertie Rennerd, Harry Levers. Two absences—Bessie Haussam, Dorothy Haussam, Edith Downey, Lily Roach, Helen Rennerd. Each receives a special reward for their faithfulness.

Parish Notes.

Fifty-four persons gave $191.50 for Christmas dinners and mothers' supper.

Weekday services will be in Chapel of St. John Evangelist during the cold weather.

The new Violet Vestments were used on the Fourth Sunday in Advent for the first time.

The annual dinner for St. Vincent's Guild will be in the Clergy House on Wednesday evening, January 20th.

The Rummage Sale added $54 to the Poor Fund. Balance from Parish Tea amounted to $47.39 for same fund.

Eight Thanksgiving dinners were given and twenty-two Xmas dinners sent out; also one hundred invitations given to mothers' supper.

Generous offerings are asked on Sunday, January 17th for missions; at the early Masses for some foreign field, and at eleven o'clock for some mission work in this Diocese.

The Sung Mass at 9.15 on Sundays was resumed on first Sunday in Advent, and this will be continued until Trinity season. Mr. Sears has kindly offered to play the organ again this year.

An excellent compilation of Christmas Carols has been made and printed. They will be sung during the Holy Season at the Catechism, Children's Mass and the various Guild Offices and Festivals.

The silver Crucifix "in memory of Eleanor," given to the member of the Guild of the Holy Child who has been most faithful and regular in attendance at the 9.15 Mass on Sundays during the year, has been given to Katie Levers.

The interest and courtesy of Mr. Sellers has put the matter of the elevator for the Mission House into practical shape. Mr. Hill has decided as to requirements of the Building Department and Messrs. Morse, Williams & Co. have submitted an estimate as to the cost of new machinery and the various necessary alterations and repairs. The cost has been brought within the amount contributed. The work will be proceeded with, without delay.

Of your charity pray for the soul of Oliver Sherman Prescott, Priest, sometime Rector of this Parish (February, 1876–November, 1881), whose soul God released from the body November 17th.

The privileges we enjoy are largely due to the heroic fortitude of Father Prescott who fought and labored for the rights of Catholics while, with patience and love, he strove to convince God's children as to the true Faith, discipline and worship of the Church.

Pity his soul, O merciful Jesus.

A month's mind was said on Thursday, December 17th.

A New Year.

At this time, when another year is opening for us a new volume of life that is to be, we can hardly fail to be touched by the feeling so natural and so joyous that something is coming. Between that which is coming and that which is gone there is all the difference there can be. The possibilities of the future are the high relief of the dead level of the past. Nature is wise and kind when she makes good and not evil prominent in the picture of the future. It is philosophical to magnify the virtues and pass over the vices of one we are compelled to live with.

Every beginning is a time of hope, and the hope that springs from what is going to happen is a compensation for all that the past has left unfulfilled. When that which is now going to happen shall have come and gone and left its trail of disappointment still the hope that once was has left its memory, and that memory will be too dear to regret what it has cost. We too often fail to find the satisfaction we hope for in many a bright beginning, but the time comes again that gives hope to the hopeless, and the jaded worldling turns over a new leaf.

The roll of years is a common enough thing and lightly thought of by many; but it will bring us on the stage where we shall play out the comedies and tragedies of life before high heaven and give us the finishing touch that makes us just what we shall be forever. Many a storm and many a calm day is coming. What joy, what grief, what pity touch the spirits that hover round us when they see what we might gain, what we shall lose, what we might avoid, what we shall run into. Children gathered on their playground will be scattered in far-distant fields of toil, doing the same work with the same success and the same failure that men are doing to-day. The little girl who puts away her doll to-night will be smiling over a living creature of her own blood, or her eyes drooping in grief when the bright career is cut down in bloom. On the same spot where strong men are kneeling to receive the bread of life their cold hands will be folded under the coffin lid; and the font where the water fell from the baby's forehead will be swept by her bridal train.

Whatever uncertainty lies ahead one thing is certain—no revolving years will ever present to any living being the same scene the second time. You can no more meet again the same friend from whom you part than you can turn the world back. Will the old man come back to the home of his childhood and find it the same—nothing gone that has taken a part of his heart's affection with it, nothing new to which there is no attachment—the same chairs around the same table, the same china—the same lights and shadows that he watched on the walls before he fell asleep in his crib? He meets a spectacle half familiar, half strange, enough to fascinate, enough to sadden. These are the things the future works out for all, and sometimes it presses a great deal into a narrow space.

The future may take us back over a part of the road we have traveled before. Will you ever go again to the same place, land at the same spot, on just such a day, at the same hour and find the same friend there to meet you—the same form, the same smile, the same words, the same voice, the same joy?

You will not.

The place will not change. The fields of green and yellow will slant along the valley exactly as they did, and the folds of morning cloud will drape the mountain peaks as gracefully as on that other day. The afternoon sun will fleck the narrow road through the same forest trees, and shadows a mile long from perpendicular rock will rest where you have seen them before. The carriage wheels will trundle over the same stones and track, the same sand. Everything has rested in a stillness as profound as the slumber of the dead lying there in their long forgotten graves covered by the heavy copse. It is all the same and all different—as different as the cold and hard and silent ice to-night is different from the limpid water splashing on the beach in the dusky summer evening when we pulled the boat ashore the last time and bade farewell to the day we knew we should never see again.

The past is the history of life; the future is the poetry. The past is what has been, but seldom what should have been; the future is to be what should be. It is the great possibilities that lie before us that keep the fire of hope burning, and hope is a gift of nature as well as of grace. We live more in imagination than we think. Whether every man is a philosopher or not every man is a poet. It may be the dust and sweat of life have dimmed his eye, but still he sees the future as he saw it in days long gone. The view is vastly changed now from that first day when with bright and eager eyes we looked on the prospects of life then lying before us.

But the truth of the matter is—and the knowledge is painful—we ourselves are changed. We do not like to admit it. We like to be considered the same as we used to be. We resent being reckoned among the things of the past. And so we should; decay is appalling to nature and to religion as well, for we are made for life—unending, unchanging life. There is something about us still that is divine, and to that we will ever cling.

Parish Notes.

The new doors at north end of corridor are in place.

The Choirmen, with Chaplain and Choirmaster, had their Christmas treat on January 14th.

The Little Catechism sent the usual Christmas box to St. Mary's Home, Baltimore, and the Catechism sent $10.

F. Page, Sup. S. S. J. E., is in this country on a short visit and hopes to preach at St. Clement's Church on Sunday morning, February 7th.

Through the courtesy of certain persons such portion of elevator money as is not required may be used for other repairs of the Mission House.

Word has been received of the safe arrival at St. Saviour's Associate Mission, Wuchang, China, of the Vestments in time for use on Christmas Day.

Candles will be blessed on Candlemas Day in accordance with the ancient use. Persons may leave them beforehand, parcels marked, and obtain them later.

A thorough examination of the roofs of the buildings has been made, and extensive repairs found necessary to put them in proper condition. $422.40 is the estimated cost.

We are indebted to the courtesy of Mrs. Willson for a copy of the Episcopal Recorder, 23d April, 1864, which contains an account of the consecration of St. Clement's Church.

The corporation has accepted as trustees a share of R. R. stock, the income of which is to be used for a Paschal Candle each year in memory of (Mrs.) Anna Sophia Brown.

At the request of the Secretary of General Board of Missions, Rev. F. W. Merrill will preach in the Church January 31st, 8 P. M., on behalf of the Oneida Indians in Diocese of Fond du Lac.

The Sixty-fourth Annual Report of Bishop White Library Association shows income of $1,322.20, thirty-seven libraries distributed at cost of $1,454.29. Twelve members of the Parish gave $29 and two life memberships. Mrs. Wm. Halsey Wood represents the Parish.

The annual dinner of the Guild of St. Vincent was a very happy occasion and seemed to show a very satisfactory spirit. Members of the Guild of St. Mary assisted as in years past. The Corporate Communion was on Sunday, January 24th, and the annual meeting for elections will be February 3d.

The appeal in the case of the new building was argued before the Supreme Court on January 4th and 5th. The first motion was to dismiss because the appeal was not made within six months. Decision was reserved and the case was heard on its merits. The Church was represented by Henry Wolf Bikle, Esq., John Douglass Brown, Esq., Henry Flanders, Esq. Mr. Brown made the argument.

Fortified by the last Sacraments, the soul of Annie Munroe was released from the body on the morning of January 20th. These many years she had faithfully and quietly fulfilled her loving labors assisting in the care of the Altar vessels and vestments, her spiritual life furnishing the motive. The Mass was said on Friday, 22d, and the body laid away at St. James the Less. May the angels conduct her soul to the ever pleasant land of Paradise.

The Ciborium.

Designed and executed by Messrs. Barkentin & Krall, of London, it is an exquisite specimen of the silversmith's art. The proportions (12 inches high with a base 6½ inches diameter) afford an opportunity for the proper treatment of the Norman lines and detail of the ornament. This is highly decorated with pierced engraved filagree work with conventional foliage, the ground of hammered silver, the figures repoussée in very bold relief. On the pentagonal base are five medalions: Crucifix with Our Lady and St. John, St. Peter, St. John Baptist, St. Michael, St. Anna. The stem is a beautiful combination of twisted, rounded and fluted columns divided by a knop with five faces, containing the Good Shepherd, Agnus, Fishes, Pelican, Tree of Life. On the lower part of bowl are five medalions: St. Clement's Vision, St. Clement, St. Vincent, St. Katharine, St. Agnes. The cover is surmounted by the starred crown, the orb and double cross. The inscription on the under side of the base is: A. M. D. G. In honour of Saint Clement. In loving memory of John Douglass Brown, xix April, MCMII; Anna Sophia, his wife, xxi January, MDCCCLXXXVII. Pity Good JESV.

It was offered, blessed and used for the first time at a Requiem Mass in the Crypt Chapel on Thursday, January 7th. The use is intended only for festivals. A leather tooled case is provided. As property of the Church it was admitted free of duty.

Lent.

There is not a word in Holy Scripture about Lent. Neither Moses nor the prophets, nor our Saviour nor his Apostles commanded the people to observe it. No one who lived from the beginning to the end of Revelation practiced it to our knowledge. Probably hundreds of years of Christian life passed away before it was instituted. It would be difficult, or, perhaps, impossible, to say when it was instituted. Probably no one could give any satisfactory explanation of its origin. Moses fasted forty days and our Saviour fasted forty days, and St. Paul says of himself that he fasted often without mentioning any length of time or explaining anything more particularly about it. One explanation of its origin is given by one person and a different explanation by another. Some observe it in one way, others in a different way. The period at one time may have been forty hours, a commemoration of the time between the Crucifixion and the Resurrection. That seems to have been observed by a strict fast, but both the time and the manner changed widely. When we look for divine command or apostolic authority or primitive custom for the observance of Lent we look in vain.

It is all quite different with the festival of Sunday. It dates its origin from the foundation of the world. It was re-established by the law of the Ten Commandments, and no one has disputed its authority. The manner in which it was to be observed is as explicit as its institution. There are not two opinions about one day in seven being kept holy, and not two opinions how it should be kept or how it always has been kept by Jews and Christians.

Yet the observance of Lent is as general as the observance of Sunday. Beyond the fold of faithful and obedient Christians the Lenten injunctions may not be much noticed, but we venture to say with some confidence they are obeyed as much as coming to the Holy Communion on Sundays. Perhaps the general observance of Lent is only the deference paid to Christian custom and consists in nothing but respectable worldliness, but the same general observance of Sunday can be no more and may be less since some of the respect may be paid to the law of the land. Wherever there is no Eucharist offered to God on Sunday no possible observance of the day could be more Christian than the general observance of Lent is.

Furthermore, Sunday is a festival of rest and refreshment, but Lent is a season of punishment. One is a day that everybody is anxious to enjoy, the other is just what everybody naturally shuns. It is a remarkable thing that the pleasure-loving should be willing to forego for six weeks what they seek most of all the rest of the year, or that the poor should be willing to endure hardship whose lives are so hard already. Perhaps at no time in the history of Christianity has Lent been more widely noticed than at present. Its spontaneous recognition is equal to that of the Lord's Day and on which we make an observation or two.

The forty days of Lent and all that belongs to it is the direct work of the Christian Church. Its influence has been as direct as that of miracles. It is altogether impossible that any such effect could have been produced by natural means. No power in the world could do it any more than human power can work miracles. When the Church of God commands her people to keep the Lenten fast she speaks with the voice of God. She demonstrates her power to teach by performing what she undertakes. If people will not hear her now they would not hear her if she raised the dead to confirm her claim.

It demonstrates that Christianity produces holiness. Her work is not taken up with outward acts. No matter how many poor are fed and clothed, how many school houses or alms houses or hospitals are maintained, unless these noble works spring from a right spirit, they are vanity. Nothing but a supernatural intention can merit a supernatural reward. The works of a Christian man are not a series of uncertain, accidental, vague, superficial efforts, but the natural and uniform production of a converted, devout and holy soul where the body and the mind and the will and affections are subjected to a discipline for obtaining the grace of God.

The discipline of Lent is so entirely unworldly that it demonstrates its divinity, and will and has taken hold of people as Christian religion took hold of people from the first. It was quite impossible for anyone to come in contact with the Apostles and martyrs without being convinced they were not ordinary men, and unless the world is convinced to-day that they who profess to succeed the Apostles are not ordinary men it will be slightly influenced by them. We have no doubt whatever that a man who is possessed of the spirit of God will do more to convert the world and spread the religion of Christ than one who should have the power to work miracles. And the possession of this supernatural power the Church has displayed. She has done her work by the contagion of goodness more than the force of argument.

If a man could do all miracles and prove to a demonstration all truths beyond possibility of gainsaying and have not the love of God, and that might be possible, it would avail nothing. Christianity is the union of the human with the divine. Until that union is consummated there is no Christianity and no salvation. When it is broken there can be none. If God Himself is not in union with His Church, if she is not divine and supernatural, she has no business in the world and nobody will be benefited by her.

Children and Their Prayers.

Children could be taught to say their prayers if all those who have charge of them would do their part in the teaching. Because of failure in just this particular a large number of children never learn. Then when they are grown men and women they are altogether irreligious for the simple reason that they have never been taught to be anything else. The time to begin this lesson is when the child begins to talk. If it knows enough to talk to its parents it knows enough to talk to God. And so the parents are the first ones responsible for the child's religious training. Their responsibility lasts as long as life lasts, for a child is never too old to be asked by the mother whether or not he says his prayers.

The first thing to be taught is that it is the right thing to pray; that not to pray would be a thing so wrong as never to be thought of. A child's conscience should be thoroughly instructed on this point at the earliest possible moment.

The second point is when to pray, and here for the sake of brevity there will be considered only morning and evening prayer, although, as everyone should know, this is only the beginning. Most children are taught to say some kind of prayer at night, but most children are not taught to pray at all in the morning. They are taught to kiss father when he leaves the house, but not to show any sign of love toward their Heavenly Father. Many children get to be fifteen or nineteen years old before they have ever heard of such a thing as saying one's prayers in the morning, and after that they are more than liable to consider it unnecessary when they do hear of it.

The third point to be taught is what prayers to say. This looks difficult, but the difficulty vanishes before every real determination to find out. There are many books of devotion and there are the clergy who are always ready to advise and help. There is a fairly well defined framework on which a soul's devotion to God is built. A child uses the framework with simple words. Grown children use the same framework with more expanded expressions. And an ordinary child of thirteen or fourteen can learn prayers which will be perfectly adequate as a basis for the prayer of the whole life. The only real difficulty about it all is the making up the mind to begin.

The fourth point to be observed is this, that parents should see to it that their children do say their prayers. This is the long and tedious part of the training. Children, as a rule, need constant looking after in other matters. The average healthy boy has to be told to wash his hands several times a day for several years before he really gets the habit of doing it. Almighty God expects an equal diligence in teaching children to pray, and it is fairly reasonable to suppose that this will enter into His judgment on parents. Of course it will sometimes be a bother always to get the boy or girl up in the morning in time for their prayers, always to be sure they say them at night. But it will be considerably worse to admit to God hereafter that it was too much trouble to teach the children to pray. They may object just as they object to having clean hands, but the loving mother will pay no attention to such objections. She will require of her children that they show proper respect to God just as she requires them to show it to her.

As the child grows the parents may reasonably expect some help from others, the godparents, teachers and especially the clergy. But this help does not take away the original responsibility. All must work together if the child is to be thoroughly taught to be religious. If, when a priest first comes in contact with a child, he finds no knowledge of prayer he has a tremendous handicap to overcome before he can teach the child much else. Satan has had his hands on the child. Again, the priest may teach the boy his prayers, but he cannot be at hand every night and morning to insure their being said. And it is priest and parent together who can find out with what sc[ar]e of prayers the child is struggling, and t[o] teach and guide him to better and [m]ore worthy devotion.

PARISH NOTES.

All services are held in the Church.

Palms will be blessed, as usual, at 6.30 A. M. on Palm Sunday and Procession at 11.

Easter Communion cards should be filled out and sent in as early as possible in Holy Week.

The discipline of Ashes was observed on Ash Wednesday, and a number of persons made the parochial retreat.

The books of the Accounting Warden close on March 24. It is important that all pew rents and "pledges" be paid before that time.

Donations for Altar flowers and subscriptions may be put in marked box in corridor after Mid-Lent Sunday, or sent to the Misses Arnold.

Easter cards, carefully selected and of Christian significance, may be obtained at the Mission House. Application should be made before Palm Sunday.

C. B. S. Vespers will be said on March 6th instead of Holy Cross Guild Office, which will be transferred to Palm Sunday, March 27th.

F. Sargent gave the retreat for the Outer Sisters of All Saints the first week in Lent, and the days retreat at the Mission House on Second Sunday in Lent.

"The Holy Family," by Sister Catharine Ruth, of All Saints, has been purchased by a friend of the parish and presented to the Church. It will be put in place as soon as delivered.

It was with no ordinary pleasure that we welcomed the Superior General of Society of St. John Evangelist, who preached on Sunday morning, February 7th. It is much to be hoped that the sea voyage may have accomplished all that was needful.

Rev. W. F. Merrill made an address on behalf of the Mission to Oneida Indians, Diocese of Fond du Lac, on Sunday evening, January 31st. He gave a very interesting account of their devotion, self-denial. The offerings for that purpose were $26.00.

The Report of All Saints' Home for Children, Baltimore, has been received. The Home warms, clothes and feeds 24 children and trains them in household work, needle work, as well as the care of their clothes, mending and keeping them in order. It deserves a more generous support from Philadelphia friends than about $100 from all sources here.

The Sixty-ninth Annual Report of the Female Protestant Episcopal Prayer Book Society has been received: 1243 Prayer Books and 1158 Hymnals distributed; Annual Subscriptions from 27 parishes amount to $546.88; thirty-two persons in St. Clement's gave $62, the largest sum from any parish. Mrs. G. E. Fryer will be glad to receive contributions from new as well as old subscribers.

During the month the Vessel for Holy Water has arrived and been admitted free of duty. It is of silver, made in Japan, under the direction of Rev. C. F. Sweet, and a gift to the parish from one of the former clergy, Rev. W. C. Clapp. The inscription is. "Glory be to the Father—and, in loving memory of Charlotte, St. Clement's, 28 January, 1898; Shanghai, 15 February, 1902, R. I. P., St. Clement's, Philadelphia, 1903."

The offerings at all the Masses on Quinquagesima were for relief work in Baltimore ($230.72). Several donations came in after Sunday and are included. The money was sent to the Rev. Rector of Mount Calvary Church, to be distributed by him and by the All Saints Sisters. It was a great joy to them to have this, with other monies from Philadelphia and New York, and they desire to express their grateful thanks to all who gave so generously.

The O. H. C. hope to occupy the new Monastery, West Park-on-the-Hudson, May 31st. As is usual in a religious house, the various rooms will be denoted by the name of some special Saint, and it has been decided to select the Patron Saints of certain parishes which have shown interest in the work of the Order for some of the rooms, among others St. Clement. Gifts of money for the furnishings of this room are asked, and will be forwarded to the Bursar.

The election of the Rev. R. H. Nelson, as Bishop Coadjutor of the Diocese of Albany seems to meet with general approval. Bishop Doane and the clergy have most cordially urged his acceptance. It is a satisfaction that the essentially Catholic tone and spirit of this Diocese is thus provided for, while the work in rural districts so unhappily languishing, on account of the vast general interests of the Church for which Bishop Doane has been responsible, as well as his increasing infirmities, will be pursued with vigor and attention.

PAROCHIAL PRIVILEGES.

Lady Day (March 25th) is the beginning of a new financial year. Envelopes will be ready for all who have made use of this method during the past year, as well as for any others who may desire them for future use. It is a great satisfaction that the "pledges" that this system covers, should be so faithfully kept, because it means a reliable source of income to meet parish expenses, but there are many more people who should do their duty regularly, and who could arrange if they realized their responsibility and determined to meet it. During the past year we have been able to respond to many more appeals for aid outside the parish than in the past, but it is very important that we should not lose sight of the special "witness" that God has given us to fulfil, to maintain the ideal of worship, the power of the Sacramental life in the world as well as in the dedicated life. No amount of secular activity can take the place of this. We beg that all may lay to heart their privileges and carry them out in an honest, honorable and self-denying manner.

OBEDIENCE.

It comes to pass that some ideas long prevailing have produced habits of mind and conduct that have become current. One man acts agreeably to others about him, and if he esteem them he makes no further inquiries into their or his own actions. The soundness of that which is accepted without question, that nobody disputes, appears self-evident.

Conduct, however, may rest not on custom; but on a conviction independent of custom. We may do an act because it is the fashion, and not do it when the fashion changes; or we may do it because we are acting from a substantial conviction that the thing is right quite independent of general opinion or custom. Two men may practise the same virtue, each acting from totally different motives. It is evident the virtue has no security beyond the foundation on which it rests.

A Christian virtue may be instilled by an unchristian teacher because it is commendable. His reason for teaching OBEDIENCE is entirely unknown to Christianity as a reason and has nothing whatever to do with implanting the virtue of obedience.

If the teacher be a Christian, his pupil will be taught to submit himself in all things to his parents, the civil authority, and his spiritual masters; because these are the representatives of God. His parents may not be great or virtuous or even possessed of over-much sense; yet he is to obey them until a sufficient reason arise for disobeying them. If the reason for obeying them is that he is thereby obeying God, it is evident nothing but obedience to a higher law of God can justify disobedience. That higher law must be a law of the temporal or spiritual authority. In the same way he obeys the civil authority. It is the divine constitution within which he is to order his life so as not to transgress its limitations; knowing whose minister he is obeying and duly considering whose authority he hath.

So let him obey those set over him in the Lord, from whom he is to accept the faith and practice the piety and worship they direct. That faith and that worship may be clean wrong—wrong as his parents; nevertheless let him obey without questioning or rebelling against them until he is forbidden by a superior minister of God. This is the virtue that the wise and good will practise and that a child can understand.

Anti-Christian teaching is not like this; it is just unlike it. In that system God is left out, and consequently the representatives of God are unknown. There is no external reality to appeal to. We need not consider the persuasiveness of force. And all that is left is a sentiment within the person himself. Obedience is not some thing self-existing but a consequent of an emotion. If you wish a horse or a dog to obey you, win its affection by kindness. There is no more exalted appeal in the whole unchristian school. Win your child's affection by kindness; unless you can gain the love of your children you cannot expect their obedience. When you lose their love your influence and their obedience are gone.

It is most godly advice to parents, and often sorely needed, to love their children, because the Scriptures command it and forbid provoking them. It is good for all men to love their fellowmen; but there are many who do not. Yet this could hardly justify disobedience or law-breaking or sin. If a child or a man is to obey according to the dictates of love, it is not to be expected he will obey those who are unlovely—the old or feeble-minded or crabbed or poor; and this is precisely what happens every day, and obedience is no obedience at all.

Obedience rendered to God, as taught in the Catechism, is constant as the law of God, all other is capricious. The Christian acts from the highest and an unselfish motive, the other from the selfish satisfaction of doing that which is pleasing. One is practising a virtue from a rational conviction; the other is adopting a current practice.

All spiritual authority is claimed in the name of God. So is all civil authority, and all parental authority. Obedience to God and obedience to his appointed minister is one and the same thing. But obedience to God is the most natural instinct of humanity. It would be impossible to have any notion of God without it. It is consequently within the comprehension of the youngest. It is a virtue reduced to the greatest simplicity.

Substituting human affection for the law of God is a pretext for setting that law aside. No woman would refuse or hesitate to promise to obey her husband if love could command obedience.

PARISH NOTES.

Donations for Easter flowers may be put in the box.

The office of Holy Cross Guild will be admitted this month.

Every Communicant should fill out and send in Easter Communion card.

The vestry election is on Easter Monday, April 4th, polls open 12 M.-2 P. M.

F. Sargent was the conductor for the retreats of Outer Sisters and Holy Cross Guild at the Mission.

Gallery will not be open on Palm Sunday or Easter day. No sermon at Evensong on Easter.

The annual statement of Penna. Co. as to Endowment Fund, gives the amounts as $10500.54 on March 18th.

The Clothes Cupboard at the Mission House is almost empty; all kinds of partly worn clothing are acceptable.

The 51st annual report of the Episcopal Hospital has been received. Roman Catholics seem to receive the greatest advantage.

A brass bell has been provided for the upper sacristy. It is rung to announce the entrance of the priest at Low Mass; it was used for the first time on St. Patrick's Day.

Revs. C. C. Quin, F. D. Ward, E. N. Webber and W. A. McClenthen have been assisting by preaching and otherwise in various parishes, and have other appointments until Easter.

Pew rents are due in advance April 1st, or may be paid in Vestry room, Monday, April 4th, between 4 and 5 P. M. Checks should be made payable to St. Clement's Church, and may be sent by mail.

It would be a great help to have some cottas made for the choir. They will be soon ready, and any one who is willing to assist in making them can obtain them from the Choir Mistress, Miss Newman.

For convenience sake, the numbers of various persons have been changed in the envelope supply for coming year. Any persons desiring a supply can obtain them by asking for them. Certain members of Guild of St. Vincent did the work of dating and numbering.

The Communicant list is revised after Easter. All who are not known to have made their Communion during the year past are not in good standing, and are so reported to the Registrar of the Diocese, their names in accordance with the Canon removed from the list of Communicants.

Through the courtesy of Rev. S. W. Fay, the Clergy were privileged to receive on St. Patrick's Day, His Eminence, Innocent, Bishop of Alaska (of the Holy Russian Church), who was recently consecrated. His Eminence was interested in the inspection of the house and church, and also of the Mission House.

CONFIRMATION.

The Bishop of the Diocese has appointed the evening of Tuesday in Whitsun Week, May 24th, for confirmation at St. Clement's. Sponsers and parents should take care that their children receive instruction in preparation for a worthy reception of the gift. Names may be given to Clergy or Sisters.

GOOD FRIDAY.

The Bishop of the Diocese writes under date of February 27th:

"I entirely approve of such relaxation of the strict fast of Good Friday as I have previously expressed to you in former years. The prevalence of sickness in the city and the condition of the weather make such relaxation this year even more fitting than usual."

The above permits some simple food to be taken in the morning with coffee or tea.

EASTER CONFESSIONS.

The hours of the Clergy during Holy Week will be as follows:

Rev. G. H. Moffett—Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday, 10.30-11, 4-5, 7-8; Good Friday, 3-5.30, 7-10 P. M.; Easter Even, 9-12.30, (S. John's Chapel) 2-5, 7-10.

Rev. C. C. Quin—Thursday, 4-5, Good Friday, 4-5, 8-9; Easter Even, 4-5, 8-10.

Rev. F. D. Ward—Thursday, 4-5, 7-8; Good Friday, 4-5; Easter Even, 3-5, 7-10.

Rev. W. A. McClenthen—Thursday, 4-5; Good Friday, 7-8; Easter Even, 4-5, 7-8.

Rev. E. N. Webber—Thursday, 7-8; Good Friday, 8-9; Easter Even, 3-4, 8-9.

It is hoped that many will take advantage of the earlier days and not put off their Confession until the last moment.

OPINION OF SUPREME COURT.

February 29th Judge Brown filed the opinion "strictly construing the restriction and not extending it by implication," the building has not been erected for the "rear end" of the lot for it is ten feet from that line, "it is not a dwelling house within the restriction. The building, as a whole, is for church or ecclesiastical purposes, and only a portion of it—the extension—is to be a residence for the clergy. The general character of the whole building is far from being a dwelling house." "Decree affirmed and appeal dismissed at cost of appellant."

This finally disposes of a matter that has extended over a period of two years, delaying, interfering and annoying us in many ways, and as we think, unnecessarily.

We have cause to be grateful to John Douglass Brown, Esq., who studied and prepared the case so thoroughly and argued it so successfully, his care and interest have been of great service in every way, and to Henry Flanders, Esq., and Henry Wolf Bikle, who were associated with him. It is only right in this connection to speak of the patience of the architect, Mr. Sellers, and of the contractor, Mr. Riggs, in the delays and alterations that marked the initial stages of this suit, we have won because we only desired to do what we had a legal right to do.

In connection with this, it seems desirable to call attention to the fund which has been started for the remodelling of the Parish Building (it amounts to $45.50). By accumulating a fund for this purpose we shall, it is hoped, be able to proceed in this matter, at any rate, when an urgency arises. It needs no special argument to convince any one as to the wisdom of preparation.

EASTER DAY.

Members of the Congregation will be admitted (for the Late Mass) through the doors of the Parish Building, up to 10.30 o'clock, when the corridor doors will be opened. Communicants of the Parish are reminded of the privilege and benefit of their Easter Communions and warned to prepare themselves that they may with proper dispositions receive the Sacred Body and Blood of the Only Saviour to their soul's health and salvation.

EASTER FIRE.

"If we are penitents, we are men in whom light is overcoming darkness every day, and light in the moral world is the grace, the joy, the beauty, the love of God. Penitence does not cloud human life, it sets whatever clouds there may be in it on fire. Penitence does not bind heavy burdens and grievous to be borne on mens shoulders, but kindles all burdens with the fire of love, and lifts them up as a holy sacrifice. Our penitence is Jesus Christ rising from the dead in the darkness of the sealed tomb, and passing out free. Our penitence is Jesus Christ risen, appearing in the heart closed for fear, with 'Peace be unto you.'

Material light kindles outward nature into delight; in the moral and spiritual worlds the torch of God, while it awakens the pain of the sorrow of love, awakens also the inseparable fervor of gratitude. The business of Easter following Passion-tide, the business of my whole life, shall be to bring the reverent and joyful remembrance of God, Who loves and gave Himself for me, and the desire to respond as perfectly as I can to that love, as far as they can go, into all the experiences of every day."—F. Congreve.

EASTER COMMUNION.

"Can any joy on earth compare with the joy of a good Easter Communion? He has dealt so tenderly with us all Lent; He has led us so gently out of darkness into light. All Lent has been one long pleading of His Holy Spirit with us, because He wished us to have the joy of union in our Easter Communion.

Christ has not only borne with us in our yieldings, and sought in our wanderings; He has shared our temptations and our conflicts, followed us even when we tried to forget Him. He found us, and He won the victory of love over our doubts and fears. Before the Cross we poured out our tale of sin, and with His Precious Blood He cleanses us.

"It is this Jesus, this Saviour, who welcomes us, and whom we welcome on Easter Day."—Praeparatio: p. 120.

BENEFITS OF THE PASSION.

"Beneath the Cross let us seek to deepen our preparation for that Easter Communion which awaits us. Death is not the end, but life in the Risen Lord.

"There must be death—'death indeed unto sin,' but out of that death is to spring life—'alive unto God through Jesus Christ our Lord.'

"As we kneel before the Cross on Good Friday, we know that we can duly receive the Precious Body and Blood at Easter, if we have been united with our Master in both aspects of the Sacrifice which on that day He offered before the Father. There must be the burnt offering, the sacrifice of the will, not in one act alone, but in every detail of the life, there must be the acceptance of the penalty of sin.

"Therein so often lies the difficulty 'I cannot face it. I know what my sins deserve, I know the penalty I ought to pay, the shame to which I ought to put myself, the reparation to God and man which I ought to make, but'—and that is the very crisis of our lives. The will is weak, we cannot make the perfect offering, we cannot give up, as yet, that which hinders and keeps us back. 'A good confession.' No, I shrink from it. A forsaking of the things, the entanglements, the affections, which are so completely a part of my life? Well, I will think of it; I will see whether in time I cannot get rid of the things of which I own I feel ashamed. For thee the Son of God became Man; for thee He lived, suffered on the cross, and gave up the ghost; for thee He rose again, that thou mightest live in newnes of life. Will you tarry? Will you ask Him to wait till you have made up your mind? Will you be content to offer to Him, Jesus of the Cross, Jesus of the Resurrection, an uncleansed soul, a halting will, an irresolute mind in your Communion on Easter Day?"—Praeparatio, pp. 105-6.

PARISH NOTES.

No Mothers' Meeting on Ascension Day.

Holy Cross Monastery is to be formally opened on May 19th.

Offerings on Ascension Day for All Saints Sea Shore Home, Sea Isle City.

Subscriptions for Easter flowers amounted to $77.05; donations in box, $16.79.

Offerings on Whitsun Day, are asked for needed repairs on the Church building.

The Diocesan Convention meets on Tuesday, May 3d, in the Church of S. Luke and the Epiphany.

415 Easter Communions made at our Altar; other of the faithful were in other places; about 450 cards.

On Tuesday evening, May 17th, the American Guild of Organists have arranged for a Special Service at S. Clements.

The Vestry at their last meeting appropriated the sum of $500 toward the Fund for remodeling the old Parish Building, which makes amount in hand $688.50.

It is earnestly asked that many will unite in the Novena that vocations to the Priesthood and Religious life may be developed. Morrow of the Ascension to Whitsun Day.

Miss Pritchett, who has for several years decorated the Paschal Candle, was unable to do so this year on account of illness. Miss Bloomfield kindly undertook the duty.

Confirmation is on May 24th (Tuesday in Whitsun Week), and First Communion on Trinity Sunday. Prayers are asked for those who are preparing for the Sacraments.

The Bishop of New Jersey writes very kindly in acknowledging report of services at Sea Isle City. "You have my hearty approval and blessing in all your efforts for the good of souls in Sea Isle."

The back building of "2026" has been torn down; S. John's Chapel, as a result, is quite light. Through the removal of the upper part of the partitions the lower Vestry has additional light. The Sexton will occupy the Cherry St. side.

The Card for Rogation Intercessions may be found in the Corridor on Sunday, May 8th. The Church will be open from 6 A. M. to 10 P. M. It is much to be desired that all the faithful will visit the Church each day, and as many as possible may attend Mass.

The upper floor of the house at Sea Isle City has been extended, making four new rooms, a bath has also been placed on the second floor. These much needed improvements will relieve the overcrowded condition, as well as enable other details to be smoothly arranged. The exterior we hope may also be painted.

Holy Week and Easter were devoutly and worthily observed; the building cleansed; Vestments, Ornaments and Sacred Vessels made meet for festal use; Altars adorned; music prepared; souls absolved in readiness to greet and receive the Risen Lord. The music of the Mass was Weber in Eb. Over $2500 given for all purposes.

VESTRY ELECTION AND MEETING.

The annual election of the Vestrymen for Saint Clement's Parish was held on Easter Monday. The following communicants were elected to serve for the ensuing year: S. McKean Bayard, Francis M. Berry, Walter A. Buchanan, Edward C. Clay, Harry Connelly, Henry Flanders, Greville E. Fryer, Romaine Keyser, G. Theodore Roberts, William H. Wells, Francis D. Wetherill, Samuel Williams.

At the stated meeting for organization, held on Tuesday, April 5th, Mr. S. McKean Bayard was re-elected Accounting Warden; Mr. Greville E. Fryer was appointed Rector's Warden; Mr. Romaine Keyser was re-elected Secretary.

Messrs. Wetherill, Clay and Keyser were elected as Finance Committee; Messrs. Flanders, Clay and Williams were elected Delegates to the Diocesan Convention.

The Secretary was directed to convey the appreciation of the Vestry to the members of the Guild of Saint Vincent for their faithful performance of their duties, and to Mr. Sears and the members of the Choir for their diligent and satisfactory services.

The annual report is as follows:

THE ASCENSION.

While they beheld, He was taken up, and a cloud received Him out of their sight." Behold Jesus Christ ascending into Heaven! As His Apostles are gathered around Him on Mount Olivet, He lifts His hands in blessing, His feet leave the ground, His sacred Body rises slowly into the air. Breathlessly they watch Him, worshiping whilst He rises higher and higher, straining their eyes to catch the last glimpse as the cloud shuts Him off from their sight. Their eyes fall to earth and see two of the myriads of angels who have accompanied His triumph into Heaven. They hear the message: "This same Jesus, which is taken up from you into Heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen Him go into Heaven." The same Body, the same glorified Humanity, the Lamb of the Passion, the Lion of the Resurrection, the Eagle of the Ascension, shall return from its Heavenly throne where now it sits in glory at the right hand of God.

It makes so clear to us the permanency of the Incarnation. When we bow our knee to the ground at the words, "And was incarnate by the Holy Ghost of the Virgin Mary and was made man," we are worshiping not only the Sacred Humanity as it once moved among men, but also that same Humanity now glorified and resident in Heaven. Eye witnesses of the Ascension have given us their testimony. By the eye of faith we, too, see the Man Christ Jesus leave this earth for Heaven. We know that He is there now; we saw Him go. The Son of God is God and Man forevermore.

PARISH NOTES.

The Sexton now occupies the house 2026 Cherry street.

The Catechism, Little Catechism and Bible Classes are discontinued.

The offerings on Whitsunday for repairs to fabric amounted to $149.33.

The sermon on Sunday mornings will be at the end of High Mass. At 9:15 there will be a low Mass and no instruction.

The 7:30 Mass on Week-days will be discontinued after June 12th and the weekly requiem will be said in the Crypt Chapel at 6:45.

The Vestry has given Mr. Sears leave of absence. He sails for England May 31st. While he is away Mr. S. Tudor Strang will take the duty.

Guild of Holy Child had a very pleasant picnic at Chamounix on Saturday afternoon, May 14th. Special trolley car left Twenty-first and Cherry streets at 1 P. M.

The day for Confirmation was changed by the Bishop Coadjutor to Wednesday, May 25th, when 11 males and 15 females received the Sacrament. First Communion was given on Trinity Sunday.

First Vespers of Corpus Christi on Wednesday, June 1st at 5:15 P. M. in S. John's Chapel; annual meeting of S. Saviour's Ward, C. B. S., in lower vestry room immediately after. Solemn Mass on Feast of Corpus Christi at 9 o'clock.

The Rogations were very faithfully observed, but not as many pledged themselves for a stated time as usual. From 6 A. M. to midnight on the three days the intercessions were kept up and many came as they were able.

The blessing of Holy Cross Monastery at West Park on July 19th was an interesting and important event. Representatives of the various religious communities, clergy interested in the Order, men and women whose thoughts and aims are Christian, were present in goodly number.

The Diocesan Convention had the merit of despatching all business in two days. The resolution as to extra Diocesan Courts and Courts of Appeal was a good one. The election of Rev. Robert Ritchie as a deputy to General Convention also manifested a Christian spirit. In our opinion the request for permission to use some other version of Holy Scripture than that of King James we cannot think wise.

Ascension Day was duly observed by faithful ones. After breakfast the choir boys literally ran for the 9 o'clock train to Laurel Springs, under Mr. Sears' care. Later the Chaplain and other Clergy joined the party. Boats and lunch were provided. The day was happily spent without accident. A tired company returned at night, satisfied with the day's outing. The offerings on Ascension Day for Seashore Home were $61.53; $2.55 has since been put in box—total, $64.08.

CATECHISM PICNIC.

The annual picnic for the children of the Catechism, their families and friends, will go this year to Almonesson Lake, N. J., on Saturday, June 11th. It is hoped to take along some music. This can be done if enough people will take an interest in selling as many tickets as possible. As usual, tickets will be given to the children belonging to the Catechisms. Others may get them from the Clergy and Sisters, at 40 cents for adults' and 20 cents for children's tickets. The picnic goes by ferry from the Chestnut street wharf at 9:30, to Camden, where special cars will be in waiting to carry the party to the lake. The trip from Camden takes about an hour. Returning, cars leave the lake at 6 P. M. The tickets are good only on the special cars.

AMERICAN GUILD OF ORGANISTS.

The ninth public service in Philadelphia on Tuesday, May 17th. Solemn Vespers were sung. The music was: Magnificat in B♭, Smart; Anthem, "Give ear unto my prayer," Arcadelt; Offertorium, "Worthy is the Lamb," Handel; Te Deum in C, Warwick Jordan; Organ prelude, "Overture in C Major," Hollins, by Mr. Fred Maxson; Voluntary, "Pastorale in G Major," Merkel, by Mr. William C. Carl; Postlude, Toccata and Fugue in F Major, Bach, by Mr. Minton Pyne. The middle alley was reserved for members. The Church was well filled. The collection was for the Guild, but only amounted to $48.80 (of which 128 pennies and 287 nickels).

SEA ISLE CITY.

The enlargement of the house with other necessary improvements and repairs are finished, and all will be in readiness to welcome the first party on June 27th. We hope that kind friends of former years will continue their interest and send generous donations. The proceeds of the sale at Mrs. Keyes' house—$130—was a pleasant surprise. A good deal of money is needed for the repairs and for carrying on the work during the summer. Already applications have been handed in to fill the house during the whole season, but experience shows that changes occur.

It is expected that services will be maintained as in previous years, including the daily Mass. Last year Mass was said in the temporary Chapel on 69 days and 192 Communions were made, report of all services being sent to the Bishop of New Jersey.

Offerings on Ascension Day were $161.53; $55 also in three subscriptions coming in at that time.

Members of S. Mary's Guild are arranging for a strawberry festival on Thursday evening, June 2d, and our Sea Isle friends promise even a more substantial evidence of their interest in the shape of the annual sale, in August, for the benefit of the Home.

Several persons have enquired as to board at Sea Isle City during the summer, and this is particularly encouraging, as Spiritual privileges are provided and our end of the beach is very quiet and desirable. We are not without hope that comfortable provision may be arranged for Christian people whenever there is sufficient demand.

The report just issued says "beds, washstands, tablecloths, sheets, towels, tea towels, porch chairs and articles for the Fair we hope to have this summer" are needed. Other things will be useful; groceries and provisions of all kinds are valuable. Seventy individuals gave for support, 41 firms gave donations in kind, both smaller than in former years.

The Treasurer will be glad to receive subscriptions and donations.

THE "MISSION" VESTMENTS

Rev. R. E. Wood writes from Wuchang, China: "I must send another line of thanks to you and the Guild of S. Clement's Church for sending those beautiful vestments. They were used on Christmas and Easter and were a great addition to the beauty and solemnity of the Mass on those days. * * * I wish you and the Guild could have looked in at S. Saviour's on Easter morning at 7 o'clock and seen the Chinese Priest vested for the High Mass. We had a procession around the Church with Cross and lights. The altar was lovely, with its flowers and candles and a Paschal candlestick of native workmanship, made the whole service very much like an Easter service at home. At S. Mark's (the new Church) the service was fine, too. Just before the Mass began a penitent who had been under public penance for about two years for taking opium, knelt before the altar and made a public confession and was restored to the ranks of the faithful again. * * * in that he had been publicly suspended from the Holy Communion, he was required to give public evidence of his contrition before he could be permitted to receive the Blessed Sacrament. The Discipline of the Church in China is modeled on the basis of the primitive Church. Public Penance for notorious sins is required, and this ends in public confession before the Church, and the prayers of the faithful are asked for the penitent. It is very solemn and impressive, and helps to impress the high standard of the Catholic Church upon the infant converts. * * * Your lovely gifts are a great encouragement and help. God bless all the givers."

PARISH NOTES.

It is intended to cover the partitioned space, outside the Crypt Chapel, with a plain brown linoleum.

Communicants are not expected at 9.15 on Sunday or 9.30 on weekdays, unless notice has been previously given to the celebrant.

The attendance of men at the week-day masses has increased in a very encouraging manner; it is the very greatest encouragement.

The Rev. F. D. Ward will be away during July. The Rev. W. A. McClenthen has been away during latter part of June, but returns for July.

Flowers for the Altar on Sundays are asked during the summer. They should be sent to the Church by four o'clock on Saturday afternoon.

The closing Fete of the Catechisms was held on Trinity Sunday, the examinations having taken place on Whitsunday. Prizes were awarded.

It is a great disappointment, that the work on the Sanctuary cannot be begun this year, certain necessary drawings have not been completed.

A goodly number of persons have, with kind forethought, sent money for their envelopes before they left for their summer places; others forward theirs from time to time. This enables the various payments to be made promptly. Pew rents have, for the most part, also been paid.

Members of the congregation are reminded of their Christian duty during the Summer, they should not let anything of an ordinary character, such as their own convenience or comfort, interfere with the hearing of the Mass on Sundays, for God's glory, their own soul's health and welfare. The influence they may have on the lives of others, make this very important.

First Vespers were sung on Eve of Corpus Christi and the annual meeting of S. Saviour's Ward was held immediately afterward. The Treasurer presented his annual report, which has been already printed in May Magazine. There are 82 members. Mr. Mowry was re-elected. Solemn Mass was sung at nine o'clock on Corpus Christi.

Changes in the services are as follows: During July and August the 7.30 Mass on weekdays and the 8 o'clock on Sundays are discontinued; the night service on Sunday is omitted and Evensong will be said at 5 o'clock; the Monday requiem will be said in the Crypt at 6.40 A. M.; the hours for confessions may be learned from the notices for each week.

The annual picnic on Saturday, June 11th, had a bright and pleasant day, much to the joy of the 150 who took advantage of it. Almonesson Park, beyond Woodbury, N. J., was the place selected: Ferry to Kaighn's Point, then by special trolleys to the park. A harp and violin gave an added pleasure to some in the afternoon, while boats and bathing, with other simple pleasures, filled the day. Soon after six o'clock the party started on the return trip, with the memories of a happy day.

Murmuring and complaint is indulged in by some people, because they think they are neglected by the clergy; almost always, they expect each one of the clergy to visit them —this is absolutely unreasonable, under ordinary circumstances, each Priest looks after his own guilds and penitents and it may be, some others. It may be thought pleasant for some to have all the clergy come to see them, but it is not possible, and would not be right, in fact some one else would be deprived of their share. It is rarely possible for all the clergy to be present on any occasion, and it is asked that this be kept in mind, and also that people be content with the care of that one of the clergy who is particularly responsible for them.

The will of Miss Annie Munroe provides that upon the death of her sister, that "The principal of the remaining half of my said residuary estate exclusive of premises, 1812 Wallace street, I give, devise and bequeath to the Penna. Co., etc. * * * in trust for St. Clement's Church Endowment Fund, etc. * * * free and discharged of all taxes."

The will of Miss Mary Miles provides that after sale of certain property, that the executor pay the sum of $5000 to St. Clement's Church, for Endowment Fund. To the Corporation of All Saints' Sisters of the Poor, attached to St. Clement's Church, $10,000, to be applied to the purchase of a suitable piece of ground at Sea Isle City, N. J., and the erection of a building suitable for a Home or Sea Shore House in connection with St. Clement's Church, Philadelphia, to be named St. Clement's Sea Shore Home, and to be under the charge of All Saints Sisters of the Poor. "I would like the building suitable for a winter as well as a summer Home, this Home as a memorial of my sister, Elizabeth Miles. I also give to the said Sisterhood $2500 to purchase furniture, buildings and kitchen utensils for the use of the Sea Shore Home, also $2500 as an Endowment Fund for the said House. Also $2000 to St. Clement's Church for Mission purposes.

By another will just executed the parish will receive $5000 for Endowment, the interest of which becomes immediately available, the first half-yearly payment is hereby acknowledged.

SEA ISLE CITY.

The Strawberry Festival, under the charge of St. Mary's Guild, on June 2d, did not bring together as many people as we hoped.

The enlargement of the house and exterior painting have been completed, the one adds to its convenience in many ways, and the other truly makes it more attractive within. It has all been thoroughly cleaned and made ready to receive the first party on June 27th. The addition was blessed on June 22 (S. Alban's Day. The Pennsylvania Railroad have courteously arranged for transportation at reduced rates in a special car, from Camden, stopping at Ludlam street, directly back of the house. Mass will be said each morning in San Clemente, during July and August. On Sundays, Evensong with an address in the afternoon. There will be no late morning service. A small cottage has been acquired, about two squares below the house, which will be used for the Priest who may be taking duty.

The cottage contains reception room, dining room, kitchen and pantry. Underneath half is cemented, with a room partitioned off, the rest has wash tubs; the front half has a lattice screen.

The upper floor contains four sleeping rooms and a bath room, with an unfinished attic above. There is abundance of closet room, a coal range, with boiler. The floor space throughout the house has been finished with shellac. A porch is on the front and north side of the house. In the exterior the shingles of roof forms a sufficient contrast to the dark green color of the rest of the house. Water and sewer connection has been made.

The legacies from Miss Miles' estate may not be available for some time, meanwhile there will be opportunity to decide what is best adapted for the purpose and to prepare plans. Subscriptions and donations for the expenses during the coming summer are greatly needed and will be gladly received. Kindly send to Sister in charge, Lambert and Cherry streets or to the Treasurer, John Douglass Brown, Esq., 426, Drexel Building. The enlargement of house, with other necessary repairs and painting, have cost about $750. A happy season is, we trust, before us. Joy for those who are to receive the change of air and scene, with rest from ordinary duties in case of some, as well as satisfaction for those who provide the means and those who so gladly give of their time, energy and service in carrying out the objects.

Fancy articles for the bazaar to be held at Sea Isle in August are urgently asked for and will be of great assistance. It is much to be desired that many people should, in view of the spiritual privileges they may have at Sea Isle, consider its advantages as a place for summer relaxation and change.

Some members of the Guild of St. Vincent expect to spend the Fourth at Sea Isle. The Rev. C. C. Quin, the chaplain, Mr. J. C. Goodwin, Jr., the warden, will arrange the various details and look after their welfare and pleasure. They will go down Saturday, July 2d and return (probably) the evening of Monday. Cots will be put up in the new cottage for them to sleep on, and meals provided. Perhaps this, which is a kind of an experiment, will lead to something of the nature of a yearly custom.

THE VISITATION, B. V. M.
(July 11.)

"A young maiden, poorly clad and footsore, comes down the street of a small country town, and, stopping at a low door, asks if Elizabeth is at home. She is met by a woman advanced in years, whom she greets as her cousin, and with whom she has come to spend the next three months. These are the facts and they are such as may occur any day in common life. The picture of two women, a young girl and a gray haired wife, meeting after long absence, happy in another's company, is not one, it might be thought, upon which we need linger long. Yet no meeting of crowned heads, upon whom the destiny of nations depends, has ever been so worthy of a place in the memory of men. For, of these two poor country women, one was the Mother of the Saviour of the world and the other the Mother of the Forerunner. The Holy Ghost enabled both to see in an instant the greatness of the occasion. In the slender ill-clad figure before her Elizabeth discerned the Mother of her Lord. Mary's answer was a Song, which, for much more than a thousand years, has been sung by the whole Church as a Daily Memorial of the Incarnation. But the Magnificat is not only merely the noblest of Church songs. It is a revelation of the heart of Mary, of the beauty of holiness as it was seen in the flower of consecrated womanhood. Mary's life was for the most part one of silent devotion; it was hers to lay up the treasures of holy thought rather than to bring them forth. But on this one occasion she speaks out of the abundance of her heart, and discloses to us the inner life of the Saint. What a depth of humility is in her Song! What a triumph of Faith! She has been magnified; all generations shall call her blessed; already across the centuries to come she can hear her own name coupled with all the honors that the lips of man can give to the sweetest and the best. Yet, in her exultation there is no taint of self-conceit. She accepts her great destiny only to offer it up to Him from Whom it comes * * * And notwithstanding her unique honor, she is fully conscious that she does not stand alone in the favor of God; she is but one among the Saints * * In her, God has declared his purpose of exalting the humble and meek wherever they may be found; of filling the hungry with good things. The Magnificat strikes the very key note of the teaching of Him who was anointed to preach the Gospel to the poor; we can already hear in it the blessing which the lips of Christ have pronounced upon all who are poor in spirit, who hunger after righteousness. Mary was the first of the long line of those whose history is a comment on the opening words of the Sermon on the Mount. In the world she was known as the wife of a village carpenter. In Religion she was the absolutely trustful and obedient servant of God. Follow Mary in her faith, in her obedience, in her humility, and as her Magnificat teaches you, you will share her blessedness."—From Daily Lections, Vol. II.

PARISH NOTES.

No Choir during August; low mass at 11 o'clock on Sundays with hymns.

The annual subscription for members of C. B. S. has been reduced to 50 cents, but this does not include postage and privileges.

Rev. C. C. Quin and Rev. W. A. McClenthen have been in the city during the past month. Rev. C. C. Quin will be away during August.

Rev. Erskine Wright, who resigned his parish in the early part of the year on account of ill health, hopes to resume active work in October.

Rev. Herbert Parrish has resigned the Church of the Advent, San Francisco. He will take up special work, at the request of the Bishop of California.

Mr. Sears writes of many courtesies and privileges extended to him by Sir Frederick Bridges, of Westminster Abbey. Dr. Mann, of King's College Chapel, Cambridge; Rev. J. Baden Powell, Preceptor of St. Paul's, Knightsbridge. He is now in Paris; Monsieur Widor, of San Sulpice, having promised a favorable opportunity.

The report for Sea Isle City services was sent to the Bishop of New Jersey.

SEA ISLE CITY.

June was a busy month with the various repairs, additions, renovation. The first party went down on Monday, June 27th; the courtesy of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company provided a special car which stopped at Ludlam siding, letting out the happy company with their bundles, delighted to see the sandy shore once more. Only one misfortune, owing to the illness of one of the children, the party was sent home two days ahead of time, the case did not, however, turn out a serious one. The second party went down on Monday, July 11th, and returned on July 22nd; the third party on July 25th. The first mass was said on Feast of St. Peter (29th), later on the same day the Sea Hut (Casa-Mare) was blessed. The Sisters, the people staying at the Home, and a few St. Clement's people were present. Rev. F. D. Ward said mass later in the week. On Saturday, July 2nd, a number of the Guild of St. Vincent went down with Rev. C. C. Quin, the Chaplain (who took the services during the stay), stayed at Casa-Mare until the evening of the 4th, and they say they had a very good time. Mrs. Downey and Miss Offer kindly looked after their comfort. Rev. G. H. Moffett, Rev. W. A. McClenthen have divided the duty during the month.

Friends old and new have sent their subscriptions and donations, but a considerable sum of money is needed—the repairs, &c., of the Home, cost nearly $900—so we ask the generous thought and interest of all. A sale of fancy work, &c., will be held at Sea Isle in August, for which we should be glad to have donations and orders. Our neighbor, Mr. Taws, still continues to show his interest by sharing his fish catches.

Dr. Wells and Dr. Stimas, at Sea Isle, and Dr. Sinnexon, in the city, ungrudgingly give their valuable services.

We are grateful for the courtesy of our neighbors at Holy Trinity, Ocean City, who in response to a telephone request, kindly sent over by messenger their sacred vessels for our use on St. Peter's Day; this required a night's stay, taking back the vessels in the morning.

The household numbered 41 during the stay of the first party and 51 during the second.

ECCLESIASTICAL DISCIPLINE.

This is the title of a charge delivered by the Bishop of Vermont at the Diocesan Convention. It has been received through the courtesy of the Bishop. The Church in this country is under obligations to him for his former charges. "Marriage and Divorce" and "Kindred and Affinity," in both of which he spoke with no uncertain sound, and now again, at an opportune moment, he sets forth and pleads for a high, sober and just standard, particularly, we may be grateful for the stand he takes against the sentimental notions of admitting pseudo-Christians, semi-Christians, pagans, unitarians and others occasionally to Holy Communion, and to the other mistaken notions that all sorts of self-styled ministers should be permitted to occupy our pulpits.

The matter of Courts of Appeal is referred to. Undoubtedly it is desirable they should be provided. The reference to frequent depositions, largely due to mis-conduct, seems to show as he phrases it, "a real effort to get rid of unfit priests." Sometimes it is due to the desire of a Bishop to get rid of the trouble and anxiety of restoring such an one in the spirit of meekness. It is a short and easy method of dealing with a duty for which the Bishop has no aptitude or inclination. Men are robbed of character and self-respect—the instances of such cruel treatment are pitiable and outrageous. In may cases patience and care would save the church from disgrace.

Sometimes it is difficult to judge whose is the sadder lot, the irresponsible Bishop, who so easily does his duty, or shirk it—does the whole matter up in a hurry, because some one requires him to do so; or, the unfrocked Priest, who is thrown out on the world unjustly and unnecessarily ruined and disgraced by a snap and one-sided judgment from which there is no appeal in this world. But this is an aspect of the case into which the charge does not enter. It is, however, an important one, as involving discipline, considered as penitential.

It is always to be remembered that "deposition" does not take away the "indelible character" received in Holy Orders, but only forbids its exercise. Even then there are circumstances when the acts are "valid," even if "irregular." Our canons are deficient in this, as they are in other rather important points, due largely to ill instructed laymen having a share in such legislation.

SOCIETY OF ST. JOHN, EVANGELIST.

The Society's House in Westminster, London, is rising rapidly above the level of Great College Street, just outside the Dean's Yard, a splendid and valuable location. The present plan needs $46,000 to be carried out, or with the large chapel for spiritual instructions and retreats $61,000, of which about $23,000 is available. The principal stone was laid on June 17th, by the Bishop of Stepney. It may be remembered that for several years some of the Society have been in residence in Dartmouth Street, Westminster.

The development of the Foreign Missionary work progresses in a wonderful way, especially in India, the letters from Bombay and Poona being always full of interest and joy. In South Africa, it has been decided to withdraw from the English work (S. Philip's) and to undertake a work among the Kaffirs, S. Cuthbert's Griqua-Land East, at the request of the Bishop of S. John's Umtata, which has been under the charge of a small community of Priests, who have offered themselves for the Noviciate of the Society. Father Puller has already sailed for South Africa, to take charge of this work, he has had a good deal of experience there already, having spent several years in Cape Town, and later his work in the instruction of the members of the order of Ethiopia.

PARISH NOTES.

Choir returns Sept. 4th.

Catechisms meet on Sunday, Sept. 18th.

Office of S. Mary's Guild on Monday, Sept. 12th.

Anniversary Mass for repose of soul of Hannah P. Smith was said on Saturday, Aug. 13th.

Eight o'clock Mass Sunday, Sept. 18th; 7.30 Mass on weekdays will be resumed Sept. 12th.

The Rev. W. A. McClenthen will be away until the middle of the month, the other clergy will be in residence.

The attention of parents is called to All Saints School, Germantown, as furnishing complete education, spiritual as well as intellectual.

Wednesday, Sept. 14th (Exaltation of Holy Cross), special Mass for Guild of Holy Cross; members should make corporate communion.

Communions on Sunday during the month have been encouraging, yet there must have been many, yielding to the spiritual disease of accedie, who have failed in their duty to God, some who, forgetting responsibility, have not taken care that their children fulfilled their duty.

Mr. Sears, upon examination, has received the degree of Associate of the Royal College of Organists (A. R. C. O.), he was presented by Sir Frederick Brydges, Mus. Doc. of Westminster Abbey, who spoke of his ability in terms of commendation; Mr. Sears during August went to Paris for further instruction under Monsieur Widow of S. Sulpice and hopes to return early in September.

A summer scandal that calls for some attention is, parishes left without any one to minister to the sick, prepare the dying, bury the dead, the only spiritual provision being for Morning Prayer said on Sunday—in some country districts, the Rector goes for his holiday and services are maintained by a lay reader. Such a condition of affairs is not consistent with love of God or zeal for souls, and yet it is not rare or uncommon.

Never before has the south garden looked so delightful, the grass has been well kept, the vines have been luxuriant, the trees have been in good condition, the rose of Sharon bushes have been laden with blossoms, while other shrubs and bushes have bloomed in pleasing variety. All this despite the fact that owing to our neighbors' careless and selfish attitude, dogs and cats and children have destroyed, broken and injured our plants.

With the passing of the summer, with its incidents of change, refreshment and recreation our hearts should turn to our Lord with renewed devotion and vigor—it means for the faithful, regular confession, devout communions, frequent attendance at Mass, beside the Sunday obligation. Many have drifted into carelessness and worldliness, another call comes to such that they pause and consider before it is too late, "amend your ways."

An attempt has been made to get a complete list of the communicants of the Parish since the foundation; the task has not been easy, nor the results very satisfactory, partly because many names do not seem to have been entered at all, and partly, because Christian names are entirely lacking in many cases; however, it is now in such shape as to be more generally useful; one of the saddest marks of all are the notes "lapsed," "removed," "left," "disappeared," it means something in God's eternal purpose.

Not only the faithful at home, but the others scattered in many directions have been true to their principles and have without doubt left a lasting spiritual impression by their devotion to our Blessed Lord, in particular taking advantage of privileges provided or asking for such when not the custom; some few may lose their first love and throw in their lot with others who do not believe in confession, i. e., the Precious Blood Cleansing the Soul, or, practice Fasting Communion, that custom of the Holy Ghost, of Apostolic authority, for the honor of our Lord, but many in different and distant places are bearing their witness. Said a man brought up at S. Clements, as he stopped on Chestnut Street, "there were seven of us at the early Mass the other Sunday, all of them are or had been members of S. Clements"—to our mind that fact was more glorious than endowing a scholarship for educating some pagan Jap in wisdom that is of this world only.

Of your charity, pray for the souls of
The Sister Mary Cicely of All Saints (29th July).
The Sister Petronilla of All Saints (11th August).
Julia Macalester Mayer (4th August).
Grant them a joyful resurrection.

SEA ISLE CITY.

The household during the stay of the third party (July 26th to August 5th) numbered 50. The fourth (August 8th to 19th), 54. This completed the regular number provided for, the rest of the season a smaller household and then the shutting up. It has been a satisfactory year, with no serious accidents and for the most part, happy contented people and children; there are always some people to complain.

The daily Mass has been maintained, though fewer than last year have attended during the week; always there have been some who have not forgotten.

Mrs. Wells and Mrs. Taylor took charge of the sale (August 12th and 13th); it was held in Dr. Wells' cottage, a real interest was manifested, both in donations of fancy articles, cakes and candies and generous buying. The attendance was very good, nearly $250 was realized, considerably more than last year. Miss Anderson and several others assisted by taking charge of the tables, etc.

There are some subscriptions still unpaid, and we shall soon have to meet the cost of the repairs and enlargement. Miss Miles' legacy may not be paid for several years, and even then will not assist in the general maintenance.

Several have helped in the care of the children. These August days the meadows have been clothed with a most bewildering variety of blossoms, most delicate and exquisite coloring.

Sept. XVI.

"The real hero . . . is unquestionably Pusey. And this is not wonderful, when we consider the extraordinary difficulty of his position during these years, with the majority of Englishmen firmly convinced that he was a Romanist at heart, and only waiting his time to go over; with those of his friends who had already gone, taunting him with not carrying out his principles to their logical conclusion; with the Bishops trying to get him to issue anti-Roman manifestos, and him steadfastly refusing; with friends falling away day by day; with the repeated disappointments at his beloved Church of St. Saviour's, Leeds. When we see him silenced, slandered, abused and yet all the time, through evil report and good report, always keeping his head; never carried away by popular clamor or Episcopal injustice, preserving his unshaken faith in the Church of England as the Catholic Church of the country. Whether we agree with him in everything or not, we can only admire the stability of his conviction and the tenacity of his purpose."—Church Times (London).

EMBER DAYS.

During Ember Days we are again compelled to face the fact of the Priesthood and its meaning; this is God's appointed means for carrying on His work in the world, His way of bringing fallen men back to God, all the ministrations will have this for the object, to unite men to God, to renew that union when broken, to strengthen it when weak, it is partly missionary, partly pastoral. "Sacerdos alter Christus." It is the highest of all vocations. That they may accept this call, certain men are given life by God, they are chosen and may accept this choice, to the glory of God and to their unspeakable happiness. They will be supremely discontented until they seek the Face of God and in its brightness see the object of their own existence. In the misery of this world, what is the deepest? Truly the loss of vocation, men and women who have known the Will of God and have not obeyed, their life has in it nothing of joy, they have refused and despised the Lord of Life. In an atmosphere of worldliness, and under selfish influences, they lost sight of the true object—our Lord humbled Himself and surrendered all, and the secular Priest as well as the religious must resolve to accept his vocation in poverty and humility; not all he can get, but all that he can give—not to seek great things, but those of no value, laboring to save the souls of men, to spend and be spent for the Master.

Holy Orders is a supernatural gift conveying sanctifying grace, this is not from any election or selection of men, but God's Love bestowed by these who are His Ministers to those "called of God"; the "character" so conferred is indelible, it is the brand of a bond-slave of Christ—an "unfrocked" cleric is one of the most miserable of all creatures. The clergy need the prayers of God's people that they may be entirely devoted to God's service and not to their own advancement.

THE CATECHISM.

The Catechism opened for the winter's work, Sunday, September 18th. The duty of instructing children in Christian faith and life is a most important one and one in which every person who is not prevented should be glad to share. Properly done, it should increase in children the love of God, and have a controlling effect upon their lives. Then when they hear the Faith attacked, when they hear that some sectarian body is as good as the Catholic Church, when they hear that there is no harm in going to irregular places of worship, they will know the truth opposite to these falsities. When they are tempted to sin, or to indifference in their religious duties, or to give up practices which they have learned, they will remember they have learned that such things are opposed to the love of God. Religion must be a reality, a live, working principle, and it must be this, for children as well as for adults. The help of the congregation is asked in this work. Teachers are needed both for the Catechism and for the Little Catechism. No one need hesitate to volunteer on the ground of being unfitted for the work: good-will and faithfulness are the chief requisites. An especial effort is to be made this winter to teach the children to assist at Mass more intelligently, also to teach them more prayers for their private use, and to help them in their confessions. They will be provided with cards containing suitable prayers for morning and evening, which they will be expected to learn, and with a new leaflet designed to make their confessions simple, natural, thorough and contrite.

SEA ISLE CITY.

All Saints Seashore House was shut in for winter on September 6th. Four parties in all went down and although some subscriptions and donations did not come in and our Philadelphia friends omitted their usual entertainment, the money received covered all expenses also the additions. This was largely due to the fact that the sale at Sea Isle City realized a very large sum (about $250) and Mrs. Keyes' sale after Easter brought $130. The daily mass in the chapel (San Clemente sub mare) was maintained from July 3rd to September 3d. This privilege was availed of by several persons staying at Sea Isle. The St. Clement's clergy undertook the whole duty, Casa-Mare proving a comfortable, satisfactory shelter.

PHILADELPHIA, OCTOBER, 1904.

THE GENERAL CONVENTION.

This body, composed of all the Bishops of the Church, together with four clerical and four lay delegates from each diocese, begins its sessions in Boston on Wednesday, October 5th, and usually continues three weeks. Matters of great importance in the way of reports, administration and routine are acted upon, plans for the welfare and progress of the Church are decided upon. Anxiously the faithful await the result of the discussion and deliberation of some very important matters. Divorce, Courts of Appeal, Provinces, Correction of the legal title of our Communion—it can hardly be expected that anything approaching final action in any of these matters should be taken, each must make its way slowly, meanwhile in "quietness and confidence must be our strength," for in the end our cause must prosper (as indeed it does now) and prevail. Let each one plead the Holy Sacrifice and intercede with God.

CONFRATERNITY OF THE BLESSED SACRAMENT.

The annual dues of the C. B. S. have been reduced to fifty cents. This brings membership within the reach of all who are interested in the principles for which it exists.

I. The honor due to the Person of Our Lord Jesus Christ in the Blessed Sacrament of His Body and Blood.

II. Mutual and Special Intercession at the time of and in union with the Eucharistic Sacrifice.

III. The promotion of the observance of the Catholic and primitive law of receiving the Holy Communion fasting.

Vespers, with an instruction, are sung on the second Sunday afternoon in each month at four-thirty o'clock: Application blanks for membership in St. Saviour's Ward, and leaflet explaining the object of the Confraternity, obligations, privileges, etc., may be had from the Clergy.

THE MAGAZINE.

The MAGAZINE is a convenient method of keeping those who are interested fully informed of the work of the parish and its needs. The services, meetings, instructions, hours of clergy and other arrangements are published with such accuracy and completeness as is possible. From time to time advice is given in a plain definite manner, and attention called to affairs of general or special importance. Occasionally some one objects to the tone or matter of some article, but we can recall no subject which facts did not warrant at the time, and subsequent developments did not support. Further, there is hardly an issue some article or item of which is not quoted by Church papers elsewhere. The subscriptions do not cover the expenses, the generosity of two or three lightens the burden, but copies are placed in the vestibule, at the disposal of those who are unwilling or unable to pay.

PARISH NOTES.

Information has been received of a generous legacy for the Endowment Fund from the estate of Mrs. Mayer.

Requiem Mass for the repose of the soul of Miss Julia Dunlap, a benefactress of the parish, was said on the anniversary, September 16th.

Pew rents are due, in advance, October 1st. Checks should be made payable to St. Clement's Church, and may be addressed 20th and Cherry Streets.

All sorts of articles, household goods and clothing will be gladly received for the annual "Jumble" sale in November. They should be sent to the Mission House.

The usual Sunday and weekday services have been resumed as well as the customary hours for confession. Offices and instructions for the various guilds will be said according to the Kalendar.

Mr. John W. Wood, corresponding secretary General Board of Missions, is quoted by the Living Church as writing to a Boston paper to correct an unfair statement in regard to St. Clement's and parishes of same position offerings for missions.

The clergy are always glad and willing to arrange to communicate the sick at home. Persons should not wait to be asked, but should themselves request the blessed privilege. An eager hunger begs this nourishment, always our Lord is ready to bestow Himself.

Whole pews and single sittings may be rented. Persons may write to the Accounting Warden for an appointment, when location and price may be agreed upon. The south isle is free to all, and persons are asked not to appropriate sittings in other parts of the Church without the permission of the ushers, and any such permission is liable to be withdrawn upon the rental of such sittings.

Each member of the Sodality of St. Clement has solemnly promised Almighty God to receive Holy Communion each month, yet many fail to fulfil this obligation without any excuse. Without any doubt this injures their whole spiritual life. God's time for renewed efforts in the way of perseverance has again come to all.

The Clergy will be glad to receive the names and addresses of new comers in the parish and call upon them. Those who desire to be identified with the parish should present their letters of transfer that they may be enrolled upon the communicant list. The clergy and the Sisters are always ready to arrange for the instruction of people in general as well as in preparation for the Sacrament of Confirmation, or First Communion.

THE CLAIMS OF CHRISTIANITY.

The distinguishing marks of Christianity are sacrifice and struggle, not the pale face and lacerated body and the constant thwarting of the body—these if necessary—it means death to the lower to live in the higher—a sacrifice of much that the world values, because the Church has found something higher because the soul loves to be with God better than eating forbidden fruit, rather be an outcast with Christ than be popular without Him. A Christian is one who is able to say "Thou art worthy, for Thou wast slain, and hast redeemed us to God by Thy Blood."

Are you quite content to go with the multitude, to eat and drink and sleep, without one noble aspiration after higher things? Do you go as near to sin as you dare and think yourself to have done wonders if you escape without singeing your wings? Do you think a great deal of what the world says of you, so you are a captive to its shifting applause? Is your aim directed solely and simply to getting on and amassing luxuries and comforts? Is religion an occasional conformity to custom which you dislike and even dread? Then you are not a Christian. The tremendous price of the cross was not paid, the suffering and anguish endured that you should drift along with an occasional glimpse at the form of the Crucified as you are speeding further and further away. A life which has no mark of sacrifice upon it, no cross, cannot be a Christian life—we ought to be exhibiting in our lives the seriousness of Christ's sacrifice, the strength of this sacrifice and the power of it is sacrifice. The figure of the crucified projects over all Christianity, an image of great seriousness. Would that the Church could impart to the butterfly Christian something of its own seriousness, that which underlies the great machinery of her sanctification and the simplicity of her rites! Holy Baptism which seems to us such a simple thing, connected with innocent infancy, yet to those who know, speaks of a death unto sin, with far reaching pledges and enlisting into the army of the Cross. Confirmation tells of the battle shock, the rush of temptation, the persistence of trial, the spiritual bracing of the soul by the power of the Holy Ghost. The altar is ever red with the blood of the sacrifice—the perpetual pleading mounts to God. In all the Church does and says is the seriousness of those who know the tremendous issues at stake—no uncertain voice, no arbitrary decree—mere caprice or love of absolute truth. Baptism is known to be the way of Salvation, Holy Communion the accredited way. Christianity is no grace appendage to life, an afterthought.

Suppose you put it all to the test, you will then find religion a strength. Weakness is not due to innate viciousness, intemperance, gambling, impurity, worldliness do not flourish through necessity, but because we do not make proper use of the strength at our disposal. Christianity still carries with it that wonderful strength which enables a few fishermen and slaves to bear up against the weight of public opinion, the wisdom of the world and worldly policy—it is still the power of God to salvation. It does not need to be re-stated, but revived; it can only be seen from the inside and cannot be proved—for we must take Christ at his Word and do what He tells you to do, then all difficulties vanish. To do this you must believe rightly the Incarnation of Our Lord, Jesus Christ—Adapted from Canon Newbolt's Sermon at S. Paul's Cathedral.

ALL SAINTS AND ALL SOULS.

Generous offerings are asked on All Saints Day for the payment of the mortgage interest on All Saints Mission House, and the Sea Shore House, the total amount is $460 a year and water rents must be added to this.

Vespers of the Dead will be sung on Tuesday, November 1st, at 5.15 in St. John's Chapel. The Masses on All Souls' Day (Nov. 2d) will be at 6.30, 7, 7.30 and Solemn Mass at 9. Names of baptized persons should be written out, at least one Christian name, (not initials, or terms like "Father," etc.) and handed in by Tuesday afternoon at the latest. They will be read out at one Mass only and that may be specified.

We would remind Communicants that those intending to make their communion at Solemn Mass (9 o'clock), should give notice to that effect beforehand; this is also the custom at the 9.15 on Sundays and the 9.30 on weekdays. Otherwise the Celebrant does not make provision.

NOVENA—NOV. 14-23.

Memorial for the Parish (to be said daily):

Ant.—I will pour water upon him that is thirsty, and floods upon the dry ground: I will pour my Spirit upon thy seed, and my blessing upon thine offspring.

V.—O Lord, look down from heaven.

R.—Behold, and visit this vine.

Let us pray.

Almighty and everlasting God, who does govern all things in heaven and earth, mercifully hear our supplications, and grant unto this Parish all things that are needful for its spiritual welfare; schools in which to train the young in Thy faith and fear; ministers to labor in this portion of Thy vineyard; a Church restored to the beauty of holiness. Strengthen and confirm the faithful; visit and relieve the sick; turn and soften the wicked; rouse the careless; recover the fallen; restore the penitent; remove all hindrances to the advancement of Thy truth; bring all to be of one heart and one mind within the fold of Thy Holy Church; to the honor and glory of Thy Holy Name; through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

PARISH NOTES.

Solemn Mass at eleven o'clock on Sundays.

Bona Mors each Monday after Even Song.

A Requiem will be said on each permissible day at 7.30 A. M. (consult Calendar). Names must be written and given to one of the Clergy the day before.

Articles for Rummage Sale will be gratefully received by the Sisters.

Annual Meeting of Altar Guild on Thursday, Nov. 3, reports, etc. Regular workers are greatly needed.

Subscriptions and donations for Altar flowers are asked for All Saints, St. Clement's and Christmastide. Small envelopes marked will be found in the corridor.

The set of white silk Vestments made for the Mission in Japan are ready to be sent; it is hoped again this year to furnish a set to some foreign Missionary Jurisdiction.

Offerings are asked from Associates of St. Saviour's Ward, C. B. S., again this year to provide Sacred Vessels for some (if possible) foreign missionary jurisdiction.

The Bishop of Fond du Lac has asked that a Missionary box be prepared and given to one of the parishes in his diocese. The matter will be laid before the Altar Guild. Subscriptions and donations for this will be acceptable.

Servers are in attendance at the Parish Mass on weekdays. This adds dignity to the Offering of the Holy Sacrifice and is as it should be. It would be cause of great thankfulness if the general attendance on weekdays was larger. There are many who could come if they made an effort, loved our Lord, valued the inestimable privilege.

Mr. Sears has arranged to post the prelude and postlude in addition to the other music on the list in the corridor. He will also give an Organ Recital on Saturday, November 12th, at 4 o'clock. A short recital (7.30 to 8) will be given on Sunday evenings; the continuance of this depends on the quiet and reverent behaviour of those who attend.

St. Saviours Ward, C. B. S. has sent $65.00 to the Bishop of Tokio, Japan, to provide Sacred Vessels for use in the Mission Stations of his jurisdiction. Bishop McKim has accepted it and they will be made by a Japanese silversmith. Bishop Griswold has accepted the sacred vessels now being made from old family silver of a member of the Ward, and they will be used for Mission Stations in his jurisdiction

Bishop of Pennsylvania.

Your generous alms and offerings at all the services on the Feast Day are asked for the Endowment Fund in the care of the Penna. Co., which amounts to $10,707.26. About $30,000 more has been left to us, but is not yet available. It is very much to be desired that the encouraging condition of this fund may prompt many to leave a legacy, as it seems to assure the continuance of the work.

Thanksgiving Day, the alms are for the Poor Fund. Will not those who are able make a generous offering? The Episcopal Hospital also asks for help. Put offerings in envelope and mark "Hospital."

Confessions for the festival may be made on the Monday and Tuesday before. Hours will be posted. All should prepare to make a good communion.

Will not all members and associates of Sodality make a special effort to take part in the Procession of the Sodality as loyal and faithful? The necessity of having it on a weeknight is some hindrance; there will be no sermon. Each one should wear their medal. Women and girls wear veils and meet in the upper school room at 7.30 P. M. Boys and men will assemble in St. John's Chapel.

The Clergy urge every member of the congregation to come to the Parish Tea. Cards of admission may be obtained from the Sisters.

The music for Solemn Mass on the Patronal Feast, will be Saint Caecilia, with orchestral accompaniment.

ADVENT.

"Christ's coming to be acknowledged as the Lord of all things, and His coming to purge His Church of the sinners who defile and disgrace it—are the two principal things to be thought of in connection with His second coming.

In some ways Christ is still to us what He was to the Jews. True, we even now acknowledge Him as our King. But just as He was to the Jewish multitudes, so is He to many of us. We hear of His life and wonderful works, we hear of his love towards us; we hear of His coming back again to wind up all things and to judge us for good and all. But our thoughts about all these things are few and faint in proportion to their reality and greatness. We hear without laying to heart. But the day must come to us, as it came to the Jews, when He shall ask us—ask in most serious earnest—what has come of all this that you have heard and seen of Christ's works and words? What do you really think of Him? Is He your King, or is He not? Will you have Him to rule over your hearts and souls or not? You must answer yes, or no, and say it in earnest; not as you say it now, saying and unsaying, eager to-day and luke-warm to-morrow. But your real will must go with your words, and you must say it once for all—for good and forever."—Dean Church.

THE POWER OF BAPTISM.

The births into the world of new human beings produces very far-reaching and practical consequences, but all these are nothing compared to the consequences of its new birth into Jesus Christ, that is to say, its Baptism. Every natural consequence finds a supernatural parallel, and in addition, there are supernatural consequences which are not reflected in the natural life. In all these, the energy which produces them is divine. It is impossible to do more than suggest the results which come from the new birth into the life of God, but at least it is evident that regeneration opens up the unsearchable riches of God to every one who will consent to carry out these consequences to their farthest limits. This natural life may be a vale of tears, but if souls lived in the power of their Baptism, it would not matter whether it is or not.

Why then are the results of Baptism so little considered? Their estimation seems to have shrunk so as to be in proportion to the size of the being who is baptized. It is so long before the baptized infant attains the use of his faculties that adults lose the thought of the Baptism as making any difference in that gradually developing life. They know vaguely that it was the best thing that the baby was baptized, but it never enters their minds that there is more difference in the sight of God between that child and an unbaptized one than there is between light and darkness. They quite forget that each faculty in the young nature is endowed with supernatural grace and power, that the will is released from slavery to sin and is free to turn the whole life to God.

Again, we regard our own Baptism with the same inattention. It is a vague far-off thing which was done for us, and which went on record in Heaven and on earth, but we fail to regard it as a source of power for to-day. All the other sacraments we have received loom up far larger in our estimation, and we are liable to regard their results as more important. Theoretically, of course, we know that this is not true; theoretically we know that our Baptism is the one thing which makes all the rest possible. But we need to know it practically, so that life will rest upon the true basis. In Baptism God called us to perfection, and the graves which flow from the results of that sacrament are sufficient to attain that end. They may be lost and regained; but it is still the baptismal life and not a new and different one. If we lived, and taught others to live, in the power of Baptism, the possibility of holiness would be considerably plainer before us, the tone of the spiritual life would be much healthier and there would not be so much need of the Sacrament in which God restores us to baptismal grace, when we have lost it.

ST. CLEMENT'S MAGAZINE

VOL. XX PHILADELPHIA, DECEMBER, 1904 NO. 12

The Rev. George Herbert Moffett died suddenly from heart failure on Saturday, Nov. 12, at 9.30 A. M. There had been nothing noticed the day before which would indicate that he was in any poorer health than usual. Saturday morning, at seven, he went, as was his custom on that day, to the Mission House for Mass. Just inside the door he collapsed, and had to be assisted back to the clergy house, where he lingered until half-past nine, in what seemed a state of semi-consciousness. Extreme Unction was administered by Rev. C. C. Quin. Monday evening the body was taken to the Crypt Chapel, where watch was kept during the night hours by the acolytes and some other devoted laymen. Tuesday the Sisters kept the watch, others coming in as they could. Tuesday evening the body was taken into the choir of the church. Vespers of the Dead were said by Rev. C. C. Quin. After the service a large number of people testified their respect and devotion. The night watch was again kept by faithful acolytes and others. Beginning at six on Wednesday, the day of the burial, Requiem Masses were said every half hour until nine o'clock, by Rev. W. A. McClenthen, Rev. F. D. Ward, Rev. R. H. Paine, Rector of Mount Calvary Church, Baltimore; Rev. Wm. McGarvey, C. S. S. S., Rector of S. Elizabeth's Church, Philadelphia; Rev. D. I. Odell, Rector of the Church of the Annunciation, Philadelphia; and the Rev. C. N. Field, S. S. J. E. Provincial Superior of the Society. Rev. H. R. Sargent, O. H. C., said the Requiem in the Mission House Chapel at seven. At ten the final services were begun. The procession consisted of the crucifer and choir, a large number of visiting clergy, the clergy of the parish, the Rt. Rev. O. W. Whitaker, D. D., Bishop of Pennsylvania; the Rt. Rev. Alexander Mackay-Smith, D. D., Bishop-Coadjutor of Pennsylvania; the bier, the honorary pall-bearers, the family, the Mother Superior of All Saints, with others of the community; the vestry. The honorary pall-bearers were the Rev. R. H. Paine, the Rev. C. N. Field, S. S. J. E.; the Rev. H. R. Sargent, O. H. C.; the Rev. Wm. McGarvey, C. S. S. S.; the Rev. Dr. Mortimer, the Rev. Dr. Upjohn, the Rev. D. I. Odell, the Rev. Robert Ritchie. The Burial Office was read by the Bishop of Pennsylvania. The Solemn Mass and Absolutions were sung by the Rev. C. C. Quin, celebrant; the Rev. F. D. Ward, deacon; the Rev. W. A. McClenthen, sub-deacon. The absolution and benediction in the Mass were pronounced by the Bishop-Coadjutor of Pennsylvania. The sad journey to Woodlawn, New York, where interment was to be made, was taken by the family, the clergy and a few others.

The Committal was said by the Rev. R. H. Paine.

THE REV. GEORGE HERBERT MOFFETT, M. A., S. T. B.

The death of the Rev. George Herbert Moffett, rector of St. Clement's Church, Philadelphia, is a grievous and almost irreparable loss to his own parish, and a distinct loss to the work of the whole church. In the nine years, during which he had been in charge of St. Clement's parish, he had accomplished results seldom achieved by the ministry of a long life. When he was called to it the church was in debt, and the congregation depleted and discouraged. To-day the parish is free from debt, prosperous, united, with a beautiful new parish house, a Sisters' house, manifold charities and abounding in activities. To this work Mr. Moffett gave his life, and God blessed him. A man of lofty purity, of splendid devotion and intense conviction, he made a profound spiritual impression upon everyone with whom he came in contact. He was a rare and utterly consecrated spirit, called of God to the life of service, and giving himself wholly and without reserve to the office and ministry of the priesthood. To-day he rests from his labors and his works do follow him. Brave, true, sincere, unselfish, sanctified by suffering, ennobled by hardship, he was a true and faithful servant of the Lord Jesus Christ.

Mr. Moffett was born in Cincinnati, O., on February 5, 1858; was graduated from Trinity College, Hartford, in 1878, and from the General Theological Seminary in 1881. For several years he was an assistant at Mount Calvary, Baltimore, and then took charge of the Church of the Holy Innocents, Hoboken, N. J., until he was called to St. Clement's, Philadelphia, in March, 1895.

"Right dear in the sight of the Lord is the death of His saints." "The path of the just is as a shining light, that shineth more and more unto the perfect day."—(The Bishop of Tennessee in the "Living Church.")

IN MEMORIAM.

George Herbert Moffett, Priest.

Tidings of the sudden death of the Rev. G. H. Moffett, rector of St. Clement's, Philadelphia, Pa., have brought a sense of keen personal sorrow, not only to those who, during the last ten years or more, have had the privilege of his ministrations, but to very many outside Philadelphia to whom Father Moffett has been a valued friend and beautiful example of the saintly life. The son of an earnest and devout layman—one of that type of business men to whose devotion the Church in America owes much—George Herbert Moffett has in his priestly life approached very nearly the beautiful ideal set forth by that old English poet whose name he bore. Alike in his work at Baltimore, at the beginning of his ministerial career; at Holy Innocents', Hoboken, N. J., and at St. Clement's, there could never be any mistaking the root-principle of all Father Moffett's work. It lay in his intense and ever-deepening devotion to the Sacrament of the altar, from which he daily derived fresh strength with which to live his holy life of constant self-sacrifice and unwearying helpfulness to those souls committed to his charge. Self-denial and intense devotion were the great notes of the life just closed on earth; the weapons with which his splendid battle against sin, the world, and the devil was fought. And with these there was found in him an intense, and at times almost unreasoning, loyalty to his friends, a loyalty which would lead him to hope all things, even of those who disappointed him most, or who tried him most sorely.

A breakdown in 1888, followed by other breakdowns at intervals, have been warnings of the inevitable end that must come to the strenuous work carried on by a body not physically strong, and the power of which has again and again been taxed to the uttermost in the service of his Master. Even his holiday a short while ago was spent mainly in one of the great religious houses of England, where, among friends like-minded to himself, Father Moffett sought to live even more closely the spiritual life—to gain, if it might be, fresh strength for the battle now ended. Of an intensely shy and sensitive nature, he ever shrank from association with others, even among his fellow-clergy; he was, in fact, wrapped up in the work that he had undertaken to do, to the exclusion of almost everything else. The mission house at Holy Innocents', Hoboken; the clergy house at St. Clement's, Philadelphia—these and many other works of brick and stone, valuable as they are, seem but little after all in comparison with that holiness of life, that unwearying devotion to God and his fellow-men, that over-mastering yearning to save souls, which all who were privileged to know Father Moffett will ever remember as combining to make up the saintliness of his beautiful character.

For him the struggle on earth has ended; the tired warrior has laid down his arms, passing to that peace and rest which we, who are left, pray may ever be his in increasing measure. And with that prayer there is the feeling of thankfulness that we have been privileged to witness such a life; of gratitude that we have known such a Christ-like character.

Let us thank God, amid our dust and heat,
Our fierce self-love in triumph or defeat—
Let us at least thank God that he has lived
And helped to keep our human nature sweet.

—(A. C. K., from "The Churchman.")

ST. CLEMENT'S TIDE.

The patronal feast brought a new sense this year of triumph and a deeper knowledge of the power of the Sacred Humanity in weak human flesh. Yet no one could escape the tone of sadness which hung about the observance, for it seemed to bring personal messages. The words of the epistle, "Therefore, my brethren dearly beloved and longed for, my joy and crown, so stand fast in the Lord, my dearly beloved," surely came as the words of one at the end of his earthly course, to the souls for whom he had labored. And, as we remembered him, who struggled out in the midst of pain and suffering, in one last attempt to offer the Holy Sacrifice, the words of the Gospel gained a new association: "Who then is a faithful and ise servant whom his Lord hath made ruler over His household, to give them meat in due season? Blessed is that servant whom his Lord when He cometh shall find so doing."

The social side of the festival was omitted. There was no parish tea, and no entertainment for the children. No one had the heart for these things. But the worship of Almighty God, in honor of St. Clement, Bishop and Martyr was offered with all care and loving reverence, at it had been planned. Extra energy was needed to prepare the church and its furnishings, but all was faithfully done and finished, so that the last few hours before the feast day could be spent quietly in the spiritual side of the preparation. Many were faithful about their confessions, and one hundred and ninety-two communions were made from the altar here, as well as others in various places.

At 11 the Solemn Mass was sung, preceded by a solemn procession of thanksgiving. The sacred ministers were the Rev. F. D. Ward, the Rev. C. C. Quin and the Rev. W. A. McClenthen. The Rev. R. H. Paine, who came on from Baltimore for the festival, and the Rev. D. I. Odell were in the choir. The music was Gounod's "St. Cecilia," with orchestral accompaniment under the direction of Mr. William Stoll, wtih Mr. Sears at the organ. The soprano solo work was done by Masters Charles Snyder, William Kiernan and Charles Clark, of our own choir. The tenor soloist was Mr. George Dundas, and the bass, Mr. Harry Hotz. The whole service was in every way a fit and worthy offering to Almighty God, which did not fail to inspire devotion and stimulate the worship of the large congregation. The offering for the Endowment Fund amounted to $1,198.37, and some offerings the next day made this up to $1,200.00.

Solemn Vespers of the feast were sung, and the Procession of the Guilds of the Sodality was held Friday, the 25th, at 8 in the evening. A larger number than usual took part in the Procession, and it was a very impressive act of worship. The choir was accompanied by tympani and a quartette of horns. The Magnificat sung in the Vespers was Smart in B flat, and the glorious Te Deum was Warwick Jordan in C. It seemed as if everything worked together to produce worthy results, and a double blessing will surely come upon all those who have so bravely shown their loyalty and steadfastness.

MISSIONARY BOX.

The Altar Guild, having accepted the charge of preparing the Missionary Box for a parish in the diocese of Fond du Lac, as mentioned in the November magazine, desires especially at this that the request so intrusted to it may be generously fulfilled, and therefore asks contributions in money or material, which may be sent to Mrs. Arthur Brock, Secretary, 2101 Spruce street; Miss Mary F. Lex, Treasurer, 11 South Twenty-first street, or handed to the Reverend Clergy.

PARISH NOTES.

Purple silk was brought from England for a new chasuble for the parish.

The Masses on St. John's Day, December 27th, will be said in St. John's Chapel.

Latches to match their general design, have been promised for the confessional boxes.

Through the courtesy of Mr. Sears, the music at the 9.15 Mass on Sundays was resumed Advent Sunday.

The Masses on All Saints' Day were very well attended. The alms for the mortgage interest on All Saints' Mission House amounted to $327.73.

The Sisters ask donations in order that the worthy poor may have a share in the Christmas cheer, which they otherwies could not have.

The new red c pes were used for the first time at the Solemn Vespers and Procession of Guilds. They were cut and partly made in England, and then finished here by the Altar Guild.

The organ recitals before the Sunday evening service were interrupted, but Mr. Sears intends to continue them. The special recital planned for November 12, of course, was not given.

The Altar Guild is planning another set of vestments to be sent to China, the color to be determined by the priest in charge, for whose help they will be sent. Donations are asked to cover expense of materials.

A silver wafer box has been given as a memorial of a little child, for use at the Seashore Home. It is marked on the bottom, "+ A. M. D. G. In loving memory of Richard Moffett Rommel. In Christ, XX August, MCMIV."

The Sacred Vessels made from old silver for the Bishop of Salina have been finished. If the donor of the silver has not seen the vessels and so desires, the Clergy will be glad to learn the identity. Otherwise they will shortly be sent as planned.

The Mothers' Christmas Supper will be on Wednesday, December 28th, at 8 o'clock. The Mothers' Meeting will be omitted Thursday, December 29th. The Christmas festival of the Catechisms will be on Monday, December 26th, 2 and 8 P. M.

The outside woodwork of the church and parish buildings, as also the interior woodwork of the windows in the church, has been repainted a brown to correspond with the stone work. The iron fence surrounding the property has also been repainted.

Following the precedent of last year, the generous offerings of the people are asked on Christmas Day for the Sanctuary Fund. Gifts for that purpose must be placed in a stamped or otherwise plainly marked envelope. Stamped envelopes for the fund are provided in the corridors.

The Rummage Sale will be held in the parish building Wednesday afternoon, December 7. It is open to persons not members of the parish. Articles for the sale will be gratefully received by the Sisters. It is all for the benefit of the poor, and in that direction there is need of help on account of the shortness of work in the city.

Many names were sent in for remembrance on All Souls' Day, in most cases written on the blanks furnished for the purpose. In some few cases offerings were enclosed. When the Mass preferred was not specified, the names were read at the Mass thought to be desired. Vespers of the dead were sung at 5.15 on All Souls' Eve. At 9 A. M. on All Souls' Day there was sung a Solemn Mass of Requiem, with the Absolutions. The total offerings were $23.52.

CHRISTMAS TIDE.

The Holy Child in the manger, His mother turned rudely away from the inn, calls us to follow His humility, calls us to emulate His simplicity. From Him we can learn to be content with the lowest and meanest of things, and to endure insults where we looked for courtesy. In such humility and simplicity sins should be confessed and His most Blessed Body and Blood received. No one can be really sure of making a good Communion until they have done all they can to prove their sorrow for their sins, and that all is not done until those sins have been humbly and simply confessed to the Holy Child's duly authorized priests. So shall souls be made ready to share in the Nativity by worthily receiving the Body and Blood of Him Who was born. This alone constitutes true Christmas joy. Let this congregation help to dispel the idea that people do not go to church on Christmas Day.

Special hours for Confessions will be duly announced. The Masses will be as usual. The Feast falling on Sunday will enable the Solemn Evensong of Christmas to be sung at night. The Midnight Mass will be said in St. John's Chapel. Persons compelled to receive Holy Communion then are expected to observe the six hours immediately preceding as a fast of devotion, and to hand their names to one of the Clergy the day before.

PARISH NOTES.

Fifty-five persons gave $204.50 for Christmas dinners and the Mothers' Supper.

There has been at least one Requiem a week for the repose of the soul of the Rev. G. H. Moffett.

An anniversary Requiem for the repose of the soul of John Neill was said in the Crypt on December 12th.

The Litany was sung in procession on the Sunday nights in Advent. Good congregations were in attendance.

The annual dinner for the Guild of S. Vincent will be in the Clergy House on Wednesday evening, January 25th.

Attention is called to the fact that contributions had been asked toward Sacred Vessels for China. Some have given for this purpose.

Services during the week preceding Christmas Day, as also on the feast of S. John the Evangelist, were held in S. John's Chapel.

An envelope marked "Altar Flowers," containing a blank cheque on the Girard Trust Company was found in the alms basin on Christmas Day.

The Vestry has authorized the repair of the lower part of the memorial window in the south wall of the Church. It will be done as soon as the weather permits.

The proceeds of the Rummage Sale amounted to about $95, which were added to the Poor Fund. Money for the Parish Tea was also added to this fund; it amounted to $60.50.

Eight Thanksgiving and twenty-eight Christmas dinners were given away, and were gratefully received. About eighty invitations to the Mothers' Supper were given, not counting the choir boys and Acolytes.

The Sisters are thankful for the bounty freely given for the Mission House at Christmas Tide. There were many practical and helpful things which lighten burdens and give more time for spiritual work.

No one need suppose that S. Clement's Magazine is a money-making institution, nor that it comes near paying for itself. Every year there is a deficit to be made up. This year it had to be paid out of special funds.

The Rev. J. B. Sill, of New York, assisted with the work over Christmas Day. The Rev. W. H. Hance, of New York, came after Christmas, and will be with the Clergy as much as possible during the next few weeks.

The silver Crucifix, "in memory of Eleanor," given to the member of the Guild of the Holy Child, who has been most faithful and regular in attendance at the 9.15 Mass on Sundays during the year, has been awarded to Elizabeth Fortune.

A silver Crucifix, "in memory of George Herbert Moffett, Priest," has been awarded on the same principle to William Fortune.

The Mission House of the Sisters has undergone a thorough repairing and painting. The repairing is not the kind of work which shows, but it is very important. The House is a hard and expensive one to keep in repair, just because there are so many little things coming up all the time. Money for the repairing just done came from the balance of the elevator fund, which the donors kindly allowed to be used for this purpose. The money was also sufficient to provide proper stalls for the Sisters in the Chapel. These were greatly needed.

THE MONTH'S MIND.

The Month's Mind for the repose of the soul of George Herbert Moffett, Priest, was kept on Friday, December 16th. Requiems were said at six, seven, and seven-thirty; at ten, a Solemn Requiem with the Absolutions was sung by the clergy of the parish. The Rev. D. I. Odell and the Rev. G. R. Underhill showed their respect by being in the choir.

CHRISTMAS TIDE.

It was truly an act of self-oblation for those who came early to worship the Holy Child on the Feast of His Nativity. So bad was the walking that the infirm were quite unable to be out; but there was the joy in the snow, with all its suggestions of old traditions. There were 306 Communions made at the early Masses, and the Clergy had been busy during the preceding days hearing the Confessions of the faithful. The Church fabric had been made ready, and the beautiful Christmas rood-screen had been raised and decorated by faithful hands among the Acolytes and others. In S. John's Chapel, the creche was arranged to bring more vividly before our minds the love and poverty of our Infant Saviour.

At the Solemn Mass, the processional was Schubert's "Schiller March,"—music well-beloved of one who, indeed, seemed present spiritually, although physically removed from our sight. The music of the Mass was Schubert in G, full of triumph and devotion. At night Solemn Evensong, with Procession, was sung at eight o'clock. There was no preaching either morning or night; the worship was sufficient to raise the minds and souls of loving people to devotion and adoration.

The customary treats for guilds, etc., were as follows: The Catechisms, Monday; S. Nicholas, Tuesday; Mother's Supper, Wednesday; Holy Child, Saturday. The Catechism entertainment on Monday evening consisted of stereopticon views of the early life of our Lord, from the pictures painted by the late J. J. Tissot. Preliminary views of Bethlehem, Nazareth and Egypt were shown as illustrating different places where our Lord spent time. The Rev. W. N. Clapp, of S. Luke's, Germantown, very courteously came in to explain the pictures and added much to the interest of the entertainment by his clear descriptions.

The Clergy are very grateful indeed to all those whose kind thoughtfulness led them to send remembrances. The Clergy House was well supplied with the good cheer of the season; individuals were also remembered in affectionate ways. For it all we are grateful and pray for God's blessing upon all the faithful souls who acted as His stewards.

THE ENDOWMENT FUND.

The present total of the Endowment Fund is $12,199.23. Of this $6,000 is invested and brings a yearly income of $240. The balance will be invested as soon as satisfactory securities are to be had. At present it brings at ordinary interest about $180 a year. By the terms of the trust deed, all income is added to the principal until the yearly income reaches $1,000; then one-fifth of it may be taken by the Vestry, the other one-fifth being reinvested. At prevailing rates of interest, a principal of at least $25,000 will be required before any portion of the income may be paid into the parish treasury. It is encouraging to realize that nearly half of this sum is at hand, as an indication that Christian people love this parish as a place where the whole Christian faith is appreciated and taught; and that they desire to secure the permanency of such a blessed privilege. The Endowment Fund was started just after the successful crusade for the ransom of the church from its long-standing debt. It was Tuesday evening, January 11, 1898, that the Vestry formally executed the deed of trust establishing the fund. The first payment to the trustee, i. e., the Pennsylvania Company for Insurances on Lives and Granting Annuities, consisted of $2,000 in investments and $169.46 in cash. Since then the fund has grown steadily, and there are some legacies outstanding, which will considerably increase the total. It was the openly-expressed hope of the late rector that the parish never would be obliged to use any of the income until it reached $5,000 a year, so that all interest might be steadily added to the principal. The fund was intended to provide for future contingencies; such as change of neighborhood, personal losses by death and removal. The constant westward trend of business on Arch street points to a time when S. Clement's may be the centre of a wholesale district. At present, there is less need to worry about this side of things, and it would seem as if energy might well be expended in one or two other directions. A full account of the Endowment Fund trust deed, as well as forms for legacies, was published in the magazine of January, 1898.

PARISH BUILDING FUND.

This is the youngest of the special funds, and now amounts to $690.50. This is a good beginning for a very important purpose. The parish needs a more adequate building for its guilds and meetings of various kinds. The inadequacy of the present facilities has been apparent for a long time. But in addition to this, there is another consideration which should have great weight. The parish is under a moral obligation to the city of Philadelphia to erect a new parish building as soon as it can. In the summer of 1902 an official inspection of the building was made, with unsatisfactory results. Two representations were made to the building inspectors; first, that any change in the building at that time would occasion loss to the parish in good building material, etc.; second, that it was the intention of the parish to erect a new building at the earliest possible date. In consideration of these things, permission was given for such repairs as were necessary. Consequently the new parish building is not merely a matter of parochial convenience.

THE SANCTUARY FUND.

The first mention of the Sanctuary Fund is in the Magazine of April, 1900, where $16.50 is acknowledged for Chancel Repair and a brief statement is made concerning the Sanctuary. Part of it is as follows: "The sanctuary walls of the Church are in a very bad condition, the paint and plaster are coming off, and it does not require a very close inspection to show the dilapidated condition. There is $16.50 on hand, but to make any proper repairs will require a very large sum of money, because we do not want to do anything except it be in a very proper way. A beginning might be made by putting a marble wainscot on the lower part of the wall. This would seem to be an appropriate memorial of the work that the Society of S. John the Evangelist did in the parish (for which one person has made an offering.")

The fund grew steadily, but in the Magazine of January, 1901, the idea of making it an S. S. J. E. memorial was abandoned because no special interest was shown. At that time the Magazine said: "We hope only greater efforts may be made to increase the fund for finishing the walls with marble, putting in stone Credence, Piscina and Sedilia. One of these might well serve as an appropriate memorial of S. S. J. E. Eventually we would wish to have a stone Altar and Baldachino after the pattern of the one at San Clemente, Rome."

March, 1901, the Magazine said, "The enrichment of the Sanctuary ought next to claim our loving thought and care. Marble and mosaic should be the chief materials; a wainscot of marble might be a beginning, then in turn, Credence, Piscina, Sedilia, upper walls, roof, steps, Altar, Baldachino, together with a proper scheme of lighting and ventilation."

The last mention of the subject is in the July number of this year. "It is a great disappointment that the work on the Sanctuary cannot be begun this year, certain necessary drawings not having been completed." The "necessary drawings" were ground plans and elevations of San Clemente, Rome, which the Rector had written for and was eagerly awaiting.

So it is evident how much thought was being given this subject. Indeed, nothing was so often mentioned among plans for the future as the enrichment of the Sanctuary and the rearrangement of organ and so on which would be required. And now there are $4,880.32 for this purpose. It is not a trust fund in the legal sense in which the Endowment Fund is; but it certainly is a trust fund in a moral sense. It is money given for doing a definite thing in a definite way, and that is, the refinishing of the Sanctuary of S. Clement's Church after the pattern of the Sanctuary of San Clemente, Rome. Faithful people have given money because they clearly understood that this was the general plan to be followed. The plan was not fully worked out in detail; there were many things to be settled, but the preliminary working drawings had been sent for, and if they had arrived the fulfilment of this cherished hope would have been begun. In consideration of these things it would, in a clear sense, be a betrayal of trust not to go on with the matter as it has been started. On that basis, the people of the congregation need have no hesitation in contributing to the fund, for they may be assured that whatever is right will be done.

The Altar Guild will be glad to receive donations for the purchase of materials for a set of vestments for China, also toward the cost of vestments for poorer parishes, where opportunity is given for obedience to Prayer Book rule and Holy Communion at least on Sundays and Holy Days.

The only money available for renewal of the parish vestments is such offerings as may be made at marriages and occasional gifts of a few of the people.

THE REV. R. A. J. SUCKLING ON "ROMAN UNITY."

The Rev. R. A. J. Suckling, vicar of S. Alban's, Holborn, London, in a series of remarkable lectures, delivered one on Roman Unity. This, he said, was the most powerful weapon in the armory of Roman controversialists, who contrasted the "High," "Low," and "Broad" divisions of the Anglican Church with their own alleged unity. But the divisions of Anglicans were much exaggerated, for all held the same creed, while the unity of the Roman Church was mere superficial uniformity. This uniformity had been obtained by terrible processes of bloodshed and forgery, which had stained the history of Christendom. The Anglican Church and other communities calling themselves Christian had also persecuted, but they now repented of their error; but the Roman Church expressed no contrition for her merciless massacres and infamous Inquisition, and, indeed, how could she consistently do so when her proud boast is that she never changes? Again the Greek Bishops in their reply to the Encyclical of Pope Leo XIII in 1895, said: "For though the Papal Church now admits the spurious and counterfeit nature of those decretals, on which her pretensions were then founded, yet she refuses stubbornly to return to the canons and decrees of the Aecumenical Councils." Moreover, the laxity in our part of the Church Universal had certain compensations. An eminent Frenchman expressed his amazement that the Church of England had produced two successive orthodox Christian Prime Ministers, like Mr. Gladstone and Lord Salisbury, who could not possibly have been produced under the system of the Church of Rome.—Guardian.

CHILDREN'S HONOR ROLL.

During the last Guild Year, the following children have been regular at the 9.15 Mass on Sundays: No absences, Alice Fortune, Clara Fortune, Elizabeth Fortune, Elsie Forrester, William Fortune. One absence: Christina Boyle, Phoebe Roach, Margaret Welch, Helen Wennard, Charles Fullerton. Three absences: Masie Bambach, Olive Daniels, Edward Boyle. Four absences: Florence Roach, Bernice Herbert, Louis Ehlers, Charles Perkis, Herbert Daniels. Each of these received a special prize.

The Crucifixes, prizes for the best examination in the Catechism, were awarded to Lilian Pile and John McLauchlan, at the Catechism fete on the feast of the Circumcision.

VESTRY RESOLUTIONS.

The Secretary of the Vestry has kindly furnished the following resolution:

At a special meeting of the Vestry of St. Clement's Church, held on the 8th day of December, A. D. 1904, the following resolutions were unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That in the death of our late Rector, the Reverend George Herbert Moffett, this Parish mourns a faithful and devoted Priest, whose zeal in the work of his high calling was fervent and unceasing. His sympathy and kind offices were always at the service of those who were sick or in sorrow, and that ministry to which his life was consecrated found him at all times a ready and faithful servant. He truly exemplified his faith by his works. And when his summons came, he was at his post, and in the service of that communion he loved so well.

Resolved, That on behalf of themselves and of the parishioners of St. Clement's Church, the Vestry record this testimony to his worth and services. And though he has fallen, and at the noonday of his life, his memory will abide, and his example will be an incentive and stimulus to those who loved him, as well as to his successors in the high office which he filled with so much devotion and with such successful results.

HENRY FLANDERS,
F. D. WETHERILL,
E. C. CLAY,
Committee.

PARISH NOTES.

The Missionary Box was packed and sent during the week of the 15th.

The Rev. W. W. Hance will assist in the work of the parish until the coming of a new rector.

Mr. Sears will play a Widor recital in the Church on Saturday, February 18th, at four P. M.

The anniversary Mass for the repose of the soul of Annie Munroe was said on Friday the 20th.

The money in hand for Sacred Vessels for China amounts to $28.50. This, of course, is not enough.

The Christmas supper and entertainment for the men of the choir was held on Wednesday evening, January 18th.

Candles will be blessed on Candlemas Day (February 2), in accordance with ancient custom. Persons may leave them beforehand, the parcels being plainly marked, and obtain them later.

The Mission House, Cherry and Lambert Streets, is now provided with a Bell telephone. The number is Locust 26-74A. Persons are not expected to call up the Sisters after eight o'clock in the evening.

The Chalice and Paten, made from old family silver for the Bishop of Salina, were sent in time to be used by a newly-ordained priest in a mission station, where there was absolutely nothing pertaining to a Church or Altar.

The sixty-fifth Annual Report of The Bishop White Parish Library Association shows an income of $1882.33. Thirty-three libraries have been distributed during the year; $32 was given by this Parish, which is represented by Mrs. William Halsey Wood.

It may be generally understood, that until further notice the 7.30 Mass on Wednesdays will be a Requiem for the repose of the soul of George Herbert Moffett, priest. On Thursday, February 16th, the Masses at 7.30 and 9.30 will be Requiems with the same intention, this being the three months' mind.

The annual dinner of the Guild of S. Vincent was held at the Clergy House on Wednesday evening, January 25th, and was a very enjoyable occasion. The Corporate Communion of the Guild was on Sunday the 22nd (S. Vincent's Day) at the seven o'clock Mass. The annual meeting for elections will be on February 19th.

The Catechism sent $10.00 to S. Mary's Home, Baltimore. The Rev. Mother writes in acknowledgment, "It comes in a time of great need and is most acceptable." S. Mary's Home is an institution under the care of the All Saints Sisters for little colored boys, and is a most worthy charity.

THE ORGAN.

A necessary part of the improvement of the Sanctuary will be the redisposition of the organ. No architectural designs would include it in its present position, and the plan for following San Clemente, Rome, will involve its removal. It would be possible either to move it into the gallery, or to arrange an organ chamber in the tower; in either case, leaving a small choir organ above the choir and having the console in the choir. This would restore the lines of the Church, and make valuable space available.

Such a removal would amount to rebuilding the organ, and this is much needed, aside from other considerations. The tone and quality need no improvement, but the mechanical action is much worn and therefore is noisy. The tuners say that it is rapidly deteriorating. Also, the pipes themselves are dirty, and need a thorough cleaning. Such an operation would cost a considerable sum; it is ordinarily calculated that it takes half the original cost of an instrument to rebuild it. The work might well be done very soon, perhaps next summer, if there were any funds for it, but there are none. So it must wait. It will be far more economical to put the present instrument into proper condition and a proper place, than to build an entirely new one. For so many years it was the finest organ in Philadelphia, that it will be a pity for it to be superseded, as long as there remains opportunity of restoring it by rebuilding and a few additions.

FOR THE FEAST OF THE PURIFICATION.

"And with this same cheer of mirth and joy our good Lord looked down on the right side and brought to my mind where our Lady stood in the time of His Passion; and said, Wilt thou see her? And in this sweet word, it was as if He said, I wot well that thou wouldst see My blessed Mother; for, after Myself, she is the highest joy that I might show thee and most pleasance and worship to Me: and most she is desired to be seen of My blessed creatures. And for the high, marvelous, singular love that He hath to this sweet Maiden, His blessed Mother, our Lady Saint Mary, He showed her highly rejoicing as by the meaning of these sweet words; as if He said, Wilt thou see how I love her, that thou mightest joy with Me in the love that I have in her and she in Me?

And also (unto more understanding this sweet word) our Lord speaketh to all mankind that shall be saved, as it were all to one person, as if He said, Wilt thou see in her how thou art loved? For thy love I made her so high, so noble and so worthy; and this pleaseth Me and so will I that it doeth thee.

For after Himself, she is the most blissful sight.

But hereof am I not learned to long to see her bodily presence while I am here, but the virtues of her blessed soul: her truth, her wisdom, her charity; whereby I may learn to know myself and reverently dread my God. And when our good Lord had shewed me this, and said this word: Wilt thou see her? I answered and said: Yea, good Lord, I thank Thee; yea, good Lord, if it be Thy will. Often times I prayed this, and I weened to have seen her in bodily presence, but I saw her not so. And Jesus in that word shewed me ghostly sight of her: right as I had seen her before little and simple, so He shewed her then, high and noble and glorious, and pleasing to Him above all creatures.

And He willeth that it be known; that all those that please them in Him, should please them in her, and in the pleasance that He hath in her and she in Him. And to more understanding He shewed this example: As if a man love a creature singularly, above all creatures, he willeth to make all creatures love and have pleasance in that creature that he loveth so greatly."

(Revelations of Divine Love—Mother Julian of Norwich.)

CLERICAL STIPENDS.

In the West it is sometimes necessary to say Mass with a pewter cup. In the East it sometimes happens that a priest receives four times as much money as he should, has a luxurious rectory on a fashionable street, has three months' vacation in summer (with full pay), another house at the seashore and another salary for being there. In the West a priest gets up at two in the morning, drives twenty miles in the face of a piercing wind, to catch the only train which will take him to a mission station. In the East, it frequently happens that on a Saint's Day, either there will be no Mass at all, or it will be so late in the morning as to deprive faithful Christians of their Communions, if they are unable to fast. All of which indicates that poverty and spiritual efficiency may sometimes go together.

It is good for priests to be poor; in fact, for them to be very poor, so that they must deny themselves, so that they cannot indulge their whims and the luxurious tastes of undisciplined nature. And since few men will lay such poverty upon themselves, it is the providence of God that in many cases it is laid upon them by exterior circumstances. It may be made a source of strength and sanctity, if it is accepted in union with the poverty of our Lord.

No priest has a right to expect more than a bare living from the Church. The idea of paying him for his services should not enter into the consideration; the only reason he should take anything at all is that he may have the necessities of life and work. His service is rendered primarily to God; when the idea of rendering it to a vestry or a congregation becomes predominant, his spiritual tone is promptly lowered. Spiritual efficiency in the priesthood is bound to be in proportion, among other things, to the acceptance of the principle of poverty.

Another consideration is this: The Church is much too poor in this day to give any priest more than he actually needs for himself. It is too poor to support them in luxury; it is too poor to support wives and families. If a celibate clergy were not right by principle, it would be right on the basis of practical economy. The spectacle of priests publicly bewailing their inability to keep up their families would be pathetic, if there were any real call for it. But it is a situation which should never have arisen. The solution of it lay in the avoidance of the cause.

It is to the credit of any parish that it offers only a living, and not a salary; it means that the priests of God are assisted by their people to keep up their spiritual tone, and that they are regarded first as the ambassadors of Jesus Christ and not as the salaried head of an ecclesiastical corporation.

EVENING MASS.

The impropriety of celebrating Mass in the evening is something which most people instinctively feel, although they may not have any clearly defined arguments against the practice. Even those whose sentimentality gets the better of their judgment in the case of celebrating on Maunday-Thursday evening, would not often do the same thing on other occasions. Yet we sometimes are shocked to hear of afternoon and evening Masses, and then are still more shocked by the flimsy excuses given for them. Laymen should have their consciences so well instructed that they will not accept such a perversion of Church discipline, and will properly condemn the practice. The "Church Times" has a leader on the subject, and presents points which are of value.

"It is impossible to produce any express prohibition of Evening Communion, binding in England," and the same is true of the American Church. There are to-day and there always have been instances of Mass being said late in the day, but even in these cases the discipline of the Church is preserved, except in the English and American Churches. As a matter of tradition and antiquity, Evening Communion may be accounted for, but "it is a practical question that we have to face and it must be faced in a practical manner.

There are two practical objections of overpowering weight."

"The first has to do with the rule of the Church, that those who communicate, priest or people, shall be fasting." The origin of this rule is lost in antiquity. The early Christians were so in the habit of fasting that it probably never occurred to them to do otherwise themselves, or to suppose that anyone else would require a rule laid down to hold them to such a primal matter of bodily discipline. By the time of S. Augustine such a rule was laid down and has been steadily and uniformly in force ever since. People who disregard it are living contrary to the instinct and rule of the Church. "Fasting means, in this connection, one thing and one only. It means that the communicant shall have taken no food or drink since the beginning of the day. Our convention determines that the day begins at midnight. Therefore the fast also is reckoned from midnight." To fast from midnight until the next evening is not impossible; people sometimes do it; as for instance, on Ash Wednesday and Good Friday. But it is confessedly difficult, and does become almost impossible when people are engaged in their usual activities. Consequently, "for all ordinary purposes, the hour at which the Lord's Supper is celebrated must be one to which priest and people may reasonably be expected to prolong their fast. This consideration is fatal to the general introduction of Evening Masses."

The second objection is one which can be even more abundantly verified from our own experience. "For several hundred years the practice was unknown in England, whatever may have been the case elsewhere. . . The innovation of Evening Communion has coincided with a general decay of discipline, and the coincidence has not been one only of time, but also of cause and sentiment." . . . "The practice of Evening Communion stands condemned on the ground of its association with a general laxity. It is the fruit of self-will; it ministers to that religious slovenliness which gives the morning of Sunday to sloth, and devotes the fag-end of the day to a condescending observance of religion." With us in America, there does not seem to be the same disposition on the part of some to make it a common practice, but it is sometimes urged on the basis of expediency. Observation shows that the necessity of such expediency could be obviated by greater self-denial on the part of priest and people. And beyond all doubt, a true spiritual tone is secured by discipline and adherence to principle, not by expediency.

LIFE AND LETTERS OF HENRY PARRY LIDDON.

The new biography of Canon Liddon, by the Rev. J. O. Johnston, is a book of much vigor and strength. The character of the man depicted is such a charming one, that the reader is filled with admiration for him and the Church which bore him. One's confidence in the Anglican Church is assured, and his respect deepened by the narrative of Liddon's life and work. Difficulties were greater in his day than they are in ours; during his early years English-speaking people had far less certainty concerning the Catholicity of this branch of the Church than they have now. The claims of Rome were very specious and very insistent. On the other side, the attacks of German rationalism were fierce, and many fell from the Faith under their influence. In the midst of it all, Liddon, the spiritual child of Pusey and Keble, preserved the calm and strength which witness a life hidden in Christ. His character was one in which the spiritual life had permeated his whole being; there was nothing in deportment, thought or exterior personality, but what was a proper exponent of his spiritual development.

Chief among Liddon's qualities was his intellectual clarity. The human mind has power, when illuminated by the Holy Ghost, to see and hold divine truth, even in the midst of confusion and subtle attack. His was such a mind. It is well illustrated by his experience in Rome just after his graduation from Oxford and before his Ordination. He had the acquaintance of a pervert from the Anglican Church, who used every means to lure him into becoming a Roman. His emotions were worked upon, and his imagination cleverly appealed to; but he saw that this was the case and that these things did not affect the knowledge of his mind that the Anglican Church was truly the Catholic Church. So his allegiance was preserved and the tenor of his life kept in the right way. His zeal for souls was very great. He examined himself in all that he did as to whether he was really working for the good of souls. He seems to have lost no opportunity for reaching after any one with whom he came in contact. Like this zeal was his adherence to principle. Three successive years he declined Dean Stanley's invitation to preach in Westminster Abbey (no small honor), because he felt doing so would be a giving up of principle. Stanley and his friends represented things Liddon believed to be wrong; therefore, he could not conscientiously associate himself with them. In the same way, he would not give up his principle of not being a candidate for ecclesiastical preferment.

Out of such qualities as these, coupled with his learning and constant sense of the presence of God, came his marvelous power as a preacher: lucid, strong, convincing, practical. One need only to imagine S. Paul's Cathedral filled with the crowds who went to hear him, to know that God's truth spoken by a man of God finds its response in man's heart.

There was, after all, nothing especially unusual in Liddon's life; other men have possessed his gifts, sometimes in greater degree; others have been truly spiritual men, who lived in God. But in his case, God gave him a prominent position, such as He has not given to others of perhaps equal powers; and the secret of his greatness was that he simply and faithfully used his gifts for God's purposes, in an abiding spirit of self-abasement.

All Saints School, Germantown, under the care of the All Saints Sisters; a thoroughly good Church school—college preparatory—for girls. Is strongly recommended by the Clergy and others. Terms, $300 to $400 a year.

PARISH NOTES.

The list of Lenten services will be ready on Quinquagesima Sunday.

The Sister Frances Virginia is to be in charge of the mission work and Little Catechism from now on.

Special hours for Confessions on Shrove Tuesday will be announced and posted on the bulletin boards.

Ashes will be blessed on Ash Wednesday at 6 A. M., and will be imposed upon those who are minded to observe the ancient discipline.

The fiscal year ends March 24th. Arrears in pew rents and envelope pledges should be paid up at once, so that the Accounting Warden's books may be properly closed.

If there seemed to be any call for them, envelopes marked "Parish Building Fund" would be provided. At present they are not needed.

The Bishop has appointed the evening of Friday, May 19th, as the time for administering the Sacrament of Confirmation in this Church.

The sexton reports a small pocketbook, containing something over a dollar. It was found last Lent and has been awaiting a claimant ever since.

It is not customary to use flowers for the Altar at Requiems. It sometimes happens through inadvertence that they are left on the gradine from a previous Mass.

The Outer Sisters' Retreat will be, during the week of the first Sunday in Lent. The Retreat for the Guild of the Holy Cross will be on the second Sunday in Lent.

The severe storms found a few weak places in the roofs and gutters, but, fortunately, they were not many. Outlets were frozen and the water that came later found its way inside.

Mr. Sears' Widor recital on the 18th was well attended. It was of special interest, as adequately representing the compositions of a great musician too little known in this country.

The Bishop of Salina writes especially to thank the donor of the Chalice and Paten sent him for his jurisdiction. As the donor is still unknown to the present clergy, public acknowledgment is made.

The finances of the parish are in excellent condition, and everything is encouraging. The offerings have kept up steadily. The funds for special purposes grow in a normal and satisfactory way. The people of the parish understand their duties and try to fulfil them.

The Society for the Promotion of Church Work among the Blind reports a list of the books already made, with a balance on hand of $190.04. The Office of the Holy Communion, also Morning and Evening Prayer, may now be had in three different types. The report includes a sympathetic obituary of the Rev. G. H. Moffett, who, in a quiet way, did much to further the work.

PAROCHIAL RETREAT.

The parochial Retreat will be held as usual on Ash Wednesday, March 8th. Addresses will be given at 10, 12, 3 and 5.15. Breakfast at 8 A. M., and luncheon at 1 P. M. will be provided for those who give in their names by Tuesday morning.

This opportunity for a day's Retreat is a real spiritual privilege, and as many as possible should avail themselves of it. The greatest benefit is gained by beginning with the Mass, and staying all day. Strict silence should be kept throughout the day. The addresses are intended to furnish material for silent reflection and meditation. A good way is to note down the main points, or to keep them carefully in mind, and then make a meditation on them during the next period of silence. It is also a good plan to be provided with spiritual reading. All this gives God a special opportunity to speak to the soul: the day should not pass without trying to hear that Voice, and making some definite, practical resolution.

ENVELOPE SYSTEM.

This system is part of the authorized manner of supporting the parish. Its essence is that a person promises God to give so much a week. For aiding in the fulfillment of this promise, the parish provides a package of fifty-two envelopes, each bearing the same number, and dated for the Sundays of the fiscal year. Pledges are identified by the number. One of these envelopes is supposed to be placed in the alms basin at Mass every Sunday. One of the many advantages of the system is that if anyone has unhappily been absent from Church, the unused envelope stares him in the face as a reminder that he must give just the same, present or absent. It might help some people to overcome a certain inertia on Sunday mornings, if they made a rule with themselves to double their usual amount for "absent" Sundays.

The envelopes for the coming year will be ready Sunday, March 19th. It is hoped that many more will feel disposed to use them. Applications should be made to the clergy.

MEN'S RETREAT.

The attention of the men in the parish is called to their opportunity for sharing in the day's Retreat, which will be held, as usual, on Midlent Sunday. The date this year is April 2nd, and the notice is given now, lest the notice in the April Magazine should be too late for some to make arrangements. This is an opportunity which should be greatly valued. All the men are welcome: it is only asked that they hand in their names to the clergy a few days beforehand, so that adequate provision for them may be made. Any who wish further information as to the Retreat, its method, meaning and so on, should not hesitate to consult the clergy.

MISSIONARY BOX.

The priest in Fond du Lac to whom was sent the missionary box writes thankfully and appreciatively: "The box arrived safely and it was a splendid one, everything bespoke the kindness and earnest sympathy which you all have in the pioneer work of God's Holy Church. Kindly extend thanks to all. It is truly helpful, amid the storms of life, to feel a silent power reaching out to cheer and to encourage."

The labor of establishing and maintaining the full faith and discipline of the Church is arduous, and those who are so striving need the alms and prayers of those whose privileges are assured.

THE LENTEN RULE.

Each person should begin Lent with a definite rule, covering special devotions, prayers, almsgiving, fasting and other mortifications. The rule as to fasting is to eat no flesh meat on Wednesdays, Fridays, Ember Saturday and Easter Even, and only once on other days. Sundays are not counted in the forty days. The principle of fasting is to refuse the body full satisfaction in food, whether it be fish or flesh.

As to Almsgiving, one should give at least double the ordinary amount, since so few give all they really can afford; and there should be a steady refusal to spend upon personal pleasure, so that one may be able to make a generous thank-offering for our Lord's Resurrection.

Further suggestions, among which some may find opportunity for devotion and self-denial, are:

To hear Mass each day, if possible.

To receive Holy Communion more frequently.

To deepen contrition by more frequent Confessions.

To adopt some mortification which will act upon the besetting sin.

To give more time to meditation and spiritual reading.

To attend no theatres, operas, balls or parties.

To cultivate a habit of silence.

LENT.

"To increase in the knowledge and love of God." This is one way to express the purpose of life, and a very illuminating way at that. The purpose is a standing one—not temporary, not occasional. But because our minds are frivolous and our wills wayward, it is frequently necessary to reshape that purpose and drive it home. The Church provides a time for doing this in her season of Lent. She provides a time for finding out what we are doing, energetically correcting it, if it is wrong, energetically furthering it, if it is right. So it is not merely a time for building up one's character, but for learning to know God better and to love Him more. Its observances are instruments for that end. They are specified duties and obligations, tested by centuries of experience, having about them nothing vague, nothing experimental.

How do these things, classed together as prayer, fasting, alms giving, help us to know and love God? They help in this way, that they are a reasonable, practical way of taking the Cross into our lives. They are the things our Lord Himself did. They made up part of His Cross; and they will bring us to the sublime knowledge of that Cross. If we are to be His disciples, that is, if we are to learn of Him, we must take the Cross and follow Him. As we gradually learn the Cross, we learn Him, and we love Him: and that love and knowledge open to us the infinite treasures of Heaven. For consider:

We know God only through Jesus Christ, His Son. We are able to know Him because we are members of that Son's Body, recipients of His Holy Spirit. "In Him dwelleth all the fulness of the Godhead bodily." (Col. ii : 9.) If we know Him we will know the fulness of the Godhead. If we possess Him we possess that fulness. We love God only through Jesus Christ. The complete expression of God's eternal merciful love, He was sent into this world that through Him we might be sure that God still loved us, and so return that love. "Herein is love, not that we loved God, but that He loved us and sent His Son to be the propitiation for our sins." "We love Him because He first loved us" (S. John iv : 10, 19).

Is it not clear that we are to increase in the knowledge and love of God, only by "the royal way of the Holy Cross"? Then let us seize eagerly upon the mortification and prayer of Lent as tried means for getting that Cross into our lives. Once having it, let us give up everything else first.

"The penitent must come to Him in His humiliation—follow Him step by step in His endurance—His Cross and Passion. Then shall he follow Him in the glory of His Ascension. They who will not seek Christ in His lowliness cannot find Him in His glory. We must know Him as taking away our own sins, ere we can rejoice to know Him as giving to us the glory of the Divine Sonship."

MORTIFICATION.

Mortification is the technical name for the process whereby we get ourselves ready for God. Our souls and bodies, with their irregularities and sins, with all the unhappy results of the past, are not as fit as they should be; they need thorough cleansing and training. So mortification is the continual sweeping and garnishing of our life for the Divine King, Who is to dwell in us. Looked at in this light, it becomes something more than enduring unpleasant things or inflicting them upon ourselves; it becomes a pleasant task, with a definite end in view. Just as nothing is too much trouble in making ready for the coming of a friend we dearly love, so nothing will be too much trouble to make ourselves ready for union with God.

This may involve some suffering of body and spirit: it probably will. But that will not matter. What difference should it make to us whether we have food or sleep, whether we are cold or hot, whether we are in pain or out of it, provided we have God? To be sure, these things do disturb us now, but it is against just such things, amongst others, that we are to strive in mortifying ourselves. If we had over our physical nature such a control as that, temptations, both of body and mind, would be resisted with surprising ease.

God creates such difficult conditions for us to discipline us. He knows it will be good for us to meet them; so He prepares them for us. We must co-operate in this by accepting them as from Him, by offering them to Him, and then by ignoring them. If we focus our attention on the things themselves, we shall find them painful; but if we fix our thoughts on God, then all things will be light and easy for His sake.

God knows the diseases of our souls which need healing. He, accordingly, provides some mortification for us. But in addition to that, He expects us to show a zeal for revenge upon ourselves on account of our sins, and so we are to inflict some mortification upon ourselves: deprivation of food, of pleasures, rising earlier, talking less, praying more, working harder, giving more. Whatever it may be, the principle we are to follow is that the mortification shall be of a kind which will reach our particular besetting sins. If we thus aid in the work of preparing ourselves for God, it will give our prayers and spiritual life new vitality. Ability to pray is directly proportionate to our degree of mortification.

IN MEMORIAM.

George Herbert Moffett.

Among the many proofs which God has given us of the presence of the divine life in the Anglican Communion, none is more cogent than the many holy priests in whose lives Christ was made manifest. Among these is George Herbert Moffett, the late rector of St. Clement's Church in this city. And we, the members of the Catholic Club of Philadelphia, desire to place on record our grateful appreciation of the example of priestly self-sacrifice which he has given us.

His ideal of the priesthood was high; it was no less than that perfection of holiness which the Great High Priest has set before all his priests when He said, "Follow Me," and than which there can be nothing higher. To that ideal he tried to attain by the complete surrender of all that he was and of all that he had. And in the exercise of the priesthood and of the pastoral office he found all the helps possible to perfection. His life was one of stern although unseen poverty. Having food and raiment he was therewith content, and every penny beyond went to the Church's work. His heart was filled with the thought of his Divine Master and of the souls which God had committed to his care, so that it had no room for anything else. If at times he seemed reserved, it was a reserve begotten of zeal for Jesus and for souls. Those who knew him as their friend or pastor experienced the tenderness of his heart, and saw how completely the Divine love dominated him and how its fires were slowly consuming him. And he had the obedience of his Master. None were more loyal than he to that part of the Church Catholic in which God had placed him; none more obedient to its representatives. The circumstances of his life were not without much pain and humiliation, but he accepted them all submissively as the expression of the will of God. And that obedience identified him more and more with the Divine will, and helped him to look forward with desire and confidence to the unveiled presence of God. It was while on his way to the altar that he at length met his Master face to face, and with Him he passed from death unto life.

A life so consecrated in following the steps of his Divine Master was the secret power which gave to Father Moffett's work for souls that reality and spiritual force which characterized his parochial administration in St. Clement's Church in this city, and made it a notable memorial of piety and zeal.

May God speedily number him with His saints in Glory everlasting, and may He grant unto us that we too may walk worthy of our priestly vocation.

Minute passed at the January meeting of the Catholic Club.

ON RECEIVING THE BLESSED SACRAMENT.

Many times it is helpful to be reminded of things once learned, but partially forgotten. The following suggestions as to the manner of receiving the Blessed Sacrament are made with this end in view, and also with a hope of helping some whose instruction was perhaps incomplete.

One should never sit in the presence of the Blessed Sacrament, except for reasons of physical infirmity. Adoration of our Lord is expressed bodily either by standing or by kneeling. In the East, the faithful are accustomed to stand, but in the West, the ordinary convention is to kneel. Kneeling here, and at all times, means placing both knees upon the floor,—not sitting upon a seat and bending forward.

When it is time to go to the Altar rail, one should start promptly, genuflecting on leaving the seat, and again just before kneeling at the rail. Genuflecting means bending the right knee so that it lightly touches the floor and then immediately rising. Genuflections are made when moving about an Altar when the Blessed Sacrament is upon it; on other occasions, a bow suffices.

As the priest always begins communicating the people at the epistle end of the rail, go as far as possible to the right if there are any vacant places. It is wise to condense one's self into the smallest possible space if the rail be crowded, and kneel upright. There is no special devotion in crouching, and it increases the difficulties of the priest. It is a pious custom to sign one's self with the cross before and after being communicated in each kind.

For receiving our Lord's Body, hold the ungloved right hand open, the palm upward and flat, resting it upon the palm of the left hand. Hold the hands well up toward the face, not resting them upon the rail. Convey the Host immediately to the mouth, with the utmost care, reverence and recollection.

For receiving our Lord's Blood, hold the back straight, and the head up; assist the priest in guiding the Chalice to the lips by taking hold of the front base of the Chalice with the right hand. This should be done quietly and without any haste or force. The hand should never be put upon the bowl of the Chalice. The smallest portion of the Chalice suffices, but the ministering priest is often worried as to whether a person has been fully communicated. This arises from several causes: One, because people crouch down at the rail; another, because they do not guide the Chalice; a third (and the most frequent and distressing), because women wear large hats and do not hold up their heads. People may always be sure, if they are not properly communicated from the Chalice, that the priest is quite as much concerned about it as they are. He will appreciate whatever they can do to help him. Men wearing moustaches should use every pains to brush them back, and neither they nor the lips should ever be wiped with the fingers or handkerchief.

Remain kneeling until the next person has been communicated: then rise, genuflect, proceed to the pew by the way causing least confusion to those coming forward, and genuflect again before kneeling in one's place.

These matters here spoken of have been found by experience to afford the simplest and most reverent way of receiving the Blessed Sacrament. They are an adequate expression of the outward reverence which should accompany this highest act of Christian privilege: and they form no hindrance to interior recollection and devotion.

PARISH NOTES.

Please do not forget to fill out and send in your Easter card.

There will be no sermon at Solemn Evensong on Easter Day.

Palms will be blessed as usual on Palm Sunday at 6.30 A. M.

The office of the Guild of the Holy Cross will be omitted this month.

Spohr's oratorio, "Calvary," will be sung in the church on the evening of Tuesday, April 11th, at 8 o'clock.

More of the insurance on the church property has been turned into perpetual policies.

The music for Easter Day will be Gounod's St. Cecilia, with orchestral accompaniment.

The Story of the Cross will be sung at the Litany service on Passion Sunday and Palm Sunday.

The gallery will not be open on Palm Sunday or Easter Day. Persons are requested not to try to evade this rule.

Pew rents are due in advance April 1st. Checks should be made payable to St. Clement's Church, and may be sent by mail.

Donations are asked for the Easter flowers. They may be put in the envelopes or in the corridor box, marked for the purpose.

The Rev. C. C. Quin has assisted at the Church of the Annunciation each week by singing the Litany on Wednesday evenings.

The annual election of vestrymen will take place on Easter Monday, April 24th; the polls will be open from 12 M. to 2 P. M.

Envelopes for the Parish Building Fund having been asked for, they will now be found in the corridor with the other special fund envelopes.

The Retreat for the Guild of the Holy Cross was held Sunday, March 26th, instead of March 19th. It was given by the Rev. W. H. McClellan, C. S. S. S.

Congregations at the Stations of the Cross on Friday nights have been good. F. Powell says of the Stations that in the experience of the Society of St. John the Evangelist, it is an especially "converting service."

The annual Retreat for Outer Sisters was given at the Mission House, Mar. 13th-17th, by the Rev. F. C. Powell, S. S. J. E. Fr. Powell also very kindly gave most helpful instruction at Evensong during the same week.

The parochial Retreat on Ash Wednesday was well attended. Some came from out of town, that they might spend the day with God, in union with this parish. Two other parishes in the city have introduced a day's Retreat in Lent. This is a true sign of spiritual growth.

Candidates for Confirmation should give in their names to the Clergy or Sisters. The attention of godfathers and godmothers is called to their obligation toward their godchildren. Children should be brought to the Bishop at an early age. Fallacious ideas about children not being old enough have often chilled childhood's piety and wrought evil effects in after years.

At the January meeting of the Guild of St. Vincent, the following resolution was passed:

Resolved, That we, the members of the Guild of St. Vincent, desire to record our sincere sorrow at the death of our rector, the Rev. George Herbert Moffett, who was suddenly called to rest November twelfth, nineteen hundred and four. The influence of his life and advice while at St. Clement's Church has always been with the Guild of St. Vincent, and helped them in their Christian duty.

He will always be in our memory as a self-sacrificing, true priest. May he rest in peace.

ALFRED G. HOLLOWAY,
FRANK B. HOMAN,

EASTER CARDS.

It is especially important this year that every member of the parish should fill out and hand in an Easter card. These cards serve three purposes. First, they indicate about how many communicants may be expected at each Mass. Second, they are a means of identifying people, of securing correct addresses and of noting changes in address. Third, they show what communicants are in good standing.

The communicant list is revised after Easter, and those who are not known to have made their Communions within the year past cannot be considered in good standing. So their names cannot be included in the report to the Registrar of the Diocese; but according to Canon, must be removed from the list.

As the present clergy are not acquainted with the circumstances and history of each individual, as was the late rector, the Easter cards will play a very important part in keeping the list correct. They are particularly essential in the cases of parishioners unable to come to the parish church for their Communions.

EASTER CONFESSIONS.

The hours of the Clergy for hearing Confessions during Holy Week will be as follows:

Rev. C. C. Quin—Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday, 11 to 12, 4 to 5, 7 to 8; Good Friday, 3 to 5, 7 to 9; Easter Even, 9.30 to 12, 2 to 5, 7 to 10.

Rev. F. D. Ward—Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday, 11 to 12, 4 to 5, 7 to 8; Good Friday, 4 to 5, 7 to 9; Easter Even, 9.30 to 12, 2 to 5, 7 to 10.

Rev. W. A. McClenthen—Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday, 11 to 12, 4 to 5, 7 to 8; Good Friday, 3 to 5, 7 to 9; Easter Even, 9.30 to 12, 2 to 5, 7 to 10.

It is hoped that many will take advantage of the earlier days and not put off their Confessions until the last moment.

EASTER DAY.

Members of the congregation will be admitted for the Solemn Mass through the doors of the Parish Building until 10.30. At that hour the main corridor doors will be opened.

Communicants of the parish are reminded of the privilege and benefit of their Easter Communions and are warned to prepare themselves, that they may with proper dispositions receive the Sacred Body and Blood of Christ to their soul's health and salvation.

Real preparation includes thorough self-examination and confession of sins before God's priest. This is the one way of proving sorrow for sin, of testifying the purpose of amendment. A perfect act of contrition may be made without making a confession, but it is not likely.

ALMSGIVING.

The secret of having money to give to God through the Church lies in not spending it in self-indulgence. If men, women and children gave a tenth part of what they spend for their own pleasure, Church treasuries would be full. The fact remains that they do not do so, and Lent is a time of year for reminding them of their obligation.

Of course, the true basis of giving is one-tenth of the whole income at all times, and more on special occasions. But as one observes the way in which people spend their money, such an ideal standard seems almost like a dream. Here and there are found faithful souls who arrange their expenditures on that true basis, but they are most rare. So there would be a start toward a better condition and the ultimate realization of the standard, if people would give one-tenth of what their pleasures cost.

Any child can do that much. Any boy, no matter how small his weekly wage, can give to the church a tenth part of what he spends merely on himself. Ask an average boy, earning say five dollars a week, if he spends a dollar a week on himself, and he will say "at least that." Then does he give ten cents every week to the church? Not often; unless, indeed, he has been instructed about it. Consequently, as in many other matters, what is needed is instruction. Children should be taught to give not merely the extra coin the father hands out to put on the plate, but something out of their own little store, something they will miss because they might have spent it upon themselves. Then when later years come they will realize that their own pleasures must not absorb every dollar.

As children need to be instructed, so do also older people. Much of the prevailing laxity arises from thoughtlessness and carelessness. The attention of men, and young men in particular, should be called to the matter. When one knows how much they spend on self-indulgence and idle gratification, and how they give practically nothing to God, the future, both for them and for the Church, is dubious. It is a disgrace to them to leave all the religious generosity to the women. It is to the young churchmen of to-day that the Church must look for its support thirty and forty years hence. There will not be time enough for them to learn their duty unles they begin now.

oneself strikes down to the very roots of the moral character. It develops a

This principle of not spending upon strength and a fibre which are needed in the fight against the world and the flesh. It developes an unselfishness which vitalizes every family and social relation. Most of all, it makes distracted minds think about God; it makes worldly hearts feel the prior claims of God. It breaks the sordid bonds which hamper weak souls. It is the way in which worldly possessions may be signed with the Cross. People should stop and consider wether they cannot give God a share in their pleasure money, and then rise from that to the true basis of giving Him His due share in all they have.

PRAYER.

Christian life is in its essence a life of prayer: that is to say, a life of constant communication between a rational, dependent creature and an omnipotent, omniscient God. The particular manner of the communication is of little importance, as compared with the fact itself. And this fact is, that it is possible for every baptized person to be in constant intercourse with God. This is tremendous, awe-inspiring, beyond all words. Consequently, any one who is not striving to realize this life of prayer is living in a stifling, self-inflicted deprivation worse than any human slavery ever known. It is worth while for people to rouse up to a sense of what they are doing to themselves in not being persons of prayer. They need to be awakened to a sense of the immensity of the privilege in belonging to God, and in having the power to communicate with Him.

This privilege and power is not a one-sided thing. We can receive messages from God, as well as send them to Him. As a matter of fact, what God does is more important than what we do. He is directing all our activities, interior and exterior, toward Himself, and this is prayer in the most far-reaching sense. As God draws us away from the world by mortification, so He draws us to Himself by prayer. And "prayer itself is the most effectual mortification, for in and by it the most secret risings of inordinate passions are contradicted, the mind and superior will are wholly abstracted and elevated above nature, so that for the time all passions are quieted, and all creatures, especially ourselves, transcended, forgotten, and in a sort annihilated."

A momentary glance at our own experience will show us plainly enough that such prayer as is here described is something different from what we ordinarily describe by that name. This is that true prayer, in which God transcends our activities and holds us in Himself. It forces us to realize that there are unexplored heights and depths of prayer which we have never even approached. What we know of the possibilities of the communion between God and a soul represents about as much of the possibilities in prayer as the reasoning of a child represents the reasoning of a philosopher. And yet no comparison is adequate, because the union of the soul with God—which is what prayer is—will go on increasing throughout eternity.

So, as we struggle along with our little efforts at union with God in prayer, we may at least try to know what a future there is for the well-disposed soul who co-operates with Him in this incomprehensible work. Prayer does not consist alone in reading to God words out of a book, no matter how devoutly it may be done. It is something more than working through three points of a mediation, with a fitting resolution at the end, no matter how tender the emotion, or how gratifying the flavor of such prayer. These things are only preparation. As such they should be carefully done, but not rested in as a final end.

Once more, the main part of prayer is not what we do, but what God does. As we grow into more perfect union with Him, He will continually do more so that the soul will become more and more silent, not disturbing itself with imaginations of God, or discoursings about Him, but immediately clinging to Him. The will and the affections will adhere to Him and He will communicate Himself to us, so that, indeed, "all creatures, especially ourselves, will be transcended, forgotten, annihilated."

SOME THOUGHTS ABOUT LENT.

Lent is a time of self-denial, but it should also be a time of special delight, the tranquil delight of a soul rejoicing in the presence of God. There is, indeed, a spurious form of religious excitement popular at such a season, but needing to be carefully avoided. We must take care that we are really drawing nearer to God by all the practices upon which we enter. Sermons and Passion music are helpful within certain limits, but they need to be subordinated to the great end of the season, which is the prostration of the soul in penitence before God.....

We must take care that whatever we hear shall supply us with a law of life, so that we may form some practical rules suitable for our own position. The same sermon may suggest to persons in various conditions of life very various rules, and those rules should be renewed with care as a Lenten pledge of Divine service. If they are rules suitable to us under our ordinary circumstances, we must see that the habit formed during Lent does not slip from us when Easter comes.....

Our meditations at this season will naturally be occupied with the thought of Christ's sufferings beneath the assaults of the evil one. Satan will very likely be more busy now than at any other time to assail us in our meditations. He desires to separate us from Christ. We must come in our helplessness to give ourselves up to Christ, so that we may be sustained by His love. We must recognize His personal love to ourselves, while in His divine calmness He provides the grace whereby He holds us to Himself. We cannot cling to Him save by watching how He holds us to Himself.—From The Cowley Evangelist.

INCENSE.

The use of incense in the Christian worship of Almighty God, is a thing right in itself and stands upon a firm basis of Biblical authority and Catholic tradition. It is at present a feature of the Liturgy in every part of the Church, and is peculiar to no one part. Its use belongs primarily to that which is the central act of worship in the religion of the Incarnation, i. e., the Mass; it is thence extended to other offices and services, because in them the Incarnation is the main thought.

In the Old Covenant, the use of incense was prescribed to the Jews directly by God. It was an important and significant part of their worship. That its use in Christian worship is in accord with Biblical authority is shown by two facts. Before the ending of the Jewish Dispensation, Malachi prophesied, "In every place incense shall be offered unto My name and a pure offering." This "pure offering" is understood by Catholic commentators to refer to the offering of our Lord's Body and Blood in the holy sacrifice of the Altar. As incense is directly coupled with it by the inspired prophet, it seems clear that such a use in Christian worship was foretold. Again, the eternal worship of God in Heaven pictured to us in the Revelation of St. John the Divine, has as an integral part the use of incense. So it will be clear that it is in no way repugnant to the divine revelation in the Scriptures.

Its use in the Catholic Church became universal just so soon as the Church was freed from the terrors and trammels of heathen persecution, and could order her external ritual according to her mind. Before that time incense was not used in the Church to any extent, although, as no less a scholar than Dr. Sanday says, "It would, therefore, be precarious to say that incense was certainly not in use in the Church for even two hundred years after the Apostolic times, not to speak of 'at least three hundred.'"

The use of incense is Scriptural, primitive and catholic, and it is for these reasons that it is used in this parish and others.

When we come to consider the meaning of incense as used in the different parts of the Liturgy and in different services, it is best to arrive at a general principle, which will apply in each case. We may gain such a principle by these considerations. Incense in itself signifies prayer, and is also the symbol of the acceptance and blessing by God of human worship and sacrifice. Incense in Christian use symbolizes the one prayer which makes all other prayer valid and meritorious. This is the high priestly intercession of our Lord, which He ever liveth to make for us at the right hand of His Father in Heaven.

And this all-embracing, all-prevailing intercession makes meritorious and acceptable, not only prayer, but all that we are and have, from our immortal souls down to the metal we shape into a censer. Incense, therefore, is the symbol of our Lord's perpetual intercession and sacrifice, through which alone we and ours have access to God, and are sure of acceptance. Since the holy sacrifice at our altars is the earthly presentation of that same eternal sacrifice which the Incarnate Son of God made on Calvary, and presents in Heaven, the use of incense at the Mass is peculiarly fitting. So by the natural extension of thought it is fitting at all special memorials of the Incarnation.

The application of this principle to the various uses of incense now becomes clear. "Each part of the divine service can be rightly used only so far as the use of it is given its place in the pleading of Christ's merits." So when each thing is censed, it is given its place in that pleading. "The altar, the cross, the book of the Gospels, the elements of bread and wine are all, with their different functions brought into the divine service." When they are censed, it shows that they are accepted and blessed by God, in and because of Christ's merits. The celebrant is censed; it shows that God wills to accept and bless his offering in and because of Christ's merits. The assisting clergy, the acolytes, the choir, the congregation all have their share in the offering, and when they are censed it shows that it is the will of God to accept and bless that share, because of the merits of Christ.

At a Requiem, the censing of the dead body signifies the acceptance and blessing of the completed life because of Christ. The principle holds again in processions. "The Procession is the Church's supplication, or thanksgiving, or act of praise;" whichever bearing any procession may have the incense signifies that God wills to accept and bless it, because of the merits of Christ. At the Magnificat, which is a very special memorial of the Incarnation, it signifies, as elsewhere, acceptance and blessing through the merits of the Incarnate Lord. So, in whatever connection incense may be used, this principle may be applied, and we realize that everything is enwrapped in the mystical cloud of Christ's intercession, and so taken up into Heaven.

From these considerations we gain a conception of the positive value of the use of incense. This has been accurately stated thus: "(i) It is a witness to the scope of the Incarnation in bringing the material and the human into union with the Divine work. (ii) It is a witness that the material and human cannot be acceptable to God except by virtue of the Divine blessing and of the merits of Christ."

PARISH NOTES.

The Sanctuary Fund now amounts to $5,172.73.

The Mass on Easter Even was said in St. John's Chapel.

The Paschal Candle was beautifully decorated by Miss Bloomfield.

The Catechism sent $15 as a Lenten offering to All Saints' Home, Baltimore.

The Credence Table for the new Sanctuary has been promised as a memorial.

The Diocesan Convention meets Tuesday, May 2d, in the Church of St. Luke and the Epiphany.

The dust cloths for the Altars have been renovated and a new one provided in St. John's Chapel.

The Rev. W. A. McClenthen has resigned his position on the clergy staff, the resignation taking effect May First.

There were 391 Communions made from our Altar on Easter Day. Many of the congregation made theirs elsewhere.

The Rev. R. H. Paine, the Rev. D. I. Odell, and the Rev. W. N. Clapp very kindly gave instructions at Evensong during Lent.

The Mission House Chapel is now provided with a gold pyx and chain, "In pious memory of George Herbert Moffett, Priest".

A handsome lace alb has been given to the parish for use on high festivals. It was blessed Easter Even and used Easter Day.

The Bishop Coadjutor will administer the Sacrament of Confirmation on the evening of May 19th. Prayers are asked for those being prepared.

The plan of singing the St. Cecilia music on Easter Day had to be given up, owing to the impossibility of securing the requisite outside help.

The boys of the Guild of St. Nicholas have promised a silver lavabo pitcher for St. Katharine's Altar, as a memorial of Mrs. G. Lewis Mayer.

The continual intercessions will be kept up as usual on the Rogation Days, May 29th, 30th, 31st. The schedule of hours will be arranged the preceding Sunday.

Tre Rev. F. M. W. Schneeweiss will come into residence May First. He will assist the present clergy until the coming of the new Rector, when he will have a permanent position on the staff of clergy.

The Missionary District of Salina is commended to the prayers and alms of the people, as a place where those in authority withstand worldly power and declare the Faith and discipline of the Church.

Spohr's "Calvary" was sung by the combined choirs of St. Paul's, Camden, and St. Clement's, on Tuesday, April 11th. A large congregation was present. The offering amounted to $72.34, and was applied to the expenses of the oratorio.

A handsome wrought-iron lantern has been hung in the south porch. It supplies much needed light for the steps there, and also serves as a guide for strangers trying to find their way into the Church. The lantern was designed by our dear friend Mr. Sellers, to whom the parish owes the Crypt Chapel, the Clergy House, the Confessionals, as well as much courteous help in many smaller things. The design was executed by the Lloyd-Garrett Company.

THE REV. C. S. HUTCHINSON.

The Rev. Charles Samuel Hutchinson has been elected by the parish vestry as Rector of St. Clement's, and he has accepted the election. Mr. Hutchinson has been for seven years Rector of St. Luke's, Chelsea, Mass., a parish where the faith has been taught, and the worship of the Church conducted with proper reverence. He expects to come into residence about Trinity Sunday, but will not enter upon the full responsibility until the Fall. He made a short visit at the Clergy House after receiving the call, and said Mass at St. Katherine's Altar, Tuesday, April 4th.

EASTER.

Easter Day was full of spiritual joy; the brightness of the clear spring day helped minds and bodies to realize the truths which were occupying souls, and everything bore witness to God's love and glory. There had been intense reality of preparation in the parish; Holy Week had been well kept; the clergy were kept busy hearing confessions; and the Church fabric, with all the ornaments, was made bright and beautiful. Loving souls met their risen Lord at His Altar, and the gladness of seeking "those things which are above" was shown in many ways.

The Sisters and clergy are very grateful for the many things, thoughtfully sent in, and for the many kindnesses received. The clergy desire especially to acknowledge with gratitude all the help which has lifted burdens and relieved responsibilities.

ALTAR FUND MEMORIAL TO THE REV. GEORGE HERBERT MOFFETT.

The offerings of the people are asked toward a fund for placing in the sanctuary of this Church a suitable Altar of stone or marble, as the memorial to the late Rev. George Herbert Moffett. Such offerings may be placed in the envelopes provided for the purpose, which are to be found in racks on the bulletin boards in the corridor; or they may be sent directly to the Accounting Warden.

This fund is to be known as the "Altar Fund—Memorial to the Rev. George Herbert Moffett", and is entirely distinct and separate from the fund now accumulating, known as the "Sanctuary Fund". It is essential that these two funds shall grow simultaneously, as it will be impossible to erect the memorial Altar until the renovation of the Sanctuary is at least under way. This matter of renovating the Sanctuary was very dear to the late Rector's heart; so that it is hoped a beginning of the work may soon be made. The completed Sanctuary and Altar will form a harmonious whole.

The splendid response of the people on Easter Day for the Altar Fund is most encouraging, especially as the matter had been before them less than two weeks. The sum in hand represents 138 separate contributions. There are many more who will want to give largely; many who, having given once, will give again. As the people value the memory of a life given for their sakes, and are grateful for his godly teaching and holy life, so they will give for this Altar in large numbers, and as generously as God has given to them. It will stand in after years as a worthy expression of love for a friend found faithful and as a witness that the souls whose names he bears in his bosom are loyal to our Lord and zealous for His Glory.

VESTRY ELECTION AND MEETING.

The annual election of the vestrymen for St. Clement's Parish was held on Easter Monday. The following communicants were elected to serve for the ensuing year: S. McKean Bayard, Francis M. Berry, Walter A. Buchanan, E. C. Clay, Harry Connelly, Henry Flanders, Greville E. Fryer, Romaine Keyser, G. Theo. Roberts, W. H. Wells, M. D., Francis D. Wetherill, Clinton Rogers Woodruff.

At the stated meeting for organization, held on Tuesday, April 25, Mr. S. McK. Bayard was re-elected Accounting Warden; Mr. Greville E. Fryer was appointed Rector's Warden; Mr. Romaine Keyser was re-elected Secretary.

The annual report is as follows:

JULIA DUNLAP MEMORIAL.

The plan which the late Rector had in mind for a memorial to Miss Dunlap was to erect a reredos for St. Katherine's Altar. She gave the Altar, and so it seemed fitting that a memorial should be connected with it. The idea was to put up an oak reredos to match the Altar, which would have panels filled in with paintings. The Rev. V. B. Lucas, who once spent some time here, and who has designed some of the parish vestments, has sent over plans drawn from his sketches, as suggestions for the woodwork. The paintings for the panels were to have been done by the Sister Catherine Ruth of All Saints.

There is on hand $282 for this memorial, which is not enough to warrant even a beginning of the woodwork, which would probably cost in the neighborhood of $400. If the woodwork would be finished as the memorial to Miss Dunlap, persons might be interested to put in the paintings as individual memorials. There were seven or nine of these planned for; the central panel at $250; six at $100, or five at $100 and four at $50. This matter is published because inquiry has been made as to what the late Rector's intentions were, and because, a special offering having been made to pay for them, the plans are now in the hands of the priest-in-charge, and may be seen by anyone interested.

PARISH NOTES.

On Ascension Day no Mothers' Meeting.

The Sea Shore Home will be opened on July 3d.

There will be no meeting of C. B. S. on Whitsunday.

The Rector will come into residence in the parish during Whitsun-Week.

The altar flowers for Ascension Day were given by Mr. Clinton Rogers Woodruff.

The Catechism, Little Catechism, and Bible Classes will be discontinued after Trinity Sunday.

The Strawberry Festival for the benefit of the Sea Shore Home will be held June 6th, at 8 P. M., in the Parish Building.

On week days after June 26th, the 7.30 Mass will be discontinued. The weekly Requiem will be said in the Crypt Chapel, at 6.45.

The newly confirmed are preparing for their First Communion on Whitsunday. They will make their Communion at the 7 o'clock Mass.

After Trinity Sunday the sermon on Sunday mornings will be at the end of High Mass, At 9.15 there will be a Low Mass and no instruction.

Members of the congregation who are absent all summer should remember to make their offerings either before they leave town or during their absence.

First Vespers of Corpus Christi on Wednesday, June 21st, at 5.15 P. M., in St. John's Chapel; annual meeting of St. Saviour's Ward, C. B. S., in lower vestry room immediately after.

Donations of fancy and other articles suitable for the annual fair for the Sea Shore Home, or money towards their purchase, are especially asked for. In comparison with former years, there is almost nothing in stock this year for the purpose.

The annual festival of the Confraternity of the Blessed Sacrament will be held on the Feast of Corpus Christi, Thursday, June 22d. Solemn High Mass will be sung in this church at 10.30 o'clock. The purpose of the annual festival is to bring together as many as possible of the Priests' Associates and lay members, and other interested friends in order that all may better realize their oneness in the objects of the Confraternity.

The congregation will surely feel most grateful to the noble and most generous donor of a new parish building for S. Clement's. It was much needed and it has come at a time when much anxious thought was weighing on the minds of the vestry (as the west wall of the present building was regarded by some as unsafe). how this was to be accomplished, as very little money was on hand in this fund for the purpose, so that this providential gift is most acceptable at this time. How our late rector's works do follow him!

ALL SAINTS' SEA SHORE HOME.

The Sea Shore Home has always proved itself of most real and practical benefit to the work of the parish. Those for whom it is intended, and who are enabled to enjoy its privileges are ever ready with the expression of their gratitude for the two weeks of pleasant and restful recreation with which it provides them, and which without the Sea Shore Home, it would be impossible for them to have.

All through the year the memory of the happy life-giving days spent in the summer on the delightful beach at Sea Isle City, is with them, to cheer and to encourage, when life with its privations and trials presses hard upon them.

To make all this possible, however, the generous help of the friends of the Home is needed now, as much as ever before. In order to remove what may be a somewhat widespread misapprehension, we quote from the Annual Report of the Sea Shore Home:

"Many may feel the Home will not need the same help as before, since receiving such a generous gift in the legacy left it by Miss Miles; it is better to explain that the bequest can only be obtained in case of the sale of a certain piece of property in which the money is invested, and this may not be accomplished for years. Even if it were, the will requests that the money be almost entirely used in building a new house, which, when built, will require more funds to maintain it than before.

"The yearly subscription received by the Home during Miss Miles' lifetime will now cease, until the legacy is received, making our usual support that much less."

We also quote the following from the Report:

"We need specially for the coming year—double sheets, and pillow cases, towels, pitchers and basins, large cooking pots, porch chairs, and articles for the Fair. Subscriptions and donations in money may be sent to the Treasurer, Mr. John Douglass Brown, 426 Drexel Building, or to the Sister in Charge, All Saints' Mission House, Lambert and Cherry Streets, Philadelphia."

The Treasurer's report is printed.

SECOND-HAND CLOTHING.

The stock of second-hand clothing at the Mission House of the All Saints' Sisters is very low, in fact, almost exhausted. Donations in this line will be most acceptable to the Sisters in their work. With the coming on of summer, and the putting away of winter clothing, it seems most likely that there are many who will find wearing apparel which may be no longer of use to them, but which can be of service to those whose wants the Sisters are engaged in supplying. Will not all who can, contribute to the store of clothing from which the Sisters may draw during next winter?

Extract from the convention address of the Bishop of Pennsylvania:

The Rev. George Herbert Moffett died November 12th, in his forty-seventh year. He was born in Ohio, was graduated from Trinity College, Hartford, in 1878, and from the General Theological Seminary in 1881. For several years he was an assistant at Mount Calvary, Baltimore, and then was in charge of Holy Innocents', Hoboken, New Jersey, until he became rector of St. Clement's, Philadelphia, in 1895. From the beginning of this rectorship to the end he manifested a remarkable administrative ability, which, joined with a loving devotion to the welfare of those committed to his charge, soon won their confidence and affection and made the parish stronger in every respect than it had ever been before. The debts were paid, its parish building and Sisters' house secured, and its activities increased. In these results he rejoiced, but they were only the accessories of his supreme desire and effort. He gave himself body and soul to the fulfilment of his conception of the office of the priesthood to which he had been called. His devotion was intense. He literally wore himself out in unremitting ministries; and when he died there were many who felt their best earthly friend had gone. He rests from his labors, and his works do follow him.

I SIGN ME WITH THE HOLY CROSS.

I sign me with the Holy Cross
That conquered Satan's power;
That so he may behold and flee,
And leave my spirit pure and free,
Grant Lord, the strength that comes from Thee
To meet temptation's hour.

I sign me with the Holy Cross
On which my Master died.
Through it approach to God is given,
Through it alone I hope for heaven,
O Father, may I be forgiven,
Through Him, the Crucified.

I sign me with the Holy Cross
Once stamped upon my brow,
That I should own the Christian faith
And fight against its foes till death;
O help me, till my dying breath
To keep that solemn vow.

I sign me with the Holy Cross,
For I must crucify
The sins that in my flesh remain,
And keep it pure and free from stain,
At the last day to rise again,
And ever live on high.

O Thou who on the Holy Cross
Thyself for me didst give,
May I remember by this sign,
That wondrous sacrifice of thine,
And by Thy Cross my Lord divine,
And for Thy glory live.

TO THE PARISHIONERS OF OF S. CLEMENTS'.

My dear People:

As I take up my residence among you, I cannot refrain from sending a word of greeting through the pages of the "Magazine," asking your prayers and sympathetic co-operation in the work that lies before us all.

You will agree with me, I am sure, that, under God's providence, the outlook for the future seems to promise much.

The holy life that has been your inspiration for the last ten years, has left an indelible mark upon the parish, and has kindled in your hearts a real devotion and love for that Blessed Master, from whom it drew its strength and power. Let us ask God that in the midst of any material prosperity that He may send us, He will keep alive in our souls this same spirit of self-sacrificing love, and that both clergy and people may desire nothing but the glory of God and the knowledge of Jesus crucified.

The clergy of S. Clements' offer themselves, as your servants for Jesus' sake, and humbly ask your prayers that their ministrations among you may be acceptable to God and for the salvation of many souls.

Faithfully yours in Christ Jesus,

CHARLES S. HUTCHINSON.

CATECHISM PICNIC.

The annual picnic for the children of the Catechism, their families and friends, will go this year to Almonesson Lake, near Woodbury, N. J., on Wednesday, July 12th.

In the selection of a place none was found which offered the same combination of attractions as Almonesson Lake. This year, however, on account of the lateness of the season, and the rush of people to the parks on their line of road, the trolley company could not arrange for special cars on any Saturday.

It became necessary in consequence to choose some other day of the week, and to postpone the date of the picnic until the closing of the public schools on 30th June. On account of the "Fourth," a further postponement seemed advisable, and the 12th of July was fixed for the excursion.

It is hoped that no one will be prevented by the change of day from attending the picnic, but that every one will prepare for an enjoyable day in the country.

Boat leaves Chestnut Street wharf at 9.30 A. M., to meet special cars, leaving Camden. Returning cars leave Lake at 6 P. M.

As usual, tickets will be given to the children. Others may have them at 35 cents for adults' tickets, and 20 cents for a child's.

The closing of the catechism was held on Trinity Sunday, the examinations having taken place on Whitsun Day. Prizes were awarded.

PARISH NOTES.

Flowers for the Altar on Sundays are asked during the summer. They should be sent to the church by four o'clock on Saturday afternoon.

Commencing with the first Sunday in July, the evening service will be discontinued for the summer. Evensong will be read in the church at five o'clock.

Rev. Nelson Kellogg, of the Diocese of Albany, came to the parish on June 24th. Mr. Kellogg graduated from the General Theological Seminary last month, and was ordained to the diaconate by Bishop Nelson, in the Cathedral at Albany, on June 10th.

Rev. F. M. W. Schneeweiss will be absent from the parish during the first two weeks of July, and the Rev. F. D. Ward, the latter part of the month. The Rev. C. C. Quin will take the month of August, and the rector will also be absent at that time for six weeks, returning for the second Sunday in September.

First Vespers of Corpus Christi were sung in S. John's Chapel, on Wednesday, June 21st. One member was admitted to S. Saviour's Ward, and the annual ward meeting followed in the lower vestry room. Mr. Mowry was re-elected Secretary-Treasurer. The Confraternity of the Blessed Sacrament celebrated its annual festival by a Solemn High Mass, at 10.30 o'clock, on the Feast of Corpus Christi. A number of the Priests' Associate were present. There was no sermon, it having been found impossible to procure a preacher.

THE CATECHISM.

The closing fete of the Catechism was held on Trinity Sunday.

Lilian Pile and Alice Fortune received the highest number of marks for examination papers, at the examination held on Whitsunday, but as they had both been awarded the crucifix for the best examination paper in other years, it was awarded to Helen Clarke, who received the next highest number of marks.

Among the boys, George Maclauchlan received the highest number of marks.

In the Little Catechism, the following received prizes for being present every Sunday: William Fortune, Elizabeth Fortune, Margaret Welch.

"I BELIEVE IN THE COMMUNION OF SAINTS."

I believe in Paradise are pleading
Some blessed ones, for my eternal bliss,
Who in that unknown land are interceding
For me; still struggling, whom they loved in this.
And they know better what my soul is needing,
Than I, who in my blindness pray amiss.

I believe, before Thine Altar bending,
My feeble prayers commingle round the Throne
With like petitions, which are ever blending
In a mysterious union with my own,
And so my heart with all I love ascending,
I never need feel utterly alone.

I believe—I joy in thus believing—
And when my earth-born soul can hardly pray,
It comforts me, while for my coldness grieving
To know that prayers for me are on the way.
Ah, Lord! I would Thou mightest be receiving Such faithful prayers from one I love, to-day.

SAINT BONAVENTURA.

July 14.

S. Bonaventura was born at Bagnarea, in Tuscany, in the year 1221; his father's name was John de Fidenza, his mother's, Maria de Ritelli. His parents were in comfortable circumstances, and God-fearing people. At his baptism he received the name of John. Four years later, he fell sick, and his mother then vowed him to the Order of S. Francis, should he recover. His restoration to health was instantaneous, and the mother cried out in delight, "O, bonaventura!" and the name Bonaventura clung to him ever after.

At the age of twenty-one, a serious, studious youth, he presented himself before the gates of a Franciscan Convent, and demanded the habit of a novice. As he gave great tokens of ability, his superiors sent him to Paris to study theology, where he soon became celebrated for his learning and humility.

At the age of thirty-six, in the thirteenth of his profession, Bonaventura was unanimously elected General of his Order. During the eighteen years that he filled this office, he was indefatigable in maintaining the true spirit of the Order, in repressing the dissension which was constantly threatening it with schism and in controlling the fanatical and mystic vagaries of some of its members.

S. Bonaventura worked diligently with his pen; he had a great horror of idleness. He wrote on theology and philosophy, and composed commentaries on Holy Scripture. He was a poet and some of his hymns breathe the tenderest, most loving piety. He was requested by a chapter of the Order to undertake a life of their great founder S. Francis. It was a labor of love. As he was engaged on it one day, in his cell, S. Thomas Aquinas came to see him; before opening the door he looked through a clink, and saw in the rapt expression of the writer that he was absorbed in his work. He withdrew saying to those who accompanied him, "Let us not disturb the saint laboring for the saint."

"How do you find time to read, what do you study?" asked the Angelical Doctor one day of him; wondering at his sweetness, his depth, and knowing what distraction he had in regulating the affairs of the Order. "My book," answered Bonaventura, "is the crucifix."

He was appointed Archbishop of York but declined the honor. At length he was made Cardinal and Bishop of Albano. When the Pope's nuncios carried him the Cardinal's hat they found him in the garden of a convent near Florence washing the plate from which he had just eaten, and he requested them to hang the hat on a tree until he could take it. In 1274, when a council was held at Lyons to reconcile the Greek and Latin Churches, he, being one of the most distinguished of preachers, first addressed the assembly. The fatigues of his labors here brought on a fever of which he died, being fifty-three years old.

S. Bonaventura is usually represented with an angel communicating him. According to the legend, his humility was so great that he would not draw near to the altar, and an angel therefore visited him, and gave him the holy Sacrament.

"JESU DULCIS MEMORIA."

From the "Holy Cross Magazine."

I heard that hymn of St. Bernard of Clairvaux sung at Mass last week, and sung to the severe, chaste tune of ancient Plain-song—

Jesu, the very thought is sweet!
In that dear Name all heart-joys meet.
Then as the last words died way,
That He at last may make us meet
With Him to gain the heav'nly seat, it seemed as though I were listening to other voices calling upon that sweet and saving Name. In the presence of the Most Holy above me at the altar I appeared to be associated with a multitude of souls, all gathered close about Him and all speaking at once, yet without clamor or discord,—on the contrary, a perfect harmony of sound went out as all their supplications struck upon the chords of His great and tender Heart. I drew nearer, as it were, and tried to catch the words they spoke into that fountain of love and pity. They had come hither for "comfort," so they sang to "the Son of God Most High." These were the "souls forlorn" crying to Him: I thought of weeping Rachels, mothers going back from the grave-side to homes where the shades had been drawn and the footfalls hushed, to put away what had been the simple joys of some child life, but not to put away from their breaking hearts the memories of the boy or girl called from earth so early.

And in His Heart, to whom that little son or daughter had been and is incomparably dearer than to the parents, these forlorn ones might find consolation and strength and that which hope could feed on in the journey to the City where the boys and girls play in the streets. There were little children and youths, fatherless, motherless, friendless, left to battle with a great, cold world, or to become objects of its "charity." Forlorn, indeed, be such as they, yet the Heart of their Saviour and Elder Brother opens to them and takes them in, and an impulse of its abounding love goes out to some heart on earth and stirs, not pity alone, but love, to cherish and protect these young lives so appealing in their need and loneliness.

Then, too, there were those "for sin that mourn," Davids and Magdalenes, penitents of every sort and all degrees, converts of an hour turning to the call of redeeming love, and those who for long years had lived lives and done deeds of penance in reparation to that love they had sorely wounded by sin. He seemed to bend over these with a peculiar tenderness, and I thought He laid His pierced right hand upon every several head, and the sacred lips moved as if they said, Go in peace; thy sins are forgiven thee. He had looked upon the children with a sweet, bright smile full of gladness; upon these His eyes rested not less lovingly, but in the Face were lines of a mingled pain and joy, as if joy being uppermost yet could not quite conceal the pain once felt—yes, as if the pain had left all but ineffaceable marks that only the full reconciliation of the Great Day would blot out.

I saw "them that seek" their Saviour. Some were wonderfully real in their quest and spared no labor in it, generous souls, full of zeal and eager in the pursuit of an ideal that something or somebody had suggested to them. "It will be realized," I said, "when these knightly ones have found their way into the palace of the King." Others there were, less earnest, still held in bondage to the flesh or the powers of this world, yet longing to escape, hating their spotted garments even while they had not strength of will to put them off, and looking in their weakness and misery to a liberator. But St. Michael and his legions of light were there; there rose high the standard of victory, the holy Cross, and the voice of the Lord of glory sounded above the songs of the world and called them to venture all for His sake.

Still others, the indifferent, the selfish, the proud, appeared before my sight. It was like a valley of dry bones I saw before me and I asked if these could live. Even these, I seemed to hear that voice say, even these, when they should seek, would find Him, their kind and patient Saviour, whose love nothing can daunt but one thing only, the persistent and final rejection of its appeal.

Yes, a great host of them there were, as I looked or listened—"the tribulations of the people, the perils of the nations, the sorrowful sighing of prisoners, the miseries of orphans, the necessities of strangers, the helplessness of the weak, the hopelessness of the weary, the weakness of the aged, the aspirations of the young men, the vows of virgins, the lamentations of widows. . . . Thou hast compassion upon all, O Lord, and hatest nothing that Thou hast made," thus it was I lifted up my prayer to the Victim of Salvation, as yonder the priest at the altar stood between a dying world and its Maker, pleading in its behalf the Sacrifice of the Eternal Son.

I wonder if the honey-mouthed Doctor could have estimated the joy, the comfort, the hope he was to bring into human hearts when he wrote that hymn of surpassing beauty. Could he have told, as he sat in his bare and cold cell writing the words, how his mention of that "dear Name" would stir souls to a deeper love for Jesus, and urge them on to nobler efforts against evil and to higher ideals of holiness? Could the monk with drawn hood and bent head, kneeling in the stillness of the night before the altar—where, more likely, the hymn was written—could even his prophetic soul have foreseen the glorious conquests to be won under the inspiration of the Name of Jesus, conquests to which he himself was making the contribution of his heart and pen? Yet his "Jesu dulcis memoria" will never be forgotten. Clairvaux lies in ruins, Bernard's name and history are unknown by many, but the song he sang "with love's most earnest cry" will never be lost from the world as long as there are tongues to praise the most sweet Name of Jesus.

The Mass was over; they put out the lights and left me alone in the chapel. And again my mind went out over the great world outside, its ignorance, its sin, its needs and its misery. It seemed, that scene as it quickly passed before me, so sad and dreary. A world without God! And so without love! A perishing world that knows not what a Saviour's love has done and can do! And out of the depths of my heart that His had stirred to pity, I prayed for all who have never sought and found Him, that as I by His grace alone could say, so might other souls for which He had laid down His life, say in St. Bernard's words,—

One of the worst failings of the present day is the perversion and abuse of noble terms. Take these three, "liberal," "charitable," "practical," how often, as applied to Christianity, have they been used as an excuse for the wilful neglect of religious duties. How many shirkers of duty have sneaked out of their obligations by posing as the exponents of liberal and practical Christianity. As an unerring rule the higher pitched the excuse the greater the humbug. The man who excuses himself on high grounds for neglect of some common duty, proportionately condemns himself. Beware of the man who calls himself a liberal and practical Christian. He is just as much to be distrusted as the man who is always protesting his honesty. A man's self praise is generally the measure of his own secret self-distrust. But it is funny that people, who can see through the one kind of humbug, cannot see through the other.—C. H. Work.

During the spring Bishop Roots has been making a visitation of the Hankow district in Central China, going as far west as Ichang and south of Changsha. Everywhere he has found conditions full of encouragement. The American missionaries are prolific in plans for extension. The native clergy are working with fine faithfulness and the catechists and school teachers are for the most part doing effective work. The result is seen in numerous candidates for baptism and confirmation. Boone School is flourishing, with many more applicants for admission than it can possibly accommodate, until the Church provides the $5,000 still lacking for the erection of Ingle Memorial Hall. The Normal School for native teachers is making steady progress at Ichang. The S. James's Memorial Church at Wuhu is nearing completion, and at Gankin and Wuchang the hospital work is accomplishing the usual good results. Interesting native development is seen in the numerous government schools established in some of the cities in the upper Yangtse. It is estimated that there are 7,000 government students in Wuchang alone. They offer a fine field for young men interested in education and willing to work among students from the Christian standpoint. The Bishop is certain that if he could add to his staff one man acquainted with the language to work among these young men, the Church could have an immense influence in moulding all their thoughts and ideals. This work would be quite independent of the regular educational effort of the mission in Boone School.

Julia W. H. Brock.

On June 29, 1905, after a prolonged and painful illness, entered into rest Julia Watts Hall Brock, for many years a faithful communicant of S. Clement's parish.

Confirmed on the tenth of March, 1875, during the thirty years that followed, a Sunday rarely passed that did not find her in her accustomed place, joining with the faithful in offering the Holy Sacrifice.

As generous as she was devout, Mrs. Brock was in many ways a benefactress to the parish, and her deeds of charity, which she would fain have hidden, were made manifest by the gratitude and love she inspired in the hearts of the poor.

She bore her last illness with rare fortitude, an unfailing patience and at last, strengthened by the Body and Blood of her Divine Redeemer, and fortified by the final rites of the Church, she fell asleep peacefully in Jesus.

The body was brought to the Church on the night before the burial, where it rested before the High Altar until after the mass of requiem, which was sung by the Rev. Charles C. Quin, at half past ten o'clock, on Saturday, July the first.

Grant unto her, O Lord, eternal rest, and may light perpetual shine upon her.

S. Vincent's Guild.

Alloway, New Jersey, was shaken to its foundations, during the first few days of July, by the sudden descent upon it of S. Vincent's Guild bent on enjoying its annual outing.

Sixteen boys, under the care of Mr. J. C. Goodwin Jr., availed themselves of the accommodations which had been secured for them at Mr. Elkinton's farm house, and for several days enjoyed the country air. Our good Mrs. Johnson went along to minister to hearty appetites, and she was ably assisted by Mrs. Charles Goodwin.

A large lake supplied facilities for swimming and boating, while an adjacent pasture served for baseball. On Independence Day, the Rector and Mr. Kellogg accepted the invitation of the Guild to visit Alloway, and were royally entertained, returning to Philadelphia in the evening.

The boys came home on Friday, and are looking forward to another visit to Mr. Elkinton next year.

The Waiting City.

A city throned upon the height behold,
Wherein no foot of man as yet has trod;
The City of Man's Life fulfilled in God.
Bathed all in light, with open gates of gold,
Perfect the City is in tower and street;
And there a Palace for each mortal waits,
Complete and perfect, at whose outer gates
An angel stands its occupant to greet.
Still shine O patient City! on the height,
The while our race in hut and hovel dwells.
It hears the music of thy heavenly bells
And its dull soul is haunted by thy light.
Lo! once the Son of Man hath heard thy call
And the dear Christ hath claimed thee for us all.

The Difference.

On one of those terrible hot Sundays in July, one of our communicants was returning home through the broiling sun from the eleven o'clock service when a neighbor called out: "Well, you are awfully good to go to Church a day like this. I wouldn't go in such heat to hear the greatest preacher in America." And our brave little communicant replied, "Neither would I. I did not go to hear preaching. I went to worship God."—Easton Churchman.

Sacraments, Like Medicine, Must Be Used.

If the doctor were to give you some healing lotion when you were burned or wounded, and you were to say that you fully trusted in the doctor and his medicine, but yet did not use it, how foolish that would be. It is not enough to believe in the medicine—you must apply it. When the Destroying Angel passed over the houses of the Israelites in Egypt, it was only those that had their doorposts actually sprinkled with the blood of the Paschal Lamb that were saved from death. So it is with us. The blood of our Paschal Lamb shed on the cross will not save us unless it is applied to each one of us separately. And it is in the Sacraments that Christ has commanded that this should be done. Hence the Church teaches us that they "are generally (that is, by all) necessary for salvation."—Selected.

St. Louis, King and Confessor.

Crowned king at the age of twelve, St. Louis was exposed to all those temptations into which youthful kings are apt to fall. But through the care and diligence of his mother, Queen Blanche, he was kept pure and honorable and trained to realize his kingdom was a trust from God, not a mere thing to give him pleasure. His mother once said: "I had rather he were dead than that he should commit sin," and this was his own attitude all through his life, whether in the court of justice or in private matters, in his dealings with king and noble, Pope or pagan, in every decision he had to make.

He was often at war, at home and abroad, but he had sufficient sense of right to go even against the Pope's wishes and to refuse to make war on the German Emperor because he had no just quarrel with him. His victories were never stained by wanton usage or abuse of power.

As reigning monarch he won all hearts by his virtue and by his amiability. Severe and hard on himself, even to the most fearful penance, yet in his relations to others there was gentleness, affability and a passionate love of justice and truth.

He spent all the time possible in prayer and good works without in any way neglecting his public duties as king. He gave large alms to the poor and visited the sick and infirm himself.

As a warrior he never excelled, but during an illness he vowed to fight for the Holy Sepulchre. Against the wishes and advice of all he embarked in accordance with his vow. Finally landing in Egypt, his army suffered terribly from sickness and lack of provisions, and nothing was accomplished. The distress of the army grew more and more every day, and the king spent all his time in tending the sick and suffering.

St. Louis was finally taken captive, a truce declared and his ransom paid. When he found one of his generals had cheated the Saracens in the payment of the ransom Louis demanded that the full amount be paid.

Even when free he would not return to France until the affairs of state absolutely demanded it; spending his time in Palestine, ransoming slaves. He returned to France without warlike fame to find every one impressed with his sanctity.

He now lived even a more austere life than before. He delighted in the society of learned men and especially of theologians, among whom was St. Thomas Aquinas. The bringing up of his children as true sons of the Church and France was his especial care. He continued to stand out for what he believed to be justice, even against the Pope, especially in the matter of the punishment of eccleciastics.

He never relinquished the idea of another crusade, and in 1279 he carried it out. It was fatal to him. The army landed in Africa and was attacked by disease. His favorite son died and St. Louis soon followed him.

After he had received the Viaticum, he said, "We will go to Jerusalem." The next day he said, "I will come into Thy house, even to the multitude of Thy mercy and in Thy fear will I worship toward Thy Holy Temple." With his last sigh he breathed, "Lord, into Thy hands I commend my spirit," and died.

Gibbon says of him, "He united the virtues of a king, a hero, and a man," and even Voltaire could not refrain from saying, "Never has it been accorded to man to push virtue further."—(Adapted from Rev. S. Baring Gould.)

The appended sonnet was written by George John Romanes, one of the ablest of modern English biologists, who, after a life spent in agnosticism, returned to the bosom of the Catholic Church before his death.

I ask not for Thy love, O Lord; the days
Can never come when anguish shall atone.
Enough for me were but Thy pity shown,
To me as to the stricken sheep that stays
With ceaseless cry for unforgotten ways—
O lead me back to pastures I have known,
Or find me in the wilderness alone
And slay me as the hand of mercy slays.

I ask not for Thy love; nor e'en as much
As for a hope on Thy dear breast to lie;
But be Thou still my Shepherd—still with such Compassion as may melt and such a cry;
That so I hear Thy feet, and feel Thy touch,
And dimly see Thy face, ere yet I die.

Of Singing the Praises of God.

The difference between singing and reading a psalm will be easily understood, if you consider the difference between reading and singing a common song that you like. Whilst you only read it, you only like it and that is all; but as soon as you sing it, then you enjoy it, you feel the delight of it, it has got hold of you, your passions keep pace with it, and you feel the same spirit within you that seems to be in the words. If you were to tell a person that has such a song that he need not sing it, that it was sufficient to peruse it, he would wonder what you mean; and would think you absurd, if you were to tell him that he should only look at his food to see if it was good, but need not eat it; for a song of praise not sung is very like any other good thing not made use of.

You will perhaps say that singing is a particular talent, that belongs only to a particular people, and that you have neither voice nor ear to make any music. If you had said singing is a general talent, and that people differ in that as they do in other things, you had said something much truer. In how vastly do people differ in the talent of thinking, which is not only common to all men, but seems to be of the very essence of human nature! How readily do some people discourse upon the most abstruse matters. And how confusedly do others talk upon the plainest subjects. Yet no one desires to be excused from thought or reason or discourse because he has not these talents as some people have them. But it is full as just for a person to think himself excused from thinking upon God, or reasoning about his duty to Him, or discoursing about the means of salvation, because he has not these talents in any fine degree; this is full as just as for the person to think himself excused from singing the praises of God because he has not a musical voice. For as it is speaking and not graceful speaking, that is a required part of prayer; as it is bowing and not genteel bowing that is a proper part of adoration; so it is singing, and not fine singing, that is a required way of praising God.

If a person was to forbear praying, because he had an odd tone in his voice, he would have as good an excuse as he that forbears from singing psalms, because he has but little management of his voice. And as a man's speaking his prayers, though in an odd tone, may yet sufficiently answer all the ends of his own devotion, so a man's singing of a psalm, though not in a very musical way, may yet sufficiently answer all the ends of rejoicing in and praising God.

Our Blessed Saviour and His Apostles sang a hymn; but it may reasonably be supposed that they rather rejoiced in God than made fine music. Do but so live that your heart may truly rejoice in God, that it may feel itself affected with the praises of God, and then you will find that this state of your heart will neither want a voice nor ear to find a tune for a psalm. Everyone at some time or other finds himself able to sing in some degree; there are some times and occasions of joy that make all people ready to express their sense of it in some sort of harmony. The joy that they feel forces them to let their voice have a part in it. He therefore that saith he wants a voice, or an ear, to sing a psalm mistakes the case; he wants that spirit that really rejoices in God; the dulness is in his heart, and not in his ear; and when his heart feels a true joy in God, when it has a full relish of what is expressed in the psalms, he will find it very pleasant to make the motions of his voice express the motions of his heart.—(From William Laws' "Serious Call to a Devout and Holy Life.")

Parish Notes.

Choir returns September 3d.

Catechisms meet on Sunday, September 17th.

The Masses on Sunday have been well attended.

The Rector will return for the second Sunday in September—the 10th.

On account of work on the organ the daily Masses and Offices have been said in S. John's Chapel except on Sundays.

Eight o'clock Mass will be resumed Sunday, September 17th. 7.30 Mass on week-days will be resumed September 18th.

Thursday, September 14th, (Exaltation of Holy Cross) special Mass for Guild of Holy Cross: members should make corporate communion.

The Rev. C. C. Quin, who has been absent during August, will return the first of September. The Rev. F. D. Ward will be absent from September 8th until September 22d. The Rev. F. M. W. Schneeweiss will be absent from September 1st until September 16th. The Rev. Nelson Kellogg will be away during the month of September.

Sea Isle City.

Word comes from the Seashore Home that the season has been a specially happy one. There has been a household averaging fifty since the Home was opened at the beginning of July. The last party came down from August 14th to 25th. The volume of appreciation of the Home and its benefits seems to have increased with the stay of each fresh party. Every one has been well, and the weather has been very pleasant, and, wonderful to relate, mosquitoes, the plague in so many places of the New Jersey coast, have not been troublesome.

The absence of these usually prevalent visitors has been hailed with delight! Can it be that there was no land breeze to convey them from their usual haunts to the shore, or has the systematic cutting of grass on the vacant lots of Sea Isle City caused them to emigrate, perhaps, to Wildwood?

The beach, with its unfailing attractions, has been for the children the true palace of delight, which it always is. Bathing has been much enjoyed, and the ocean has exerted the never-ending fascination of its charms in one way or another upon all.

The fair held on August 17th and 18th was quite a success, about $215 being cleared. Through the kindness of Mrs. S. W. H. Wells it was held at her cottage, where she and several other ladies busied themselves most assiduously and kindly in helping with it. Great thanks are due to Mrs. Taylor, always so interested in the Home, for the indefatigable manner in which she undertook, on this occasion, the whole responsibility of the fair, and carried it through so successfully.

The chapel services have been very well attended, although the number of those from Sea Isle City at the 10.30 service on Sundays has not been large.

The Catechism.

The Great and Little Catechism will open Sunday, September 17, at 3 P. M.

It is hoped that all the former members will return, and that many new names will be added to the roll.

Of all parochial activities, the Sunday School, as it is popularly called, is most beset with difficulties and obstacles. The work of teaching the children of the church the Faith of our forefathers is so important that we may be sure Satan and the powers of the world will do their utmost to hinder and destroy all our efforts. Since the outside pressure is so strong, there is need that all good Christians should give their aid to this important work.

To the children we speak first.

The Little Catechism will go on as usual under the good care and guidance of Sister Frances Virginia.

This year, you of the Great Catechism will have new catechists. It will be a matter of regret not to see in their accustomed places the faces of those you have known so well and loved. But remember that those who now come to you desire to do just as much for your welfare and happiness.

Let us, then, see each one back on the opening day. One way to make the Catechism a pleasure is to be regular and punctual throughout the year. See if you can't persuade some friend to come with you and help us increase the number of members.

Then we ask the parents to assist us in supporting the Catechism by their influence. If it is possible see that the children join the Catechism. True, some live too far away from the church to make attendance practical; but those who are within that limit, do all in your power to have the children come here, and not go elsewhere. Help them to be regular and punctual. Show an interest in their studies by asking them about the Catechism, and sometimes by attending the instructions. Create in the home an esteem for it that the children may consider it a privilege and a pleasure to be allowed to go.

Without the aid of religion who can hope to pass through unscathed the trials and temptations of life? If with great difficulty we can do it with the many helps of our Holy Faith, how utterly impossible without them!

A derogatory word, a little indifference from you can often entirely undo months of labor on the part of the parish priests. Give us, then, all the aid you can.

Will those who have assisted in the labor of the Catechism so faithfully and so effectually give us their aid this coming year? Do not feel that you have little to do and therefore you can easily be spared. The littleness or greatness depends entirely upon the zeal you have, not upon the position you are asked to fill. Do give us your sincere interest and hearty support.

We commend ourselves and our work to the attention of all the parishioners, asking your earnest and frequent prayers, and especially at the offering of the Holy Sacrifice, for God's richest blessing upon this most difficult but most interesting department of parish work.

A Correction.

In the "Magazine" for August the date of (Mrs.) Julia Watts Hall Brock's Confirmation was stated incorrectly, owing to a daughter having a similar name, and being on the Parish Register for that date. Mrs. Brock became identified with S. Clement's Parish about 1868, the Rev. H. G. Batterson being Rector.

The Feast of the Exultation of the Holy Cross.

Since the fourth century the church has kept two days in honor of the Cross, thereby showing her love for the very instruments of the Passion and telling it forth to all the world that she did glory in the Cross of Christ. These days are May 3d, the Feast of the Invention, and September 14th, the Feast of the Exaltation of the Holy Cross.

When St. Helena, mother of the Emperor Constantine, was converted, although almost eighty years old, she set out on a pilgrimage to Jerusalem, there to see the very places where her Saviour lived, died, was buried and rose again. Above all, she wished to discern the true cross which had been lost. She is said to have found the Cross, with two others, near the Holy Sepulchre in a hole where it had been placed after the Crucifixion. She took it up, and after having encased it in a silver box, carried it to the Church of the Holy Cross. This happened on the 3d of May, and is called the finding or Invention of the Cross.

Ten years later, A. D. 335, Constantine dedicated a church in Jerusalem, and the Cross was exalted or set up in the great Church of the Resurrection, Sunday, September 14th, of that same year. Thus the second feast arose and both have been kept in the Calendars of East and West ever since.

The Feast of the Exaltation was very popular in England, over an hundred churches being dedicated to it. Both days are retained in the English Prayer Book as "black letter days."

Certainly on these feasts, dedicated to the Holy Cross, all Christians can meet together with one consent, forgetful of differences, and offer praise and thanksgiving for the Cross of Jesus Christ. Surely all devout people must feel that in the subordinate positions they have occupied since the reformation much good has been lost which we might well have had. It is a matter for deep thankfulness that the two festivals are more generally being observed among us here in America.

The picture of St. Helena, mother of the emperor, and but lately converted to the Catholic faith, going on the long and toilsome journey from Constantinople to Jerusalem to venerate the Holy Places, to walk along the Via Dolorosa, and searching for and finally finding the Wood of the True Cross, ought to give strength and courage to us who, in our daily lives, shrink from any toil and trouble, from any real searching after Divine things, and who find it so hard to bow our will to the Will of God.

Surely St. Helena might have felt herself excused from attempting to search in her own person by reason of her age. But, no! What an inspiration it is to see her go forth in love for her Divine Master, seeking the very instrument of His Sufferings, dear to her because so intimately connected with her salvation. Truly, "king's daughters were among thy honorable women," and the daughter of Tyre was there with a gift."

How real must have been the sufferings of our Lord to her! Can we not feel with her the great anxiety as she searched day by day? Can we not feel the thrill of joy when her love was rewarded and she was permitted to behold the very wood on which her Saviour died?

The same joy may be ours if, imitating her humility and love, we, too, should seek for the Cross Jesus puts in our own lives, and accept it as a token of His love.

Surely, we, too, may have the joy and glory also of finding the Cross and using it in triumph to the Church of the Heavenly Jerusalem if we will take up our own cross daily and follow Him; and be ye sure if we will let Him, He will carry the heavy end of it Himself.

"Blessed," said our Lord, "are those which have not seen and yet have believed." Blessed was Helena, who found the Wood of the Cross; yea, and blessed indeed is each of us who grasps the full privilege of accepting from our Divine Master our daily trials and troubles, nailing them all to His Cross in full confidence as we have suffered with Him here, we shall reign with Him in glory.

But St. Helena not only found the Cross, but lifted it up and enclosed it in a box which was only opened on great festivals.

So let us also, when we find our cross, hide it in the golden casket of our hearts, remembering it is an individual gift to us from Him; as it were a gift from a Friend which loses its very sweetness in being known.

Let us remember that our trials are a sacred thing, not to be told every chance passerby, but to be kept in the secret recesses of our hearts; to be told to those alone who will receive them from us as a sacred trust, as we have received them from Jesus.

So many opportunities of self-humiliation, of knowing the sweetness and joy of the Royal road of the Cross, are lost by our talking about them. Let us be careful to whom we show the inmost recesses of our hearts where Jesus dwells.

How differently, too, did St. Helena carry the Cross from the way which Simon of Cyrene carried it only three hundred years before. He was compelled to carry it. St. Helena carried it with holy joy and reverence and every possible honor.

So, too, never let us be ashamed to confess the Cross of Jesus should we be called upon to do so. Then let no false pride prevent our bearing it before all men.

From the time of St. Helena onward the Cross is no longer the sign of the despised Nazarene, but it has been honored by prince and peasant alike. No longer to the Jews a stumbling block and to the Greeks' foolishness, but to all men the power of God and the wisdom of God. Truly, indeed, we do well to set apart in honor of this great mystery two days out of each year.

Piety.

There is a home, poor, cramped and mean. Only a few necessary pieces of furniture fill the small room which is the principal one of the house. In the doorway sits the father of the family plying his trade.

Towards evening, chancing to pass by and getting a glimpse of the room, a daughter was seen lighting the candles of the family shrine. About this spot centred the life and beauty of the home. There was the "lace," the bit of bright color, the sacred picture, the holy crucifix, eloquently speaking of love, the soft yellow light of the candles lighting up the gloom, and their tiny flames flickering a salute of love to the Throne of Heaven from the loving hearts that placed them there.

About the shrine the family gathered, and, led by the father, offered up the evening prayer. Each one realizes the unity, the oneness of the Body of Christ. The spirit world is a reality, not a mere sterile, intellectual theory. All are conscious of joining with saints and angels in praising the Lord of heaven and earth.

Some passing by might have a feeling of pity for those poor souls held fast by "superstition." Held by superstition? Possibly; God knows. However, if we look at the calm, silent joy in those faces, we shall rather conjecture that their hearts are filled with happiness in doing these simple, natural acts filial love suggests might please the Sacred Heart of their Divine Lord.

Many are taught the truths of our holy religion. Many are led to become devout, but how few stir up the gift of piety; or, as our Prayer Book calls it, "true godliness!" This is the gift that puts to flight coldness and formalism in religion, as it seeks to express love for God in every possible way. This is the gift that has built our beautiful cathedrals and churches; that has written the soul-stirring hymns and composed the sacred music which lifts the soul to heaven; that endeavors to make the House of God and all connected with it most glorious and magnifical.

It is this gift that prevents the soul from going through the forms of religion thoughtlessly; for it is ever alert to find, even in the habitual forms, some new act, some new meaning, whereby to stir up and feed the burning love of the heart.

This it is which erects the family altar, institutes the family worship, and creates the religious atmosphere of the home.

The devout apostles murmured against Martha's sister when she "wasted" the precious ointment on the feet of JESUS. But He, Who alone knows the Heart of God, was pleased with the piety, "the true godliness," of Mary, and has, for this reason, erected a monument which neither material nor spiritual powers can destroy or obliterate, for it is part of the Holy Gospel.

The devout soul may be given to good works and deeds of mercy, and lay up for itself a good reward. But it comes far behind the soul endowed with the gift of piety which is so generous that it lavishes upon God Himself its most precious possession. It heeds not the unkind criticism, but is led on by the desire to hear those words which ravished the heart of Mary: "Let her alone; why trouble ye her? She hath wrought a good work on Me." "Wheresoever this gospel shall be preached throughout the whole world, this also that she hath done shall be spoken of for a memorial of her."

"Because of the Angels."

How apt are men either to forget altogether or to slight the truth of their relationship to the Holy Angels, those beings who are the fellow-creatures of man in the universe of God, and who with Him were called into existence to do God's will and to show forth His glory!

The world outside of the church is always ready to dismiss the belief in angels as merely imaginative or fanciful, and certainly as serving no practical purpose in everyday life.

Yet the church is true both to history and fact when she reminds her faithful children every year in the Feast of S. Michael and All Angels that "God has ordained and constituted the services of angels and men in a wonderful order," and bids them think upon the twofold occupation of those spiritual beings who "always do God service in heaven," while at the same time by His appointment "they succor and defend" His human children on earth.

When we look in the pages of Holy Scripture we find them full of references to the existence and the work of the Angels in connection with this earth, since that first day of creation, "when the morning stars sang together, and all the Sons of God shouted for joy."

We find that it is truly an important part which Angels have played in the history of the world. "The Bible begins in almost its first page with Cherubims at the gate of Paradise, and closes with the Angel who tells S. John not to seal up the Revelation." They are Angels who wield the wrath of God, in the destruction of Sodom and Gomorrah; in the plague sent upon Jerusalem; in the destruction of the hosts of Sennacherib. Angels lead and guide God's chosen people; the Angel of the Covenant goes before them. They release S. Peter from prison; they are the guardians of little children. Angels trouble the healing pool to give it its efficacy. Angels wait closely on the Incarnation. Gabriel heralds the approach of the King; the Angels rush out of heaven on Christmas night to supply man's lack of service to the new-born King; Angels minister to the tempted and wearied Lord in the desert; an Angel strengthens Him in His agony; the earthquake at the resurrection was the work of an Angel; Angels wait on the Ascension; "The chariots of God are twenty thousand, even thousands of Angels, and the Lord is among them, as in the holy place of Sinai." And Angels will come with Him to judgment at the last; so that if any say they wish to think of the King, and not of His servants, Michaelmas Day will show us that He at least did not disdain their presence and aid, and that they are still "ministering spirits, sent forth to minister for them who shall be heirs of salvation." (Newbolt.)

How much the thought of our association with the Angels is calculated to strengthen our so often flagging service of God. This thought of their presence with us in the world will be one to restrain and check in us what is wrong; to develop and improve what within us is good. "Because of the Angels!" These words ought to stir us continually to emulation of those bright beings which see God and see us, and wing their way between God and man! How it will encourage us here on earth as we think of these glorious creatures of God continually engaged in doing His will in Heaven! They are the courtiers in the palace of the Great King. They stand before the throne chanting the everlasting praises of God. Day and night they fall on their faces as they cry, "Holy, Holy, Holy," and swing their censers filled with sweet odors before the presence of the Most High. And when sent as messengers from Almighty God to His people here on earth, they perform this lower service just as willingly. Indeed, for these blessed spirits, the will of God has no higher or lower. To serve Him completely is the one consuming joy of their whole existence.

Shall not the example of the Holy Angels correct the pride of man which so much disturbs the order of God's universe? As has been said, "Man is ever trying to push himself out of his place in creation. There are those who, in a rebellious spirit, would climb Heaven and thrust God down; who have tasted of the tree of knowledge, and now would claim to be as gods. They should think of the Angels who see God, and are contented to do His will as in Heaven, so in earth, and be humble. Or, if there be any one who is in any sense unreal, let him feel that in affecting to be something which he is not, he is destroying the order of God's appointment; let him, too, remind himself that he must keep in his place, because of those bright Beings who tend the universe with anxious care; who are made by their Creator to be winds and ministers in the flame of fire."

The names of some of the Angels of God have been revealed in Holy Scripture. We are told of Michael the archangel, to whom it was given to lead the heavenly armies against rebellious Lucifer, and to drive him out, and those Angels who had joined him in defying the almighty power of God. In the Book of Daniel, Michael also is represented as the Angel who guarded God's chosen people. We know the gracious Angel of the Annunciation, Gabriel, who was sent on God's embassy to lowly Nazareth to salute Mary the Blessed Virgin, chosen to be Mother of the Son of God. The Angel Raphael, who is mentioned in the Book of Tobit, speaks of himself as "one of the seven Holy Angels who present the prayers of the saints, and who go in and out before the glory of the Holy One."

Our Lord has told us how the Angels in Heaven rejoice over the perseverance of righteous souls, and the conversion of sinners; and in His Parable of the Rich Man and Lazarus, our Lord teaches how departing souls are accompanied by Angels into the other life, as He pictures Lazarus being "carried by the Angels into Abraham's bosom."

It will be good for us to remember more often the "innumerable company of Angels," those blessed servants of God, who have never tasted of sin; who are among us, though unseen, ever serving God joyfully on earth as well as in Heaven, helping and comforting always in this earthly life those who "shall be heirs of salvation."

PARISH NOTES.

S. Nicholas Guild will resume its meetings on Saturday, October fourteenth.

Pew holders will notice an addition of one dollar to their bills this month. This is an assessment for the Convention fund of the diocese.

After October 1st the rector's hours for hearing confessions will be as follows. Friday afternoon 3-5. Saturday 11-12 a. m.; 7-9 p. m.

The Confraternity of The Blessed Sacrament will resume its monthly meetings on Sunday afternoon, October 8th, and the Guild of the Holy Cross on Sunday, October 1st.

The Magazine will be grateful for renewed subscriptions. Several have expired and have not been continued. Every one in the parish should be a subscriber to S. Clement's Magazine.

The acolytes are sadly in need of new cassocks. Our present supply is sadly out of repair, and will not bear further mending and alteration. May we not hope for contributions for this object?

If there are any men in the parish who would like to sing in the choir, will they kindly give their names to Mr. Sears? The faithful attendance upon rehearsals is of course a requisite for membership.

The Rev. Arthur Ritchie, of St. Ignatius' Church, New York City, has consented to deliver the eulogy at the solemn mass of requiem which is to be celebrated in memory of the Rev. G. H. Moffett, on November 16th, the anniversary of his burial.

Will those who come to the week-day services kindly take places as far forward as possible. It is the custom of many to sit in the rear of the church, which renders the greater part of the services unintelligible to them, unless the priest puts an undue strain upon his voice. Many do not realize how very difficult it is to make the voice fill an empty building. "Sitting next the door" seems to be a peculiarly American disease. Let us all try to correct the malady.

The Catechism opened on Sunday, September 17th. There was a goodly number present, but it is to be hoped that many more will come. Every child in the parish should join the Catechism, unless hindered by some reasonable excuse. Will not the parents co-operate with the clergy in their endeavor to teach the young people of the parish the things pertaining to the Kingdom of God? Fr. Schneeweiss and Mr. Kellogg are to be in charge of the Catechism this winter.

Commencing the first Friday in October, and continuing on Fridays throughout the winter, there will be a service of intercession in St. John's Chapel. The service will begin at noon, and will last from twenty minutes to a half hour. It will consist of the Litany, followed by prayer for missions and various persons and objects. Requests for intercessions may be dropped through the slide in the sacristy door opening from the church corridor. It is to be hoped that many will avail themselves of this opportunity to perform a Christian duty, and aid the clergy of the church by joining them in this creditable work of intercession for others.

"The Spirit of Missions" is recommended to the members of the congregation. This is the official organ of the Board of Missions, and contains valuable and interesting information concerning the work of the Church in the western and foreign field. Every loyal churchman should be taking an intelligent interest in the spreading of Christ's Kingdom. We may be able to do very little in a material way, but all may do very much by prayer and the study of the mission field. The magazine is made attractive by illustrations and anecdotes, and the subscription price is one dollar. Subscriptions may be handed to the rector, or forwarded directly to the "Spirit of Missions," Church Mission House, 281, Fourth Avenue, N. Y. City.

THE RUSSIAN SERVICE AT PORTSMOUTH.

Tuesday, September 5th, was a momentous day in the annals of the American Church. For many years there has been a growing cordiality and interest between the Eastern Church and the Anglican Communion, but not since the Great Schism has there been a service in which Eastern and Western Christendom have united.

Christ Church, which is the Catholic parish of Portsmouth, N. H., was the religious home of the Russian envoys during their stay in America, and it was at the request of M. Witte that a service of thanksgiving was held after the signing of the Russo-Japanese Peace Treaty.

Father Brine, the rector of the parish, cordially assented to the request, and Fr. Hodovitsky, the Arch-Priest of the Russian Church in America, went to Portsmouth, accompanied by three other priests of the Russian communion, and several choristers.

Realizing the importance of the occasion, Fr. Brine sent an invitation to the members of the Catholic Club in the vicinity of Boston, and seven priests, including the rector of S. Clement's, went down to Portsmouth and were present at the service.

They arrived in the city just as the treaty was being signed, and the ringing of bells and booming of cannon at the Navy Yard greeted their ears as they alighted from the train. They were cordially received at the rectory and presented to the Russian clergy.

By the time all was in readiness the church was filled to its utmost capacity, and the churchyard thronged with people unable to gain admittance. Mr. and Mrs. Bayard, of S. Clement's, were in the congregation.

The altar was made beautiful with lights and flowers, and the church was decorated with palms sent by M. Witte. The choir stalls had been removed and two chairs were placed just within the choir gates, and to the right of the lectern, for the plenipotentiaries. The procession entering the church was most imposing. First the choir, led by the crucifer, torch bearers, and thurifer, then the Russian priests in their glittering vestments of silver and gold, followed by the American clergy vested in copes. The processional hymn was one of those appointed for Trinity Sunday, "Holy. Holy, Holy, Lord God Almighty."

On entering the church the choir was grouped on the left, with the Russian clergy opposite, while the American priests occupied the presbytery on the gospel side. Within the sanctuary were Bishop Potter, and his chaplain, the Rev. Dr. Roberts, of Concord, N. H. Father Field, Provincial Superior of the Society of St. John the Evangelist, and Father Prime, of Brighton, the president of the Massachusetts Catholic Club.

A shortened form of Evensong was solemnly rendered, and at its close the Russian hymn was sung, and the Russian priests and choir gathered about a lectern in the centre of the chancel, while Father Hodovitsky ascended to the Altar. A Russian Te Deum was most beautifully rendered, followed by a service of prayers and versicles which were profoundly reverent. The supreme moment came at the close of the service, when M. Witte and Baron Rosen came forward with tear-dimmed eyes and prostrated themselves before the crucifix held by the Arch-Priest, and reverently kissed the image of the Divine Redeemer.

A short address in Russian followed and the benediction was given by Bishop Potter.

Perhaps one of the most moving incidents was the use by Father Hodovitsky of the American prayers for Church unity, and for the President, into which last was inserted the name of the Czar.

After the service there was a brief reception in the choir room, where the clergy had the opportunity of greeting the Russian envoys.

INTERCESSORY PRAYER.

There are many people who have a sincere desire to do something for God, and yet have no clear idea what to do. It may be that they are unable to contribute largely to the finances of their parish and the various activities may not appeal to them, or their strength may be insufficient for the performance of any church work, in addition to the necessary duties of every day. In such cases, the question, "What shall I do that I might work the works of God?" oftentimes goes unanswered.

There is one thing that everyone can do, and which if left undone, renders our life and service of little worth in the eyes of our Maker; every Christian man and woman can pray for others.

Throughout Holy Scripture we are bidden to lead prayerful lives. "Pray without ceasing," is the urgent command of St. Paul, and in obedience to apostolic precept and example the Catholic Church lifts her voice in "prayer and supplication for all men."

In so doing she is but following the example of her Divine Head. In St. John's Gospel we read the great Intercession of our Redeemer, and we are told by St. Paul that this has never ceased, but that as our High Priest within the veil Jesus Christ "ever liveth and makes intercession for us." The Divine Victim forever pleads the merits of His Sacrifice before the Throne of God.

My soul in baptism is made a partaker of Christ's life, and shares in all its functions. Each Christian then has a share in Christ's priesthood. "Ye are a royal priesthood," we are told. We must, then, if faithful to our baptismal vows, be showing forth this life day by day. We must unite our intercessions to that of the Heavenly Intercessor and plead that the merits of His Cross and Passion may be applied to the souls of men.

This ought to form a very definite and practical part of our spiritual life. There should be an ever increasing number of names and objects which we bring before God daily.

It is not an easy task, and not always interesting. We are so much more concerned with our own sins or necessities than with those of other people, and it is so much easier to ask for ourselves than for others. This is in harmony with the general selfishness of our fallen nature. We shall find, however, that in just such proportion as we forget self in another's service, shall we receive that strength and illumination that we most sorely need. "Give and it shall be given unto you" finds its fulfilment quite as truly in the life of prayer as in the more material sphere, and the soul that prays for others truly labors for God. The parish that is composed of souls thus praying is blessed of God. Let us strive to bring God's special blessing upon the parish that we love.

THE CONFRATERNITY OF THE BLESSED SACRAMENT.

For the benefit of those who are not associates of the Confraternity of the Blessed Sacrament, and who are ignorant of, or do not understand its object, we append a reprint from the pamphlet issued by the Confraternity.

S. Saviour's Ward, in this parish, is one of the oldest and largest in the country. We have now on our rolls the names of about eighty persons. The meetings are held the second Sunday in every month in St. John's Chapel, at half past four in the afternoon. It is to be hoped that we may have an increase of membership this winter.

WHAT IS IT?

It is a society of clergy and communicants of the Anglican Church, founded in England in 1862, and introduced into the United States in 1867. The English Branch now numbers about 20,000 Associates, of whom about 2000 are Priests, with 325 Wards. There are branches also in Scotland, Canada and the United States, but each Branch is autonomous, or perfectly independent of the others. The American, in which American Churchmen are chiefly interested, has on its roll about 1900 Associates, of whom 375 are Priests. It is an incorporated society and so capable of holding any property which may be given to it by will or in any way.

ITS OBJECTS.

1. To promote the honor, worship and Reverence due to the person of our Lord Jesus Christ in the Blessed Sacrament of His Body and Blood.

2. To make mutual and special intercessions at the time of and in union with the Eucharistic Sacrifice.

3. To promote the observance of the Catholic and primitive law of receiving the Holy Communion fasting.

And it endeavors to carry out these most desirable objects, not by controversy, but by united intercessory prayer. For nearly forty years it has defended the faith and teaching of the Church by prayer—especially in union with the Eucharistic Sacrifice.

ITS RULES.

Its rules are very simple—only such as every faithful communicant of the Church is supposed to observe, viz:

1. To communicate, or at least to be present, on Sunday and the greater festivals and other holy days, when the Holy Eucharist is celebrated, unless prevented by sickness or other urgent cause.

2. To promote, by all legitimate means, frequent and reverent celebrations of the Holy Eucharist, as the chief act of Divine service.

3. To make such special intercessions as shall be from time to time directed.

ITS GOVERNMENT, ETC.

Its government is lodged in a Superior General, a Secretary General, a Treasurer General, and a Council of twenty Priests Associate, all of whom are elected annually on the Thursday following Trinity Sunday.

Its internal machinery is of the simplest kind, and is largely the work of the Secretary General. It consists mainly of classifying and arranging the petitions which the Associates send him. They are arranged and printed monthly in a small book, and sent to each Associate. Every Associate has the privilege of sending three petitions each month, relating to the spiritual life in connection with the Blessed Sacrament. The Confraternity does not undertake to pray for temporal blessings, or anything not bearing on the Holy Eucharist.

As its funds permit the Confraternity makes grants to needy parishes and missions of one-half the cost of Holy Vessels, Burses, Veils, Albs and the proper colored vestments for the celebration of the Eucharist.

The expenses of the Confraternity are met by the freewill offerings of the Associates and an annual subscription of 50c., payable in advance on June 1st of each year. Candidates for holy orders, and members of the religious orders are exempt from the annual subscription.

IS SUCH A SOCIETY OR CONFRATERNITY NECESSARY?

This question is sometimes asked as an excuse for not belonging to the Confraternity, and in most cases there is a certain amount of insincerity about it. It is said "the Church is society enough for me." It is rather late to maintain the uselessness of Guilds, Brotherhoods, Confraternities, etc. It is perfectly true that the Church as the Divine Society is more than all of these. Yet her members have always emphasized and called attention to certain principles by united effort in a Society or Confraternity. Missionary societies emphasize the importance of missions; temperance societies emphasize and call attention to the great sin of intemperance. It is too true that the majority of our communicants do not recognize the Supernatural, Divine and Real Presence of Jesus Christ in the Eucharist; it is too true that the Eucharist as the divinely appointed act of worship for Sunday has been thrust aside and Matins and Litany substituted for it; it is too true that the large majority of our clergy and laity do not communicate fasting. The Confraternity was begun to emphasize the supreme importance of these essentials of the Christian religion.

The great purpose of the Confraternity is to unite Catholic minded people in the maintenance of three great principles of the Catholic religion, viz:

(a) The Real Presence of our Lord Jesus Christ in the Sacrament of His Body and Blood, and consequently the Honour due to His Person in the Sacrament; (b) The sacrificial nature of the Blessed Sacrament and consequently its obligatory character as the chief Sunday Service and the chief Act of Worship; (c) The continued and binding force of the primitive law of fasting Communion.

A great and radical change for the better has taken place in the Anglican Church in the last fifty years. Much that we all appreciate in multiplied Spiritual privileges, in the quickened life of devotion—who can tell how much of all this is owing to the quiet work of intercessory prayer in which the Confraternity of the Blessed Sacrament has been engaged for the last forty years? The Confraternity has been shunned, spoken against, looked upon with suspicion, bitterly attacked, yet no one has ever been able to prove that it has ever been in the slightest degree disloyal to the doctrines of the Book of Common Prayer and the traditions of the Church. It is in the highest sense of the word a purely devotional society.

MEMBERSHIP.

You who read these lines, if not already an Associate, can do a great work for the glory of God by asking a Priest Associate to admit you as an Associate. If you do not know a Priest Associate, write to the Secretary General, who will send you a form of application for membership. All necessary information may be obtained from the Manual, the price of which is twenty-five cents. The Medal costs fifty cents.

THE CANTICLE OF THE SUN.

On October fourth the Church celebrates the feast of S. Francis, "the little poor man of Assisi," one of the greatest of God's saints, whose influence accomplished the practical reformation of the Christian Church of his time. We print here the "Lauds of the Creatures," which he composed, and which is taken from the "Mirror of Perfection," the oldest biography of the Saint, written by his beloved disciple, Brother Leo.

HOW S. FRANCIS COMMENDED THE SUN AND THE FIRE ABOVE OTHER CREATURES.

Above all creatures lacking reason he did love the sun and fire with most affection, for he would say: "In the morning when the sun ariseth every man ought to praise God that did create him for our use, for that by him are our eyes enlightened by day; but in the evening when the night cometh, every man ought to praise Him for brother fire, for that by him are our eyes enlightened by night, for we be, as it were, all blind, and the Lord by these two brothers doth enlumine our eyes; and therefore specially for these and the other creatures whereof we do daily make use, ought we to praise the Creator." The which himself did always unto his dying day.

"Yea, when he was grieved of a sore infirmity, he did begin to sing the Laudes Domini that he had made as concerning the creatures, and afterwards did make his companions sing, so as that in meditating on the praise of God he might forget his pains and the bitterness of his infirmities."

"And for that he did deem and say that the sun is fairer than other creatures, and a nigher similitude of our Lord, and that the Lord Himself is called the 'Sun of Justice.' When he would give a title to the Laudes that he made of the creatures of the Lord, to wit, what time the Lord did certify him of His Kingdom, he did therefore call them 'The Song of Brother Sun.'"

These be the Lauds that he made.

"Most High, Almighty and most gracious Lord: Thine be the praises and the glory and the honour and every blessing, for unto Thee alone, O most highest, do they belong, and no man is worthy to make mention of Thy Name.

"Praised be Thou, O Lord, of all Thy creatures, and above all of Brother Sun, my lord, that doth illumine us with the dawning of the day.

"For he is fair and bright, and the brightness of his glory doth signify Thee, O Thou Most Highest.

"Praised be Thou, O my Lord, of Sister Moon, and the stars that Thou hast shapen in the heavens, bright and precious and comely.

"Praised be Thou, O my Lord, of Brother Wind, and the air, and of the clouds, and the clear, and of all the times of the sky whereby Thou dost make provision for Thy creatures.

"Praised be Thou, O my Lord, of Sister Water, for manifold is her use, and humble is she, and precious and chaste.

"Praised be Thou, O my Lord, of Brother Fire, by whom Thou dost lighten our darkness, and comely is he, and joyful and masterful and strong.

"Praised be Thou, O my Lord, of Sister Earth, our mother, that doth cherish us, and hath us in keeping, and doth bring forth fruit in abundance and flowers of many colours, and the grass.

"Praised be Thou, O my Lord, of them that do show forgiveness unto others for love of Thee, and do endure sickness and tribulation. Yea, blessed be they that do endure in peace, for of Thee, O Thou most highest, shall they be crowned.

"Praised be Thou, O my Lord, of Sister Death; the death of the body from whom no man living may escape; but woe unto them that shall die in deadly sin, and blessed be they that shall walk according unto Thy most holy will, for unto them shall the second death do no hurt.

"Praise ye and bless my Lord, and give thanks unto Him and serve Him in all humbleness."

PARISH NOTES.

The Sisters ask for contributions of cast-off clothing for distribution among the poor.

The Altar Guild will hold its first meeting on All Souls' Day after the Solemn Mass.

Work on the new parish building has been deferred, but will be commenced shortly after Easter.

The music for the Solemn Mass on St. Clement's day will be Saint Cæcelia, with orchestral accompaniment.

Subscriptions and donations for Altar flowers are asked for All Saints', St. Clement's and Christmastide. Small envelopes marked will be found in the corridor.

Confessions for the festival may be made on the Tuesday and Wednesday before. The hours will be posted later. The entire parish should make a good communion.

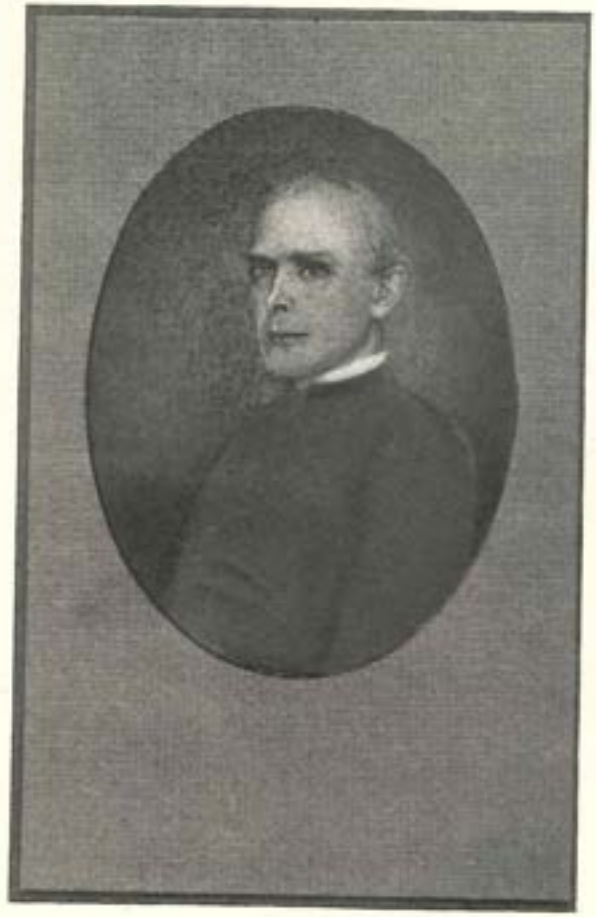
The offerings on Thanksgiving Day will be for the poor fund. Donations are also asked for the Episcopal Hospital. Put these offerings in an envelope marked "Hospital."

The clergy hope that every member of the parish will come to the parish tea on Thursday evening, November 23d. Cards of admission may be obtained from the Sisters.

During November a Requiem Mass will be said on each allowable day at 7.30 o'clock. Names to be mentioned should be written down and given to the clergy at least the day before.

According to our previous custom, the offerings on All Saints' Day will be devoted to the payment of the mortgage interest on All Saints' Mission House and the Seashore Home. A generous contribution is asked.

May we not have a larger attendance at the week-day Masses? There can be no better way of commencing our daily work than by offering ourselves to God in the Holy Sacrifice. The blessing that comes to us in these hours spent "with Jesus" is surely worth the slight inconvenience of early rising.



The Rev. W. A. McClenthen sailed for England on Saturday, September 30th. He said Mass at St. Katharine's Altar on Michaelmas and in the crypt on the morning of his departure. He carried with him the earnest prayers of St. Clement's people, that he may be abundantly blessed in his new life.

Commencing with Advent Sunday a Bible class for men will be held in St. John's Chapel every Sunday evening at 7.15. Questions on church doctrine or ritual will be received and answered at these instructions. It is hoped that many men will avail themselves of this opportunity to learn more of God's Word.

Our patronal feast this year falls on Thursday, November 23d. The following special preachers are expected to occupy St. Clement's pulpit during the octave: St. Clement's day, 11 A. M., Rev. Harvey Officer, Princeton, N. J.; Sunday, November 26, 11 A. M., Fr. Sargent, O. H. C.; 8 P. M., Rev. A. G. Mortimer, D. D.

The annual service for the Sodality, with solemn procession, will be held on the Sunday evening in the octave. It is to be hoped that all the members and associates will make a special effort to be present and take part in the procession. All should wear their medals. Women and girls wear veils, and should assemble in the upper school room at 7.30 P. M. Men and boys meet in St. John's Chapel.

On November 16th, the anniversary of the burial of Rev. G. H. Moffett, a Solemn Mass of Requiem will be sung at 11 o'clock. The eulogy will be delivered by the Rev. Arthur Ritchie, of St. Ignatius' Church, New York City. On that day the usual parish Mass will be said at 7 o'clock, but there will be additional requiems as follows: 6.45 (crypt), 7.30 and 8. All the members of the parish will, therefore, have the privilege of remembering before the Altar one who gave His life for the good of His people.

G. H. Moffett

Vespers of the Dead will be sung on Wednesday, November 1, at 5.15, in St. John's Chapel. The Masses on All Souls' Day will be at 6.30, 7 and 7.30 and Solemn Mass at 9. Names of baptized persons should be written out, at least one Christian name (not initials or terms like "father," etc.), and handed in by Wednesday afternoon at the latest. They will be read out at one Mass, and that may be specified.

Those intending to make their communion at the Solemn Mass (9 o'clock) should give notice to that effect beforehand. Otherwise the celebrant does not make provision. Bona Mors on Mondays during November will be after Evensong.

Persons who enter the church after the Gospel is read should not make their communions at that Mass. We cannot be too careful in our preparation to receive our Lord, and there should never be any sense of hurry or breathlessness. Some of us are not careful to be in church when the Mass commences. This is a serious fault, and not only is a dishonor to God, but is likewise most disturbing to the devotions of others. There seems to be a growing tendency on the part of many to be a trifle late for the services. This arises usually from the bad habit of giving one's self barely time to reach the church and making no allowance for possible delay. A few quiet moments on one's knees before the Altar would seem to be a fitting preparation for offering the Holy Sacrifice. It is hardly necessary to comment upon the shocking habit of entering the church and going at once to the Altar rail if the priest is communicating the people. There can be no blessing in a communion thus sacrilegiously made. Let us all try to be in time to say our prayers before the beginning of Mass.

St. Luke's Day, October, 1905.

NOVENA—NOV. 14-23.

Memorial for the parish (to be said daily):

Ant.—I will pour water upon him that is thirsty, and floods upon the dry ground: I will pour my Spirit upon thy seed, and my blessing upon thine offspring.

V.—O Lord, look down from heaven.
R.—Behold, and visit this vine.

Let us pray.

Almighty and everlasting God, who does govern all things in heaven and earth, mercifully hear our supplications, and grant unto this parish all things that are needful for its spiritual welfare; schools in which to train the young in Thy faith and fear; ministers to labor in this portion of Thy vineyard; a Church restored to the beauty of holiness. Strengthen and confirm the faithful; visit and relieve the sick; turn and soften the wicked; rouse the careless; recover the fallen; restore the penitent; remove all hindrances to the advancement of Thy truth; bring all to be of one heart and one mind within the fold of Thy Holy Church; to the honor and glory of Thy Holy Name; through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

THE MEMORIAL ALTAR.

The offerings on St. Clement's Day will be devoted to the Altar which it is proposed to place in the sanctuary as a memorial to the late rector. Following as closely as it does the anniversary of Fr. Moffett's death, we should make our feast day one of thanksgiving for his life and work among us. We trust that there may be a generous response to this appeal, and that we may be able to raise a worthy altar to God's glory, which may be a fitting expression of our gratitude for the "good example" of one of His servants.

ALL SOULS' DAY.

In Jesus' heart they rest,
  Our precious dead.
No sadness in the breast,
  No fear, no dread;
From every care, release,
  Pain left behind,
And only perfect peace
  In Him they find.
Under His nail-pierced hand
  Each wound is healed,
And now they understand
  God's plan, revealed.
All earthly trials sink
  To nothingness.
Deep of Christ's love they drink
  O wondrous bliss!
Ah, Jesu! God! we pray
  On Thy dear Breast,
May those we name to-day
  Find endless rest.
Grant unto us a part
  In their reward.
Open thy sacred heart
  To us, dear Lord!

ALL SAINTS AND ALL SOULS'.

The Christian year is closing. Many are the festivals which the Church has celebrated in her annual course, most sacred the mysteries of faith and love to which they have been dedicated. And every feast day has held up to us a mirror of life, in which we might see something shadowing forth our own course. And now, after she has finished this, her loving duty with great benefit to souls, the Church leads her children once more to the threshold of Eternity, and with her finger points twice, significantly, into the space beyond the world.

At the first indication, the eyes of the faithful look into the open heaven in all its glory and beauty. They see Christ seated in the midst of His saints and chosen ones, triumphing in them and they in Him; celebrating that eternal feast day, of which All Hallows, in which the Church yearly calls her children to rejoice, is but a dull reflection for the earthly pilgrim.

But on account of the glory that will be, the Feast of All Saints here on earth is dear, and looked forward to by the weary pilgrim. It is to him a day of home-sickness, of yearning for his true Home; it recalls to him the fact that he is one of a mighty communion which embraces Christ and all His elect. It establishes his faith, strengthens his courage, stimulates his watchfulness, blows his love to an intenser ardor. It is a worthy close to all the festivals of the Church year. The Christian festivals begin with the Babe in the Manger and end with the triumph of the same in Heaven in the midst of His ransomed people, of those whom His flesh-taking has won for glory.

But the pulse of the Church throbs with provident love and active pity. While gazing, as at All Hallows, into the splendors of the elect and perfected, who are enthroned with Christ in ineffable light, she does not forget herself in dumb ecstasy. She wonders, and prays, and praises and thinks; but with the uneasiness of love, she turns to look for those of her children who did, indeed, pass into eternity with faith and love, but who were yet full of human infirmity; halting, wavering, imperfect souls, who cannot be counted with the saints; who have much to learn, much to forget, powers to acquire, habits to cast off, before they can see God face to face and live. She finds them elsewhere in a state of purification; this is why she points once more. Her compassionate heart turns to them in pity and with longing, and for the sake of these souls, she cuts short, she hastens over the festival of the Saints in Heaven, and already on the afternoon of All Saints' Day, begins the octave of supplication for the souls that are being purged. Verily, love has in its precipitancy something unreasonable to casual eyes. Love is drawn nearer to those that suffer than to those that rejoice.

The soul, after parting from the body, has necessarily to go through a condition of purification before it is meet to behold God in His glory. The time of growth is not cut short by death, it continues till the soul disengages itself from those aims that debased and restrained it whilst on earth. Here it was distracted from its true aim, its hidden powers had not scope for expansion, or were arrested by circumstances, or by want of will or knowledge to direct and discipline them aright. When the soul wakes to a sight of God as He is, it is filled with a sense of its imperfections, its lost opportunities, its miserable shortcomings, its incapacity for enjoyment of God in His glory, goodness and beauty. Consequently it has to overcome its ignorance, which obscures the sight of Him in His splendor; its grossness, which has entangled it in the pursuit of carnal aims, so that it has lost its appetite for holiness; and its vitiated taste, which interferes with its loving that which is beautiful from a sense of the perfection of what is lovely. The soul has much to unlearn, much to cast off, much to acquire. The realization of its imperfections causes it distress and pain, the yearning for perfection is the travail of the soul to its new birth. Thus its condition, after death, is one of waiting, watching, growing, suffering. And yet this pain and suffering is far removed from that of earth. No longer is there fear of eternal separation from God. The soul rests from the travail of its earthly life and temptation and sin are no longer possible. The throes of the new birth, painful as they may be, are yet consistent with deep happiness, in the knowledge of God's love, and the assurance of salvation.

It is when the soul is in this condition that the prayers of the Church assist it. Real compassion, that human sympathy which binds every member of the body mystical together, comes into action, and when one member suffers, all the members suffer sympathetically with it, and the prayers of men on earth and saints in heaven assist the poor, fainting, yearning spirit in its upward course.

The Scriptures give us plain directions to pray one for another, to make prayers, supplications and giving of thanks for all men, to pray for all saints, etc. And if all belong to the same society, if there be one body and one spirit; if that one body be Christ Himself, from whom no faithful soul can be separated by life or death, it does not appear how any soul, united to the head, can be excluded from the prayers which the Church offers for the whole body, or from participation in the virtues of that sacrifice, without which no human soul can live. If it is the duty of all Christians to pray one for another, our prayers will necessarily comprehend all who can derive benefit from them; that is, all who are united with us in the household of God. Wherever they are, they are in the one kingdom of the Redeemer, and have their life from the same Body and Blood which are the nourishment of ours. No distance can divide them from our charity or from the life of Christ; for whether near or afar off all are made nigh by the Blood of Christ; nigh to God, nigh to each other, nigh to all the saints.

Adapted from Baring-Gould.

"We find in the legendary history of St. Patrick a noble use of the verse, 'Some put their trust in chariots, and some in horses; but we will remember the Name of the Lord our God' (Ps. xx, verse 7). Every third year, at the spring equinox, which closed the Celtic year, the festival of Tara was held on the great plain of Breg. Here were gathered the five kings of Ireland, the twenty-five tutelary kings, their attendants, their warriors, and their chariots. In nine triple circles, as night fell, they took their places round the huge flower-strewn pyre, which rose on the terrace of the palace of Tara. Throughout all Ireland, every hearth was cold. The people waited to rekindle their fires from the sacred flame which descended from heaven upon the pyre.

"Suddenly, as the vast throng was hushed in anxious expectation, a bright light shone out on the extreme verge of the plain. 'Who,' cried King Laeghaire, in his rage, 'has dared to commit this sacrilege?' and all the counsellors, the bards, the judges, and the nobles answered, 'We know not.' But the chief of the Druids cried aloud to Laeghaire, 'O King, if that distant flame be not now extinguished, it will never be put out. Before it our sacred flame will pale, and the man who has lighted it will destroy thy kingdom. Over thee and over us he will bear rule, and he and his successors will reign forever in Ireland.' Then the king ordered the Druids to seize the sacrilegious wretch, and bring him to Tara. So the Druids, with their chariots, their horses, and their spearmen, set forth on their mission, They found that the light was shining upon a little altar set up in a rude hut, and before the shrine knelt white-robed men in prayer. They were St. Patrick, his twelve priests, and the boy, Benignus, who were celebrating their midnight service to welcome the dawn of Easter morning.

"The Druids dared not enter. Standing without, they bade the men come forth. Patrick obeyed the summons, and followed the Druids to the palace of Tara, chanting as he went, 'Some put their trust in chariots, and some in horses; but we will remember the Name of the Lord our God.' Before the assembled hosts he spoke of the Kingdom founded by the King of kings, and of Him who reigns from the Cross. With words of such power did he speak, that nature was hushed in stillness; the ebbing tide ceased to sink; the branches stirred not in the woods; the eagle checked his flight; the white stag of Mulla, bending over the stream, forbore to drink. The power of the Druids was broken. As day dawned, the magic circles were dispersed, the sacred pyre was cold, and the only flame that shone through the twilight was the altar-fire which the Christians had kindled to hail the resurrection of their Lord."

PARISH NOTES.

The Masses on S. John's Day will be celebrated in S. John's Chapel.

There have been 7710 communions made in the parish during the past year.

The Mothers' Turkey Supper will be held on Thursday, December twenty-eighth.

The Sisters ask, as usual, for donations for the worthy poor, for Christmastide.

On Saturday, December ninth, Mr. Sears will give an organ recital in the church at four o'clock.

According to the custom in previous years, the collection on Christmas Day will be devoted to the Sanctuary Fund.

The eulogy delivered by the Rev. Arthur Ritchie on November sixteenth is to be printed by the vestry.

The alms on All Saints' Day, for the mortgage interest on the Mission House, amounted to $151.16. This has since been increased by fifty dollars. About one hundred dollars more is needed.

The offering on S. Clement's Day, for the Memorial Altar Fund, amounted to $2,416.07. The designs for the new altar is now being drawn, and we hope before long, to be able to exhibit them to the parish.

The Masses on All Souls' Day were well attended and many names were remembered at the altar. The Solemn Requiem was sung by the Rev. C. C. Quin, with the Rev. F. D. Ward, and the Rev. F. M. W. Schneeweiss as deacon and subdeacon. The collection, which was devoted to the Burial Fund, amounted to $24.46.

The children of the Catechism are preparing a Christmas Mystery, which will be produced during Christmas tide. The play was written by Father Field and has been given several times in Boston under his direction and with marked success. The work of learning the carols, and the parts is arduous, but is progressing smoothly under the direction of Fr. Schneeweiss and Mr. Kellogg. All the members of the parish are urged to encourage the children by their attendance on the night of the presentation of the Mystery.

Several memorials were presented to the parish during the last month. These include the following:

A silver lavabo dish and pitcher for the crypt chapel, and a silver mounted missal for the high altar, to be used at low masses. (These three are marked, "To the Glory of God, and in loving memory of Julia Neill Mayer.") A red cope, the work of All Saints' Sisters, a memorial to the Rev. G. H. Moffett. This was worn for the first time on S. Clement's Day.

Two cushions for the missal rest at the high altar, also memorials to the Rev. G. H. Moffett.

At the parish tea the rector announced that it will be necessary to raise about 1200 dollars for necessary repairs in the church, in connection with the new parish building. Just before the festival the sexton reported that one of the posts that support the gallery, from the basement, had fallen, and this necessitates the immediate removal of the gallery, which has been unsafe for a long time. In addition to this, the vestibule of the church must be renovated and made worthy of its new surroundings, and a few minor changes will be necessary in the clergy house. Contributions for this object may be handed to the clergy or sent to the Accounting Warden.

The Rev. Mr. Claiborne, of Sewanee, Tennessee, has been in the city recently, presenting the needs of the Industrial School for Boys, which has been founded in his parish. This is a mission work and would seem to come within the control of the Board of Missions, but as the work is in the diocese of Tennessee, it is not in the Missionary jurisdiction. The sum of five thousand dollars is urgently needed to build a dormitory. The school is for the benefit of the mountaineers of the district and receives the warm commendation and support of Bishop Gailor.

Subscriptions may be sent (however small your means may make them) to Miss Fanny Brock, Treasurer, 2101 Spruce Street.

S. CLEMENT'S TIDE.

The Feast of S. Clement, Bishop and Martyr, and Patron of this Parish, was celebrated with an earnestness of devotion and spiritual enthusiasm, which continued throughout the whole festival.

Loving labor had been given by faithful ones in preparing vestments, sacred vessels, and ornaments, that all might be bright and ready, and in keeping with the joy of the feast. Nor was the spiritual preparation lost sight of. During the two preceding days, many prepared themselves by making their confessions, and a very good number made their communions at the early Masses on S. Clement's Day.

At the Solemn Mass at 11, the Altar was made glorious with red vestments and abundance of red flowers and lights. The music was Gounod's "S. Cecilia," which was splendidly sung by the choir, assisted by special soloists, Mr. George Dundas, tenor, and Mr. Harry Hotz, bass. The soprano solos were sung by Robert Kneedler and Leon Kraft, of our own choir. The organist, Mr. Sears, had arranged, as on former occasions, for an orchestral accompaniment, under the direction of Mr. William Stoll. The whole service raised and sustained the devotion of the large congregation throughout, and seemed a worthy offering and act of worship to Almighty God. The Mass was preceded by a Solemn Procession. The Rector was Celebrant, with the Revs. C. C. Quin and F. D. Ward as Deacon and Sub-Deacon. The preacher was the Rev. Harvey Officer, of Princeton, N. J.

The offerings, which were for the Fund for an Altar in memory of the Rev. George Herbert Moffett, amounted to $2393.

The Parish Tea on the evening of S. Clement's Day was largely attended by the parishioners, and the occasion was a very happy one.

The Procession of the Sodality on Sunday night in the Octave drew all the faithful ones of the various Guilds to join in an act of most real devotion and worship; as like an army, they followed their banners, and sang their hymns of longing for the heavenly country and for steadfastness in earthly warfare until the "Home" be reached. The choir was accompanied by a quartette of horns and drums.

The Rev. Alfred G. Mortimer, D. D., preached the sermon, which sounded the note of obedience to "the heavenly vision," and was full of inspiration to Christian loyalty and heroism.

On Monday night the children were entertained by Professor Elwood with most astonishing tricks of sleight of hand. They were further made happy with ice cream afterwards. There was a good attendance.

THE REQUIEM ON NOVEMBER 16.

On November sixteenth, a solemn mass of requiem was offered for the repose of the soul of the Rev. Geo. Herbert Moffett. There were three requiems celebrated early in the morning, at 6.30, 7.30 and 8, by Rev. C. C. Quin, Rev. F. D. Ward, and Rev. H. R. Sargent, O. H. C. The solemn mass at 11 was sung by the Rev. C. S. Hutchinson, with Fr. Quin and Fr. Ward as deacon and subdeacon. A number of clergy took places in the choir. Among those were: Rev. Robt. Paine, of Mt. Calvary, Balto., Rev. D. I. Odell, Rev. Robert Ritchie, Rev. Dr. Upjohn, Rev. H. P. Dyer, Rev. Walter Clapp, Rev. C. M. Armstrong, Rev. W. L. Hayward, Rev. F. D. Lobdell, Rev. J. K. Underhill, Fr. Sargent, O. H. C., Rev. H. P. Roche.

At the end of the mass, Rev. Arthur Ritchie, D. D., rector of S. Ignatius Church, New York City, delivered a most eloquent and touching eulogy. The sermon was followed by the absolution.

ADVENT.

With the joy of our parish festival lingering in our hearts, we enter into the solemn season of Advent, when the church assumes her garb of penitence and bids us look forward to the second coming of her Divine Lord, of which no man knoweth the day nor the hour. We are reminded of that great day when all must render an account of the things done in the flesh and receive the due reward for our deeds. It is a season which brings with it searching of heart and trembling of spirit, but the note of solemnity is relieved, and souls gladdened, by the near approach of the great feast that is peculiarly dear to the Christian, and as we prepare our hearts for the reception of the Christ Child, in all humility and tender love, we shall at the same time be rendering ourselves fit for His coming, whether in the hour of our death, or when he shall come in glory and judge both quick and dead.

The masses on Christmas day will be as usual. Any who may feel constrained to receive at the midnight mass are expected to keep a fast of devotion for six hours previous, and must hand their names to the clergy the day before.

LITANY.

Mary, Mother, O how blest!
Jesu's head lay on thy breast,
Jesu's eyes on thee didst shine
While His hands tight clasped in thine
Knew thy kisses warm and sweet,
And His heart on thine didst beat!

Mary, Mother of God's dear Son,
Pray for us sinners, every one.
By Thy holy infancy,
Hear us, Jesu, when we cry!

Through the streets of Nazareth town,
Thy dear Son played up and down,
And at even when play was o'er,
Sought thee sitting before the door,
Finding there, in the loved embrace
Of thy tender arms, a resting place.

Mary, Mother of God's dear Son,
Pray for us sinners, every one.
By Thy Childhood's purity,
Hear us, Jesu, when we cry!

Mary, Mother, how dread thy pain
When thy Son was foully slain,
Hanging there on the cruel tree,
A Sacrifice for thee and me,
While, as of old in Nazareth,
He owned thy love, with failing breath.

Mary, Mother of God's dear Son,
Pray for us sinners, every one.
By Thy bitter agony,
Save us, Jesu, when we cry!

Mary, Mother, joy is thine!
Blessed Saints around thee shine,
Bending at His Sacred Feet,
Giving worship as is meet,
To thy Son, Whom all must own
King and Saviour, on His throne.

Mary, Mother of God's dear Son,
Pray for us sinners, every one.
Jesu, from Thy throne on high,
Hear Thy children as they cry!

A LETTER FROM FR. CLAPP.

A letter has just reached us from Rev. W. C. Clapp, an old friend of S. Clement's, which encloses his annual report to Bishop Brent. As we are sure that this "bulletin" will be of interest to the parish, we are printing it in full, in two numbers of the magazine. In his letter, Fr. Clapp says: "I feel bold to send you this because I can absolutely disclaim any desire to extract a contribution. I do want to give such information about one of the few missions conducted on Catholic lines, as shall arouse real interest at S. Clement's, and give us prayers. The things we most need money cannot buy."

BONTOC BULLETIN, NO. 4.

(Being a report from Jan. 1, 1904, to July 1, 1905, recently submitted to the Bishop.)

Since the beginning of the year 1904 and up to July 1, 1905, I have baptized 31 persons, 2 of these in San Emilio, the others in Bontoc. Of this number 6 were Ilokanos, purely or of mixed blood, the others were Igorrotes. Fifteen were either infants or children under fifteen years of age. Of the whole number only 6 could be given anything like adequate instruction. Only by degrees can a definite catechumenate be established. At first the only way seemed to be to baptize all who applied or were brought. Too often, doubtless, the motives which brought them were dim and insufficient. An Ilokano would want a servant for a wage of little more than food and shelter and a certain protecting, paternal interest. This seems to be about what was implied in the relation of sponsor and Godchild. Sometimes the relationship had a reality which was acknowledged on both sides, and it was a continually strengthening bond. But more often, I fear, that, as between Igorrotes and Ilokanos, the relationship was limited by the material advantages which were experienced. Inquiry for those who have been baptized in this way, frequently discovers that they have departed for their native town, which means, of course, that there is no longer a reasonable possibility that they may be taught the things which a Christian ought to know and believe and live by for his soul's health. At the Bishop's recent visitation, June 25, 1905, 20 persons were confirmed, the majority of whom were children who had been under instruction for many months. Half of the candidates were Igorrotes. These confirmed persons are being trained to prepare for and make their communions each month. Previously, at odd times, about fifteen of the natives had communicated. The people seemed to have no idea of the joy and duty of frequent approach to the altar, and the men came practically not at all. There have been 5 marriages and 6 burials. The foregoing statistics relative to spiritual ministrations go to emphasize the dependence of real progress upon the development of our means of intercourse with the minds of the people. If we could speak their language, or they ours, there could be, in all cases, a measure of instruction before admission to Baptism, rules of probation, discipline, and gradual approach, such as should characterize a proper catechumenate, could be made and enforced; confessions could be intelligently heard and spiritual advice given. The conduct of the Church's services would speak more distinctly to those who attend. As a matter of fact, the only satisfactory instances, absolutely considered of our work with Igorrotes, have been those of a few of the brightest boys, who have first learned some English at the public school and through the start thus gained, have been drawn to us. It is for the interest of the Mission that the public school should be supported and made more efficient. Much depends upon the congeniality and good will of those who manage the school, and in this we are singularly favored at present in the persons of Mr. and Mrs. Smith. But no local effort without governmental recognition of the peculiar conditions existing among these people can ever do what ought to be done to stimulate the Igorrotes and cause them to learn the ways of progress. There must be the wise, gentle and gradual, but inexorable push of State authority, along with the efforts and example of individuals who work among them in the missionary spirit. These seem to me the two necessary elements. The number of those extraordinary boys in Bontoc who will first, through natural desire for progress, attend the school, and then from there be led to us, must be very limited. Of girls, owing to the strength of, we can hardly hope to get any by such a process. In the absence of any governmental authority, which would, I believe, in many cases, be just the necessary thing to turn the tide toward education and civilization, the mission must organize its own methods as best it can. We hope that before long some good woman will come, whose work it will be to win her way, and the mission's way into the hearts of the women and girls. We must pay great immediate attention to that side of the work, if we are to take any precautions against the heart-breaking falling-off among the boys as they approach manhood. And, further, we hope to establish an Orphanage or Home, which shall be at the same time a school for unfortunate children gathered here and there from the Igorrote region. Plans have already been made looking toward such an institution and I hope, if they can be carried through, we may have a definite leverage on at least a few souls to train in the Eternal Kingdom. Meantime, the study of the language goes on, a little, sometimes a very little each day. In July of last year, we issued a mimeographed vocabulary of some 1800 words. If we should print our present collection it would be at least fifty per cent. larger. We have also in MS. a Catechism of nearly four hundred questions and answers in English and Igorrote; the Creed, Lord's Prayer and Ten Commandments have been done into the vernacular, and parts of the daily Evensong are said in the same. The Offices for Holy Baptism and Holy Matrimony have been translated. At present we are working on a revised vocabulary, which shall proceed from Igorrote to English, with examples of idiomatic usage; and on a translation of the Gospel, according to St. Mark. But while these and other similar activities make a considerable record on paper, and while we can, after a fashion, understand and communicate with the people, mostly children, who throng around the Mission House daily, the real ability to think and speak in Igorrote seems about as far off as ever, and the one thing which would enable us to speak directly of the religion of Jesus to these people apparently refuses to be hurried.

PARISH NOTES.

The offering on Christmas Day was as follows: For the Sanctuary Fund, $849.92; for the Memorial Altar, $52.

The Guild of S. Vincent will hold its annual reunion and dinner at the clergy house on Wednesday evening, January 24th.

The memorial sermon preached by Rev. Arthur Ritchie on November 16th, has been printed. A copy will be mailed to each communicant, and a limited number of extra copies may be procured from the Rector.

One of the younger members of the Altar Guild, has finished recently and presented to the church a very beautiful stole and maniple, for use at solemn requiems. The vestments were used for the first time at the Requiem for Rev. G. H. Moffett.

On Sunday morning, December 21st, the preacher was the Rev. R. M. Sherman, from the diocese of Hankow, China. Mr. Sherman has been working in the mission field for seven years, and is now taking his furlough, but returns to Hankow in the course of a few months.

The subscriptions for Altar flowers for S. Clement's Day and Christmas, 1905, amount to $76.25; from the box, $4.14. Total, $80.39. This sum falls far below the subscription of last year, which was $102.40. Those who have charge of the Altar flowers will be much inconvenienced if the amount this year is not increased. May we not hope for a generous response from those who have not already contributed, that the Altar of God may be suitably adorned for the coming of Jesus Christ in the Sacrament of His Love?

MARY FREDERICKA LEX.

On December sixteenth, entered into Life Eternal, Mary Fredericka Lex, a faithful member of this congregation, and one who had been identified with the parish since 1878. She was a woman of rare qualities of mind and soul—and blessed with a large-hearted sympathy, which never failed toward any who stood in need of encouragement or cheer.

Loyal and devoted to the Church, she stood by the parish bravely through all its vicissitudes, and manifested in her life the Catholic principles in which she believed and the grace which she received at St. Clement's Altar.

She entered into the nearer presence of God, only a few days after the death of her aged mother, to whom she had long been a devoted daughter and companion.

The prayers of many hearts ascend to God, that she may find refreshment, light and peace on the breast of that adorable Lord, whom she loved and served.

CHRISTMAS TIDE.

This year Advent passed so quickly into Christmas, that the work of preparing the Church for the Feast of our Lord's Nativity, had to be crowded into the few hours between the late Mass of Fourth Sunday in Advent and the First Evensong of Christmas.

Members of St. Vincent's Guild, however, with willing and skilful hands, carried through the work of decorating and setting up the rood-screen, and at the time of Evensong, a wonderful transformation had been effected at the entrance to the chancel, the sight of Christmas greens telling all that the happy feast of the Christ-child of Bethlehem had begun.

Solemn Evensong was sung by the Rector with the Revs. C. C. Quin and F. D. Ward as attendant sacred ministers. At the end of Evensong, a Solemn Procession was made about the church and Solemn Te Deum sung before the Altar.

Masses of Christmas began at midnight, and at the hour when in the field, near Bethlehem, the listening shepherds heard the "multitude of the heavenly host praising God" for the birth of the world's Saviour, the faithful came to sing their hymns and lift their hearts in adoring worship to the Child of Mary, born at Bethlehem on that first Christmas.

At the Masses which followed at 6, 7, 8 and 9.15 a large number of Communions was made. The weather being so favorable, a greater number than usual made their Communions on the Feast-day itself, and did not defer them until during the Octave.

After the Mass at 9.15, the children visited the Creche in St. John's Chapel, and sang carols of adoration to the new-born Child in the manger.

For the Solemn Mass, the choir sang Mozart's Seventh, the music of the soprano solos being especially well given.

The Mothers' Christmas supper on Thursday, 28th December, was largely attended, and all enjoyed the good things which had been bountifully provided. After the supper, Mrs. Hackerberger very kindly and cheerfully gave several solos on the saxophone, which were highly appreciated, as was also the vocal solo by Miss Fryer.

The Treats for Guilds still to come in January are St. Katharine's on Tuesday, 2d, St. Mary's on Monday, 8th, St. Vincent's on Wednesday, 24th.

True Christmas joy, which only comes from heaven, has found its welcome and resting place in many grateful hearts, who have learned that earthly joy can only find second place there. May this joy, which God alone can give, abide with all through the coming year!

THE CATECHISM FESTIVAL.

The Christmas fete of the Catechism was held in the parish hall on St. Stephen's day at eight o'clock.

The service was Fr. Field's "Christmas Mystery," which was written for the use of his children at St. Augustin's, Boston. It consisted of the Christmas story, told by means of carols and tableaux. We tried to make this part of the festival a real act of worship and the children were quite reverent throughout.

The principal characters were Charles Patterson as St. Gabriel, Thomas Sharpe as St. Joseph, Meta Haskins as St. Elizabeth, and Alice Fortune as St. Mary.

The Mystery began with a prelude sung by all the children, telling of man's creation and fall, and the expectation of the Saviour.

The first scene was the Annunciation, the chorus responding to the words of St. Mary and St. Gabriel.

At the Visitation, the chorus sang Magnificat, and at each tableau sang some of the familiar Christmas carols, thus bringing all the children into the act of worship.

The Annunciation to St. Joseph was followed by the Nativity. At the representation of this Mystery. Cleon Throckmorton, Alfred Johnson, Louis Ehlers, Charles Clark, William and James MacLaughlin appeared as the angels.

The next picture of the "angels and shepherds," Bayard Goodwin, George MacLaughlin and Samuel McConnell, was very beautiful. The chorus sang "Hail,, thou ever blessed Morn." There was a sudden change in the next scene to Herod's Court. Halsey Wood as Herod, and Norman Haskins, Peter Boyle, Alex. Wood and Samuel Kay as the attendant Roman soldiers, made a striking tableau, while the chorus sang the "Black Decree." It brought about a change of scene and thought, and made the adoration in the last scene more impressive. In the last scene Grover Welch, James Covert, and Herbert Daniels as the three kings, came in singing "We three kings of Orient are" and offered their gifts; and at the end, while the children were singing "Venite Adoramus," all those who had taken part came in and worshipped.

The teachers worked very hard over the costumes and stage hangings.

After the service was over the children had refreshments and their presents.

THE GUILD OF THE HOLY CHILD.

The Guild of the Holy Child had its Christmas party at the Mission House Saturday in Christmas week.

The Sisters and associates had made the tables very attractive and the members of the Guild seemed very happy. After the refreshments, the presents were given out and then the prizes.

Several of the girls received a dress pattern for attendance at Mass and then it was announced that four girls had been every Sunday to Mass and also at every Guild meeting since last January. Of these Olive Daniels and Maisie Bambach were among the older girls and Margaret Welch has missed the opening meeting this fall, so the Silver Crucifix was awarded to Sadie McElroy, as it is always given to the smallest girl eligible.

THE GUILD OF ST. NICHOLAS.

The Guild of St. Nicholas had its Christmas party on Saturday in Christmas week in the parish hall.

The boys went into the chapel for a brief service at the Creche and then went upstairs. They all sat down at the tables and ate ice cream and cake and nearly blew the roof off with the noise from the musical instruments in their bonbons. Then the presents were given out. No prizes are given in the Guild, but Alfred Johnson, Charles and William Fortune, Cleon Throckmorton, Grover Welch, and George James and William McLaughlin have been present at Guild every time this fall; and also John and Edward Boyle, Charles Clarke, William and Charles Fortune, Cleon Throckmorton and Charles Fullerton, have been at 9.15 Mass every Sunday since they began to have their attendance marked this fall. There have also been several more of the boys present at Mass every Sunday, but they have been at one of the other Masses, where it is impossible to keep a record of.

THE EPIPHANY.

The principal design of the Church in celebrating this feast is, that her members may show gratitude to God for manifesting the Gospel to the Gentile world, and vouchsafing to it the same privileges as to the Jews, who had hitherto been His chosen and peculiar people. The first instance of this Divine favor was the Manifestation of Christ to the Wise Men of the East. These, who are called Magi in Greek, were doubtless men of high rank; tradition holds them to have been kings or princes. The Scripture is silent as to their number, but the general opinion, supported by the authority of St. Leo and others, declares for three, and they are given the names of Gaspar, Melchior, and Balthasar. It has never been questioned but that they spent the rest of their lives in the fervent service of God; they are said to have been baptized by the Apostle Thomas, and to have preached the Gospel in Persia. There bodies were brought by the first Christian Emperors from the East to Constantinople, whence they were conveyed to Milan; the Emperor Frederick I. translated them in 1162 to Cologne, in Germany, where they still remain.

Many very curious traditions of no authority have attached to these three holy men. They are said to have been Shem, Ham, and Japhet, who had fallen asleep in a cave, and to have awakened only at the Nativity of Christ, when they came to adore Him; and then to have returned to their cave to die. A much more trustworthy tradition is to the effect that each wise man belonged to a different stock; that one was of the seed of Shem, another of the family of Japhet, and that the third, represented in art as black, belonged to the descendants of Ham.

Some authors have suggested that the seeming star, which appeared to the Magi in the East, might be that glorious light which shone upon the shepherds of Bethlehem, when the Angel came to impart to them the tidings of the Saviour's birth, which, at a distance, might appear like a star.

According to an ancient commentator on St. Matthew, this star, on its first appearance to the Magi, had the form of a radiant child, bearing a sceptre or cross, and in some early Italian frescoes it is so depicted.

The Epiphany has always been regarded as a principal festival of the Church. It is referred to by Clement of Alexandria, who was born about fifty years after the death of St. John the Evangelist.

The Son of Righteousness arose to be a Light to lighten the Gentiles, as well as the Glory of His people Israel the Wise Men, who knelt as on this day before their infant King in Bethlehem, were an earnest and promise of those multitudes of all people and tongues, which should hereafter be brought into the Church and shine in the Light of Christ. Time was, when the inhabitants of this country lay in as gross darkness as the most degraded heathen; but, by the grace of God, and the self-denying labors of Christian men, we have been brought to the Light, and have received the blessed revelation of the love of God. Let us magnify the riches of God's grace, and pray it may not have been vouchsafed to us in vain. We might have been still heathen, but God has embraced us in the arms of His mercy, and brought us near to Himself. Shall not the day on which we commemorate His mercy be a day of real and heartfelt thankfulness?

ALL THINGS NEW.

Another year has passed away; another year with its joys, its sorrows, its successes, its failures; with its delightful associations and dark memories; with its toils, its trivialities, its regrets; with its partial achievements, its phantom hopes, its unrealized possibilities.

The last chapters of the last books of the Bible, are not, as one might have expected, a summary of the past, but an anticipation of the future. They are a magnificent prophecy of things to come; they tell of a great renewal, when everything which mars the happiness, or sullies the life, of man here, shall be removed; there shall be no more pain, no more sorrow, no more sin, no more death. Yes, God shall make His tabernacle with men, shall be seen of men, shall be known of men. And where God is, there no evil can exist. Hope, not regret, is the watch-word of the Christian. Forward, not backward, is the key-note of the Bible.

The past year has had its sorrows. It has brought its bereavements. The associations of half a life time have been suddenly snapped asunder. This last year has made a terrible blank in your life. What, then? Will you say that a light has been forever quenched; or will you not rather believe that it burns more brightly elsewhere to gladden you with a clearer flame hereafter? Or how you had trials of another kind? Your business has gone wrong; your character has been attacked; your affections have been spurned and blighted. It has been a dark year for you. Again, I say, turn your back upon the past. The past will give you no strength; the past will only tempt you to indifference or to despair. But look in front of you; for there is the secret of strength, there is the promise of victory, there is the clean heart and the right spirit, there is the Vision of Glory, there is the very presence of God Himself: "Behold, I make all things new."

BISHOP LIGHTFOOT.

Letter from Fr. Clapp.

(Concluded.)

The whole case of the evangelization of the Igorrote country is one where preparation and foresight and the distribution of a wide influence are likely to produce effects out of proportion to the numbers engaged. Without disparaging the work of a priest, single-handed, in an isolated point, it yet seems true that the multiplication of workers and agencies, judiciously placed, is what is required for duly impressing the people with the earnestness and permanency of the church's purpose. Some should devote themselves almost wholly to the learning of the language, from books (which we hope gradually to construct) and from close, long-continued contact with the people, and this should be so systematized that a course of instruction, with competent teachers, could be placed before the newcomer. Two lots of land have been recently acquired by the purchase of the rights of the previous occupants. If now some portions of land that were used by the Spanish Government can be added to these, we shall have a large, shapely tract, stretching from the Plaza to the river bank, and affording a fine site for the grouping of our mission buildings. The lots purchased have some trees which are prolific in fruit—mangoes, citrons, and an excellent kind of grape-fruit—as well as some coffee. Properly fenced and cultivated, the land in question will make a most attractive mission "compound." If means could be devised for securing a supply of running water for household and especially for irrigation purposes, the prospects for the development of such an area would be greatly increased. The practical matter of providing daily bread for a remote mountain station in these islands presents a considerable difficulty. The priest of Bontoc, as postmaster, has access to the Civil Commissary, at Cervantes, yet that is but indifferently supplied, and nearly all provisions have to be brought from Manila, at great cost for carrying. On this account, and to prove the agricultural possibilities of the soil and climate, the mission, in the person of Mr. Mackenzie and an Igorrote helper, has spent much time and labor in the effort to cultivate a garden. Viewed absolutely, the results have not been very successful, but considering the conditions, they are gratifying, and increased experience of seasons and crops will doubtless bring more fruits for the mission's use. The pack-train of burros, which the Bishop has secured, ought to facilitate very much the bringing up of supplies from the coast—both food supplies and building materials. Heretofore all labor that is done by the Igorrotes, such as the bringing in of lumber, or carrying of goods on the trail, or handling of the soil for agriculture or building, has been secured through the friendly intervention of the local government officials, in continuance of the Spanish practice which the Igorrotes understand. Departure from this custom will work a hardship the extent of which we can hardly forecast. Certainly a system of free contract and prices based on commercial principles would be more comfortable ordinarily. But when an Igorrote has done the work which brings him his sufficient food supply of rice and camotes—(and each member of the community can apparently do this without the touch of money) he sees no further need for work, either for his own benefit or for that of other people. Social obligation beyond the limits of his own town, he does not realize he has no commercial instinct; he wears no clothes; he needs no money. It will be seen at once what an impossible factor such an unwilling and undeveloped laborer would be without some properly coercing force, in a scheme which involved building and progressive improvements. It remains to be seen what can be done if, with only ordinary resources, we are called upon to face such abnormal conditions. As soon as the saw-mill is in operation, we shall be in a position, barring these labor difficulties, to go ahead with the building of a church and the two or three other structures that seem most necessary. Slow as is the progress of supplying these material needs, there is apparently much less prospect of getting the men and women who will be ready for that expansion which would take possession of the whole Igorrote region in the Name of Christ and His Church. Faith can contemplate no smaller vision than this. A foretaste of the joyful sense of a truly united work for the evangelization of these hill tribes has been experienced since the opening of the mission at Sagada, where conditions differentiate the work very much from that in Bontoc, but where one feels that there is priestly and brotherly sympathy, and an identity of faith and purpose. May it not be in God's will that these shall be two points in a long chain of missions, that shall follow water courses, and cross mountain heights, and dip into deep-cut gorges, to find and win to Christ these primitive people! The dispensary which we rightly regard as one of the chief activities of the mission, has proceeded quietly and efficiently, under Miss Oakes, during this period. Such work, amid untaught people and amid crude conditions, must always be subject to great limitations, and will be disappointing from a purely professional standpoint. It will vary with the whims and superstitions of a childish folk, who know nothing of the nature of disease, or of the method of medical treatment, whose estimate of ailments is often in inverse ratio to their seriousness, who will make much ado over a cut or burn, while a grave functional derangement will never be brought to the notice of the one who stands ready to minister to them. The way of progress seems to be the way of education, and we shall welcome the day, when God sending us a physician, we can start a small hospital, where may be demonstrated before the eyes of the people the real uses of medicine and surgery. To conclude—Bontoc is the stronghold of the conservative Igorrotes. Here tradition and custom and superstition hold full sway, as they do not, either toward the west coast or toward the Cagayan Valley. Here the people do not want to change. But along with this, which makes the ground hard to break, there is a naturalness, a virility and simplicity, which convince one that it is worth while to try. There is nothing in the situation which promises large immediate returns. It seems as if the course of events in our Mission would be marked by the slow, quiet progress and growth, which mark the ordinary workings of the Holy Spirit. The outward agencies will be natural—we shall need a good equipment of workers, materials, buildings—but the inner life, the influence, the power, must be God's own. As the cultus of many spirits ("anito") dreaded, mischievous and disease-bearing, is the pervading religious influence among the Igorrotes, so the practical and ready antidote to this fearsome religion seems to be the whole truth regarding God's spiritual world—of God the Holy Ghost, with His "Comfort, Life and Fire of Love," bringing the Lord Jesus to be powerfully present in Word and Sacrament, animating the hearts of all the Faithful with zeal and wisdom and patience; or all the Holy Angels as beneficent, guarding, ministering spirits, dispelling fear and giving confidence; and of the Blessed Communion of Saints, Holy Souls of the Departed, in league with, not against, the Faithful on earth, lifting up holy hands for them and anxious for their victory. On account of this evident antithesis between what the Bontoc Igorrotes believe and what the Christian Church can teach them, we have asked that this Mission may be dedicatel to God the Holy Ghost.

PARISH NOTES.

The Lenten list of services and instructions will be ready on Quinquagesima.

Ashes, after the ancient custom, will be blessed at 6.30 A. M., and may be received by those who are so minded before each succeeding Mass.

Candles, in accordance with old ecclesiastical custom, will be blessed on the Feast of the Purification B. V. M. Such persons as desire can leave candles of their own, with name written on package, and obtain same afterwards.

The Altar Guild is at present working upon a set of green vestments for Rev. Fr. Claiborne, Sewanee, Tennessee. The very beautiful green chasuble which was designed by Fr. Lucas some time ago, is nearing completion, and will be for the use of S. Clement's Parish.

We print in this number of the Magazine a letter from our very dear friend, Rev. R. E. Wood, who has given his life to the work in China. We trust that the interest of all who read it may be aroused, and that they may give at least their prayers for God's blessing upon his labors.

S. Vincent's Guild held its annual supper at the Clergy House on Wednesday evening, January 24th. All the active members of the Guild were present, and of the honorary members Mr. Wright, Mr. Rommel and Mr. Linton. Covers were laid for twenty-eight, and a bountiful repast was served by S. Mary's Guild.

After supper the Rector, in behalf of the Guild, presented the Warden, Mr. J. C. Goodwin, Jr., with a crucifix and devotional manual. Games and music served to while away the evening, and all voted the occasion a great success.

The Missionary Offering on Sunday, January the 21st, was most gratifying, and was as follows:

Bishop Rowe	$29.00
Wuchang	47.50
Rev. A. M. Sherman	52.50
General	119.00
	$248.00

The Annual Parish Retreat will be held, as usual, on Ash Wednesday, February 28th. Food for those who signify their desire beforehand, to the Clergy or Sisters, may be had in the upper school room at 8 A. M. and 1 P. M. Addresses at 10 A. M., 12 M., 3 and 5.15 P. M. It is hoped that as many as possible may spend the entire day within the Church. Confessions should be made on Shrove Tuesday.

On the evening of January 2d, S. Katherine's Guild held its annual supper. Twenty-two members with the Chaplain were present. The Sisters arranged the table very prettily and prepared delicious viands, increasing appetites already keen. The principal feature of the supper was the cake containing a dime, a thimble and a ring. Ethel Mullen found the dime, Christine Boyle the thimble and Katie Gibson the ring. In drawing for Saints and Virtues, Christine Boyle drew S. Katherine and was given the rose. After supper a jolly evening was spent in playing games.

S. MARY'S GUILD.

On Monday, the 8th of January, after the singing of the Guild Office in the Chapel of S. John the Evangelist, the members of S. Mary's Guild sat down to their annual supper in the Parish Hall.

There was a full attendance, and all helped to make the occasion a most enjoyable one.

After supper there was a short programme. Miss Fryer kindly contributed two vocal solos, and Mrs. Davis gave several readings. Mr. Auguste Hofmann also played several solos on the piano.

The Guild felt much honored by the presence of the Right Reverend Edward W. Osborne, D.D., Bishop of Springfield, who discovered several friends among the older members.

The time for departure came all too soon, and everyone went away with the remembrance of another happy occasion to be added to the number of pleasant memories already connected with the Guild and its meetings.

FRIDAY OBSERVANCE.

There is one portion of the Book of Common Prayer which seems to be very generally neglected by church people. If we take our prayer books and turn to page xxiv we shall read the following:

A Table of Fasts.—Ash Wednesday, Good Friday.

Other days of fasting, on which the Church requires such a measure of abstinence as is more especially suited to extraordinary acts and exercises of devotion:

I. The Forty Days of Lent.

II. The Ember-days at the Four Seasons, being the Wednesday, Friday and Saturday after the First Sunday in Lent, the Feast of Pentecost, September 14 and December 13.

III. The three Rogation-days, being the Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday before Holy Thursday, or the Ascension of our Lord.

IV. All the Fridays in the Year, except Christmas-day.

It would be interesting to ascertain how many communicants of the Church have ever noticed this Table of Fasts. We are all of us quite familiar with the Feast days. We love Christmas with its message of love and peace, we rejoice with our Risen Lord at Easter, we gaze after Him with awed wonder as He is taken up to God's Throne on Ascension Day. Each Sunday brings its own spiritual gladness to our hearts; but while we are eager to accept all that is attractive and beautiful in our religion, while we willingly join in an elaborate worship, and delight to have our emotions stirred by solemn music, we are very apt to forget that the religion of Jesus Christ is not made up entirely of these things.

Following the command of His Divine Head, and the example of the Holy Apostles, the Catholic Church appoints certain days upon which her children are to bewail their sins and to supplicate God's mercy with prayer and fasting. Of these days Ash Wednesday and Good Friday are the chief. These are fast days, when the faithful Catholic abstains entirely from food, taking no refreshment until six o'clock in the evening. But there are other lesser fast days, when, as will be seen by the list, the "Church requires such a measure of abstinence as is more especially suited to extraordinary acts and exercises of devotion." Among these days we find every Friday in the year except Christmas day.

As each returning Sunday is a festival of the Resurrection of Jesus Christ, every Friday is a memorial of His death. As the Church bids us rejoice on the Lord's Day, so she bids us mourn on the day of His crucifixion.

From very early times Catholic Christians have abstained from flesh meat on Friday, and have likewise marked the day by additional devotions and by refraining from all worldly pleasures. There are still some devout souls in the Church who endeavor to obey her commands, but it is to be feared that among the majority of her children there is a widespread disregard of her mandates. And yet the Church requires nothing unreasonable and nothing that would not commend itself to those who love Jesus Christ and have a realizing sense of all that His Cross and Passion means.

Surely if we believe that on a Friday long ago God the Son died on Calvary, and that our own sin was the cause of that death, then should we on that day remember with sadness all our human frailty and express that sadness outwardly by fasting and by prayer.

But the spirit of this world is as strong to-day as in the first years of the Christian Church, and some of us are willing to forget the Cross, and some of us make our Friday "acts of devotion" to consist in a frivolous round of social pleasures, of dinners and theatre-going, while in the midst of all our sinful thoughtlessness the Church points to a Figure, hanging broken and torn, upon the Cross, stretching out loving arms to a "disobedient and gainsaying people."

LETTER FROM FR. WOOD.

American Church Mission,

Wuchang, November 9, 1905.

Wuchang is the capital of the two Provinces of Hupeh and Hunan, and a most important educational and military center. There is a great movement toward Western Learning just now, and a number of very large and pretentious school-buildings, constructed in foreign style, are going up in all parts of the city. Five of them are designed to be boarding-schools for primary scholars, and will accommodate about six hundred each. Two of these are already completed and the others are nearly so. The old historic Examination Halls, which for so long a time have accommodated the thousands who have thronged to the great Provincial Examinations, have now been turned over to the ues of young school boys, while their own school-houses are being built. It is rumored that the old Halls must soon go, now that the great change has come in the Examination system. Schools of the New Learning are to take their place. The change that is coming over conservative old China is so radical that one can hardly realize that it is true. I have only mentioned the Primary Schools. But Intermediate, Collegiate and Normal Schools and Schools for girls, all under Government control, are rapidly filling up the available space of our city. The soldiers' camps and barracks, in and about the city, afford accommodation for thousands more of young men, and they, like the students, come from all parts of the Empire. They are trained in Western tactics and use foreign uniforms and guns. There is, indeed, a genuine desire to adopt the customs of the rest of the world. The soldiers tell us that already it is permitted them to cut off at least a part of the queue. This in reality indicates a decided change, and it is astonishing when one thinks of what has been already accomplished. The Red Cross Society, for instance, has already found its way into the heathen camps of Wuchang. Thus the Cross with its message of love to all mankind has set up its standard in these Dragon Strongholds. But what seems to us the most complete change of all is the making of Sunday a rest-day, both in the schools and barracks. Of course we welcome any recognition given to the Lord's Day, but we see the great danger of a complete relaxation of discipline on one day in seven, as is the case with the schools, and turning hundreds of young students loose to go where they like amid the terrible temptations of a heathen city, with no restraint and no one to guide them aright and keep them out of mischief. Every Sunday the streets are full of these straying young sheep having no shepherd, and one longs to lead them to the Fold where they will be safe from harm. It is the greatest possible opportunity to labor for the extension of Christ's Kingdom among young men.

At St. Saviour's, Wuchang, there is a very good Reading Room, supplied with the best Chinese papers and periodicals. It is open Sundays as well as weekdays, with the idea of attracting students from the streets. On Sunday afternoons there is a special sermon to educated non-Christians in the chapel alongside, to which all are cordially welcome. These afternoon services are very bright and attractive, and the school-children do their best with the singing, and at least succeed in making a joyful noise. Music is very popular at present, and our Viceroy has invited musical teachers over from Japan to teach patriotic songs and other music in the Government schools and camps. Students and soldiers go singing these songs through the streets. Our friends who attend St. Saviour's seem to enjoy the hymns and other musical parts of the service very much. We use patriotic hymns, too, and thus show that patriotism and loyalty to the powers that be are Christian virtues. The Chinese priest is delivering a fine course of sermons, and considerable interest is being aroused. We have had also a few popular lectures under the auspices of the Reading Club to audiences of two or three hundred. There is no room at St. Saviour's large enough to hold such a number, but, as the weather was fine in each case, the lecture was delivered in the open air in the school playground. All who came were invited and were admitted by ticket only. There is no telling how many would attend meetings of this kind if we only had a hall large enough to seat them.

Enough has been said to show how tremendous the opportunities for work in Wuchang are. Our plans for aggressive work are many. If ever the time was ripe for such plans, the present is pre-eminently so in this centre, where influences are so far-reaching and men are so eager and ready for what we are longing to give them. If the Church really wants to convert China to Christ, then such centers of influence should be strongly occupied.

II.

Our proposed scheme for meeting these opportunities is as follows: To establish a fine, large, completely equipped mission plant in the very heart of the city, where there would be ample accommodation for work on all lines—1, Evangelistic; 2, Medical; 3, Educational; 4, Parochial.

1. Evangelistic. In order to reach out and attract the young men there should be a gymnasium, recreation rooms and a reading room well stocked with both Chinese and English papers, periodicals and books (for many of the young men in the schools are eager students of English), and, above all, a lecture hall of large proportions, where public lectures and illustrated talks could be frequenly given. All kinds of subjects of interest to students and others could be expounded in this way, such as elementary Physical Science, Astronomy, natural wonders, travel, etc. In this way many crude notions of this earth of ours and many superstitions could be driven away. The lecture hall, I am sure, would be a great attraction to students, especially on Sundays, when they all have leisure. A suitable lecture would serve the double purpose of keeping young men out of temptation and of imparting a great deal of useful knowledge, which would probably be gotten in no other way. A lecture on Sunday would, of course, always be delivered with a religious purpose in view, leading directly to some great truth about God. Furthermore, men who came to lectures could easily be interested in the Church Services, and, I am sure, be brought to attend them when once they got into the way of coming to the Mission.

2. Medical. The Dispensary, with its preaching hall, where at every clinic numbers of heathen could be brought within hearing of the Gospel of Christ, ought to be in immediate connection with the other missionary activities of the place. Men who came for treatment to the same place again and again, could the more easily be persuaded to come on Sundays, and so be brought to attend the special services for non-Christians in the Church. Our present dispensary work at the Wuchang street chapel is very successful indeed in point of numbers, but its greatest drawback is the fact that it is carried on in a building quite apart from any chapel or church. One can hardly expect people to search around for the Church. St. Saviour's is on a back street and very hard to find. The church should be on the spot, and so should all the preachers and others who are working by these various means to lead men to it.

3. Educational. Around the church should be gathered the day-schools for boys and girls, which are the regular accompaniment of all our large mission stations. Only in this place they should be larger and provided with a fuller equipment and a more extended curriculum. The Middle School (now at St. Saviour's) and the Boone Mission School, with a night school for young men, should all be here together. Help could easily be gotten for this kind of work from Christian students in Boone School and College. The pupils of all the schools would, of course, be required to attend certain services and to receive regular religious instruction as a part of their course. Thus heathen children would begin early to learn the truths of religion. It really is surprising to see how easily they take to the Church's ways and how much interest they show in the services, especially in the singing. Our services should be an object lesson to all who come. The music, although plain and simple, should be rendered as well as possible. It behooves us to pay all due attention to music, owing to the great interest shown in it now by all. But this means long and careful training of the boys' voices. A Choir School at the place would be of the greatest usefulness in making the services attractive and helpful. Such a school would also afford a golden opportunity for our Christians to have their children trained up in a thoroughly Christian atmosphere. One of the greatest hindrances to the development of Christian character is heathen home surroundings.

4. Parochial. Our Church would also be the center for the principal parochial activities of Wuchang. St. Mark's and St. Andrews's, situated at opposite siles of the city outside the gates, would remain branch stations and chapels, but the principal work would center at the Parish Church, and in this all the Christians would have a common share. It would not be inaccessible to any of them and would be large enough to accommodate them all on great festivals or special occasions. Classes and meetings for Enquirers, Catechumens and Christians, both men and women, guilds and societies, would all be centered here. The Eucharist and other services for Christians only would be celebrated regularly, and every effort made to keep the Christians up to their duties and privileges. But the fact would always be borne in mind that our Church was much more than an ordinary parish church. For in its influence and activity it would far outstretch any parochial limits and cast its light far out into the surrounding darkness of heathen ignorance and superstition. Special services for non-Christians would be as regular a part of its routine as anything else. Men attracted to the Mission by lectures, reading room, dispensary, gymnasium, night school or any other means, would be made to feel at home in this place. A service, simple enough for them to understand and enter into, I am sure, would be well attended. The size of such a church, then, must not be measured by our present number of Christians. It should be built to seat a congregation of several hundred, for we hope to see frequently that number of non-Christians assembled to witness a common worship rendered to the one God and Father of all men, and to hear about Him and Jesus Christ His Son, whom to know is life everlasting.

III.

The advantages of such a scheme need only to be recapitulated, as they have already been touched upon in the foregoing sketch.

(a) Centrally located on one of the principal streets, the place would be easily accessible from all parts of the city. We have no such place at present. St. Saviour's is on a side street, hard to find, and is only a Chinese house made over for present needs. Our street chapel, while centrally located, is far too small, and no land lying adjacent can be bought.

(b) All work concentrated in one spot would be far more efficient and mutually helpful, each department to each. If all clergy and other workers, foreign and native, were resident on the spot the combined activities could be carried on in a far more satisfactory and economical way, and the efficiency increased many fold.

The Associate Mission at Wuchang has never enjoyed the advantage of living near the stations where its work is, having been from the outset housed at the Boone School Compound, at an inconvenient distance from work.

(c) And yet a centrally located station would not be too far away for occasional visitors from Boone College, such as lecturers or teachers for the night school. We would naturally be largely dependent for these upon Boone School and College. A quarter of an hours walk or rikisha ride to the center of the city would not be thought a hardship for a young man who had the trip to make but a few times a week, or at most but once a day. The work centering around such a station would be a natural outlet for the surplus energies of the Christian young men of the School and College. It would afford them a sphere of great usefulness to the Church during their student days. Furthermore, if Normal, Medical and Theological Schools grow up about Boone College, there is not one of these but what could find abundant opportunities for practice and experience and wide fields for activity at such a mission station as I have been describing.

IV.

(a) Need of men.
(b) Need of means.

(a) To carry out such a plan as has been outlined above it is needless to say that a large staff of workers would be required. Scope and opportunity would be afforded for the use of many and varied talents and gifts. Preaching to men in large numbers or individual work with the few, the moulding and forming of the Christian character and other pastoral work with the converts or the laboring to bring the Gospel of Christ, to the heathen, and in fact, all kinds of activity could be represented. The various departments of the work would afford an abundance of material to work upon. An enlarged and fully developed Associate Mission of clergy would be an ideal means for working, especially amongst the young men, but also for other widely extended mission work. Wuchang is on the Yang-tse River, opposite Hankow and the mouth of the Han River. From it as a center many chains of stations could be visited and worked by itinerating clergy. They would make the Clergy-house at Wuchang their permanent residence, and from it as a centre they could travel out in almost every direction, either by land or by water. Now that the Hankow-Pekin Railroad is running, they could by means of it easily work back into the interior. An Associate Mission thus located would really have no limits to its sphere of usefulness, and could be increased indefinitely and still have plenty of work for all. But at present we ask for but three unmarried clergy in addition to the two already here, making a total of five, certainly small enough when one considers the amount of work that might be done if there were a sufficient staff.

(b) We have estimated the cost of the land for such a plant at $10,000. This is really not too high when one considers the value of land in the city at present, especially in the desirable locations. Such an establishment as we contemplate would cover a large area of ground. The grouping together of so many kinds of work all in one place has sufficient advantages about it to justify the purchase of a site large enough for all. The Government has already bought up almost every available piece of ground for its own use. It will soon be impossible to get satisfactory property at any price. Real estate is rapidly increasing in value, and it is imperative that our land should be secured at once if these plans of ours are ever to be realized.

The church we have estimated at another $10,000. It must be large enough to serve all the purposes of a central parish church for the whole of Wuchang for many years to come. But this is not the only justification for the building of a church of such large proportions. As has been above described, it would be a mission church in more senses than one. In it numbers who had not yet confessed Christ could be gathered to hear of Him. All the other activities of the place would point to the one great end of bringing men to Christ and His Church. I have mentioned the church first because it naturally belongs first in importance. All the other activities of the place would group themselves around it. Of course at present it is impossible to say what kind of buildings should be put up and how they should be arranged, there being no land in immediate prospect and much less any definite plan. But it would be a saving of space, in any case, to make one main building three stories high. The Dispensary, Preaching Hall, Women's Guest Hall, Girls' School and residence for Chinese workers, might be on the ground floor. On the second floor the Lecture Hall, Reading and Recreation Rooms and Boys' School Rooms. The third floor could be the Clergy-house, with room enough for the Choir School Dormitory and the Gymnasium. Such a building, fully equipped, would need another $20,000. And a separate double house for women workers, and possibly a married man and family, would require $5,000 more. This would bring the total up to $45,000.

Yours sincerely, ROBERT E. WOOD.

PARISH NOTES.

All the services during Lent will be held in the Church, with the exception of the Guild offices.

The design for the Memorial Altar is delayed pending the receipt of sketches, which are now being made in Rome.

The books of the Accounting Warden close on March 24th. It is important that all pew rents and "pledges" be paid before that time.

The attendance at the intercession service on Fridays at noon is not what it should be. Can we not make this a part of our Lenten Rule?

Those who desire the Clergy to visit the sick, are asked to write the name and address of the sick person plainly on a piece of paper, and to follow the same rule in asking for prayers of the Church.

The plans of the Parish House are nearing completion, and the work of pulling down the old buildings will be commenced about the first of May. It is hoped that the new building may be ready for use by Saint Clement's Day.

The Bishop Coadjutor will visit Saint Clement's Parish on the twenty-third of May, and will administer the Sacrament of Confirmation. Confirmation classes will be formed at an early date, and any persons looking forward to being Confirmed, or who consider Confirmation a possibility, are asked to hand their names to the Clergy.

Persons desiring to make appointments with the Clergy, or to speak with them at length on any matter, are asked to come to them at another time than at the close of the service on Sunday morning or evening. The number of requests made at these times is becoming distressingly large, and it is very difficult to keep every one in mind.

The Memorial Sermon, preached by Fr. Ritchie at the Requiem for Rev. G. H. Moffett in November, has been printed and copies mailed each family in the parish, as well as to the clergy of the diocese. If any one has been overlooked, or desires extra copies, a limited number are in the hands of the Rector, and can be had on application.

The Church Periodical Club, which was formed in 1888 and has since grown with wonderful rapidity, is an institution which should appeal to all church people. Its object is to supply clergymen and missionaries in remote parts of our country with such periodicals as may be useful to them in their work. Large supplies of books and magazines are also sent to hospitals, prisons, and other institutions, and the demand is becoming greater than the supply. Miss Adelaide F. Howell, No. 2121 DeLancey Street, is the representative of the club for Saint Clement's Parish. Any who may be interested may obtain further information from her, together with the addresses of persons or places where books or magazines may be sent. Donations of money are also requested, for the defraying of necessary expenses.

PRAYERS FOR LENT.

We beseech Thee, O Lord, let Thy gracious favour carry us through the fast which we have begun; that as we observe it by bodily discipline, so may we be able to fulfil it with sincerity of mind; through Jesus Christ our Lord.

Grant, we beseech Thee, O Lord, Eternal King of all, that being purified by the sacred fast, we may come with sincere minds to partake of Thy holy things; through Jesus Christ our Lord.

Lord Jesus Christ, who didst stretch out Thine hands upon the Cross and redeem us by Thy Blood, forgive me, a sinner, for none of my thoughts are hid from Thee. Pardon I ask, pardon I hope for, pardon I trust to have. Thou Who art pitiful and merciful, spare and forgive me.

We beseech Thee, Almighty God, look not upon the multitude of our wickednesses; but draw away our weakness from sin, and guide the wills of Thy servants to what is right; through Jesus Christ our Lord.

Jesu, our Master, do Thou meet us while we walk in the way, and long to reach the Country; so that following Thy light, we may keep in the way of righteousness, and never wander away into the horrible darkness of this world's night, while Thou Who art the Way, the Truth and the Life art shining within us, Who liveth God forever and ever.

Grant us, O Lord, not to mind earthly things, but to love things heavenly; and even now while we are placed among things that are passing away, to cleave to those that shall abide; through Jesus Christ our Lord.

It is expected that strict silence will be observed during the period of each retreat.

By request we gladly print the following, and endorse most cordially the objects of the association:

THE BISHOP WHITE PARISH LIBRARY ASSOCIATION.

Its Nature and Objects.

At the request of the many friends of the Bishop White Parish Library Association, a few words have been set forth with regard to the exact character and design of its work.

This Association was organized in the City of Philadelphia, in the year 1830, by an earnest churchwoman of the same city, for the purpose of supplying feeble Parishes and Missionary Stations with Theological Books for the use of the Rectors or Missionaries in charge.

The libraries so given consist of twenty-five volumes each, to be selected by the Rector or Missionary from a catalogue sent him on receipt of the endorsement of his application by his Bishop. These libraries are in all cases a gift to the Parish, and intended to remain there in the event of a change of Rectorship. It is the only organization of the kind in the country; wholly dependent upon voluntary subscriptions, and during an existence of 65 years, has distributed over thirty-five thousand volumes. In order to appreciate the value of these donations, it would be necessary to see the mass of letters constantly received, expressive of the great need felt by the Clergy for books, and also of gratitude for the libraries sent. Let one extract suffice. "How can words tell you the blessing you have sent me? for ten years I have not seen a new book!" Surely these words are the most touching form of appeal for aid to carry on the work.

PENITENTIAL ASHES.

The use of ashes as a sign of mourning and repentance is, of course, of Old Testament authority, as may be seen, for instance, in this well-known passage of the Prophecy of Jonah: "So the people of Nineveh believed God and proclaimed a fast and put on sackcloth, from the greatest of them even unto the least of them.

For word came unto the king of Nineveh and he arose from his throne, and he laid his robes from him, and covered him with sackcloth and sat in ashes."

Tertullian, in his De Poenitentia, counts it among the external works of penance. He speaks of the reluctance of the imperfect and slothful to face the bodily discomforts of repentance, that they should have to go "unmasked and dust-stained, that they must live without joy in the roughness of sackcloth and the squalor of ashes, and with the ungrateful palate that fasting imposes." So a sermon ascribed to S. Maximus of Turin, in the fifth century, speaks of "the blessed ashes placed upon our heads at the beginning of Lent, that we may be mindful of our first beginning and our last end."

In the early days of the Church, when notorious sinners were obliged to do public penance, they were bidden to the church on Ash Wednesday in mean apparel and with bare feet. A list of their names, and offences was then presented to the bishop, who assigned a definite term of penance for each one. Ashes were then placed upon their heads and they were sent from the church. The sturdy Christians of an earlier age thought that there was much to be learnt by such humiliation. Moreover, it would appear that even those whose lives were free from more grievous transgressions sought to be partakers in the ceremony of the sprinkling of the ashes. It was in this way that the ceremony of the ashes, accompanied for the most part by a penitential procession, in which the English use prescribed the carrying of a "sack-cloth banner" came to be practiced in every parish church. The ashes, which were made out of the blessed palms of the preceding year, were solemnly hallowed for this special function.

"Remember, man, that thou art mortal." Death (or its equivalent at our Lord's coming) is the one certain event before us all, and yet the most uncertain as to its time and circumstances.

Could we do better than say, "I will try to make this Lent a preparation for death, and so to spend the season that if it should prove to be my last Lent I should be the better prepared for death and for all to which death introduces us?

1. This would bar out unreality and formality from our observance of Lent.

2. It would give a point for self-examination and penitential exercises, to review one's life, and make one's peace with God, so as to be able with humble confidence to pass into His more immediate presence.

3. It would teach us to subject the body to the Spirit, which, along with the expression of sorrow, is the purpose of fasting.

4. It would bid us seek reconciliation with any from whom we may be estranged.

5. It would bid us value all means of instruction whereby our knowledge of spiritual things may be increased, and seek the Sacraments whereby God's pardon and grace are pledged to us.

6. It would bid us set ourselves in earnest to overcome faults that mar our peace; to put right whatever burdens our conscience, and to take up any duty we may hitherto have shirked.

7. To question ourselves as to our alms and offerings in the light of the responsibility for all our gifts that death will bring home to us, and as to the use we shall then wish we had made of them, might well effect a change in our habits in this respect.

Thus to keep in mind the thought of death will not unfit us for ordinary duties. It will indeed teach us to sit lightly to outward things; but we should learn to fulfil all duties—in the family, in society, in business, in the State as well as in the Church—with greater diligence and faithfulness, because we should view all in the light of higher interests and claims.

THE BISHOP OF VERMONT.

THE QUEST.

I sometimes wonder, if in those first days
I had seen Mary with the Child alone,
Would some sweet instinct to my heart have shown
Heaven's glory hallowed in a child's soft gaze?

I sometimes wonder, had I heard Him say
In tender human voice—"Come unto me"—
Should I, undoubting the supremacy
Of Love's appeal, have risen to obey?

Yes, it is difficult through storms that beat
To find through devious paths the way to Him;
Yet, was the way less fear-beset and dim—
To those who followed on the brier-strewn street?

And so I like to dream—with love's glad light
Touching with radiance the distant grey.
He is not further from my heart to-day
Because earth-shadows veil Him from my sight.

THE GREAT RESPONSE.

Thou hast heard, O Virgin, what God will do; thou hast heard, also, the way in which it shall be accomplished; all alike marvelous, all gladsome, and full of joy. "Rejoice" then, "greatly, O daughter of Jerusalem!" And, since joy and gladness have been given to thine ears, let us, too, hear from thee the answer of thy joy, that the bones that have been broken may rejoice. Thou hast heard, I say, what God will do, and thou hast believed; believe also what thou hearest of the way; thou shalt conceive and bear a Son; thou shalt conceive not of man, but of the Holy Ghost. The Angel hath declared this much unto thee; now he is waiting for thine answer; it is time that he return to God Who sent him. We, too, are waiting, O Lady, for the word of pity, even we who are overwhelmed in wretchedness by the sentence of damnation. Behold, to thee is intrusted the price of our salvation. If thou consent, straightway shall we be freed.

In the Eternal Word of God we all were made, yet lo! we die. By one answering word of thine shall we all be made alive. Adam looks to thee O loving Virgin—poor Adam exiled from Paradise with all his wretched children; Abraham looks to thee, with David, and all the holy Fathers, even thy fathers, who themselves dwell in the shadow of death; the whole world waits for thine answer. Yea, on thy lips is hanging the Consolation of the poor, the Redemption of the captive, the speedy Deliverance of all who are lost; the Salvation of all the Sons of Adam, of all thy race.

Answer, O Virgin, answer quickly. O Lady speak the word, which Heaven and Earth and all beneath the Earth are waiting for. Nay, the King and Lord of all, Who hath pleasure in thy beauty, He too awaits thy answer and thy assent; for by it He has decreed the Salvation of the world. Thou hast pleased Him by thy silence, now thou wilt please Him more by thy word, for He Himself is calling to thee from Heaven: "Let me hear thy voice for thy voice is sweet." Let Him hear thy voice, and He will cause thee to see our Salvation. Is it not this that thou art seeking for in prayer both night and day? What then? To thee is the promise. Shall we look for another? Nay it is thyself and not another; it is thyself that art the promised one; it is thyself that the world has waited for, and longed after, from whom the holy Patriarch Jacob, even in the midst of death, hoped for life everlasting; "I have waited for Thy salvation O Lord." It is thou in whom, and by whom, God our King has decreed, before the ages, to work salvation in the midst of the earth. Dost thou expect from another what is offered unto thyself?

Answer, then, the Angel, answer quickly; nay, through the Angel, answer thy Lord. Speak the word, and receive the Word; offer what is thine, and conceive what is of God; give what is temporal, and embrace what is Eternal. Why delayest thou? Why tremblest thou? Believe, speak, receive! Oh! let thy humility put on boldness, and thy modesty be clothed with confidence. Forget not wisdom in thy virginal simplicity. O wise and prudent Virgin, fear not to be over bold. Thy silence, thy meekness is well pleasing; but now is needed one word of loving kindness.

Open, O Blessed Virgin, thy heart to faith; open thy lips to speak; open thy bosom to thy Maker. Behold! the Desired of all Nations is without, knocking at thy door. Oh! What if, by thy delay, He should pass by, and again in sorrow thou begin to seek for Him, Whom thy soul loveth! Arise, then, run and open! Arise by faith; run by the devotion of thy heart; open by thy word.

And Mary said, Behold the hand-maid of the Lord, be it unto me according to thy Word."

PARISH NOTES.

Palms will be blessed as usual at 6.30 A. M. on Palm Sunday, and Procession at 11.

The vestry election is on Easter Monday, April 16. Polls open from 12 M. to 2 P. M.

Fr. Parish, O. S. B., gave a retreat for the outer Sisters of All Saints March 26-28.

Donations for Easter flowers may be put in the box in the corridor or sent to the Misses Arnold.

The discipline of ashes was observed on Ash Wednesday and a goodly number of persons made the parochial retreat.

Every communicant should fill out and send in an Easter Communion card. The communicant list is revised after Easter.

The retreat for the Guild of the Holy Cross was held at All Saints' Mission House on Sunday, March 11. It was conducted by Fr. Schneeweiss.

The envelopes for the ensuing year are ready, and most of them have been distributed. Members of S. Vincent's Guild did the work of dating and numbering.

For the Solemn Mass on Easter Day the parishioners will be admitted by the Parish House door, on Cherry Street, up to 10.30 o'clock, when the corridor doors will be opened.

A new burse and veil for festal use are being made by a member of the Altar Guild, and are the gift of a member of the parish. The fabric is cloth of gold adorned with pearls.

On April 4 the combined Choirs of S. Clement's and St. Paul's, Camden, will render Spohr's "Calvary" in S. Clement's Church at 8 o'clock in the evening. Special tickets of admission will be required, and may be obtained from the clergy.

Confirmation classes for women will begin March 31, and will be held at the Mission House, as follows:

For Women, Saturdays, 7.30 P. M.
For Girls, Wednesdays, 4.30 P. M.; Saturdays, 4.30 P. M.

The classes for men and boys will be arranged later.

Some additional hymns have been introduced at the Children's Mass. This renders the service brighter and more intelligible for the children, and restores practically the same service that was introduced many years ago by Father Field, and was used during the time the Cowley Fathers were at S. Clement's.

The Seventy-first Annual Report of the Female Protestant Episcopal Prayer Book Society has been received. 1612 prayer books and 1247 hymnals have been distributed. Annual subscriptions from 29 parishes amount to $535.75. Thirty persons in S. Clement's Parish gave $57, the largest sum from any parish. Mrs. G. E. Fryer will be glad to receive contributions.

On Wednesday afternoon and evening, April 18, a Fair in the interest of All Saints' Seashore Home will be held in the Parish Building. Any who may be desirous of sending contributions may address them to the Mission House. The congregation is reminded that according to the new regulations the half-rate tickets on the railroads cannot be obtained this year. Especial contributions are asked toward the defraying of the traveling expenses of those who may go down to the Home this summer.

Your generous offerings are asked on Easter Day for the current expenses. Special offerings are also asked for the necessary improvements that must be made in the Church and Clergy House when the Parish Building is built. A new heating apparatus must be installed in the basement of the Clergy House, as with the new building the present arrangement will not suffice, the heat now being supplied from boilers under the Church. This must be done at once, so that all may be in readiness by the fall. The cost is estimated at about $300.

The vestibule of the Church will also be renovated, so that it may be in harmony with the new surroundings.

Any persons wishing to contribute toward these special objects may put their offering in an envelope marked "repairs."

EASTER CONFESSIONS.

The hours of the clergy during Holy Week will be as follows:

Rev. C. S. Hutchinson:
Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday, 10.30-11, 4-5, 7-8.
Good Friday, 4-5, 7-8.
Easter Eve, 10-12, 3-5, 7-9.

Rev. C. C. Quin:
Thursday, 4-5.
Good Friday, 4-5, 8-9.
Easter Eve, 4-5, 8-10.

Rev. F. D. Ward:
Thursday, 4-5, 7-8.
Good Friday, 8-9.
Easter Eve, 3-5, 7-10.

Rev. F. M. W. Schneeweiss:
Thursday, 4-5.
Good Friday, 7-8.
Easter Eve, 4-5, 7-10.

It is hoped that many will take advantage of the earlier days.

THE PARISH HOUSE.

It has been suggested that a brief description of the new parish building may prove of interest, now that the plans have been accepted and work is about to commence. The demolition of the present parish house and of the old clergy house will be begun soon after Easter, and by St. Clements' tide we hope to have the new structure very near completion.

The present church entrance on Cherry Street will become the main entrance of the new building. A dignified vestibule will open into the present corridor, which will be entirely renovated, and will become part of the parish house.

The main entrance to the church will be through the present porch on Appletree Street, and the south end of the corridor will be made the church vestibule.

In the basement of the parish building will be a large room, with cemented floor, which may be used as a supper-room—and which will be provided with a kitchen.

On the first floor will be found:

1. S. John's Chapel. This will be located on Cherry Street, running east and west, and will be large and bright. There will be two entrances; one from Cherry Street, and the other from the hallway of the parish house. At the eastern end will be built a large priest's sacristy, which is much needed.

2. An altar sacristy, occupying the space of the present sacristy, where the altar hangings and ornaments may be kept, and where the work of cleansing and polishing the sacred vessels and brasses may be done.

3. The choir room, located on the site of our present chapel.

4. The acolytes room, next to the chapel and choir room.

On the second floor will be two large halls for the Sunday Schools and parish gatherings, a guild room, and a reception room for the women of the parish.

The greater part of the third floor will be occupied by accommodations for S. Nicholas Guild. A commodious reading room, gymnasium, and dressing room, fitted with lockers and shower baths, will minister to the mental and physical needs of our boys and young men.

There will also be commodious provisions for the work of the Altar Guild, and also an additional room for the use of the clergy house.

With this equipment, S. Clements should be able to do a splendid work in the future, and it behooves every member of the parish to do his utmost to rise to the opportunities that will be offered for working for the glory of God.

THE MISSIONARY THANK-OFFERING.

In connection with the meeting of the General Convention of the American Church in Richmond, Va., in October, 1907, will be celebrated the tri-centenary of the planting of English Catholic Christianity upon the American continent.

In the spring of 1607 a little band of Englishmen sailed up the James River, and at Jamestown established a colony. Their first church on American soil was a canvas awning stretched between two trees, and a rude pine table was their first altar.

In commemoration of this event it is proposed to give God, in gratitude for the establishment of the American Church, a thank offering, which shall be dedicated to the spreading of Christ's Kingdom.

The memorial will be presented by the men of the American Catholic Church. For many years loyal church women have been giving of their goods in the United Offering which is presented at each General Convention and which is collected under the auspices of the Woman's Auxiliary to the Board of Missions.

Now the men of the Church will be given a glorious opportunity to prove their love and devotion to Jesus Christ. So far as possible every man in each parish will be personally interviewed and asked to contribtue to the fund. A central committee for the whole Church was appointed at the last General Convention, which includes the Bishop-Coadjutor of New York, Mr. George C. Thomas and Mr. George W. Pepper. In addition, each diocese has its committee, and the rector of every parish has been asked to appoint four men to appeal to each man in the Church in a face-to-face interview.

In our own diocese the work of organization has been completed, and we are ready to do our utmost in the furtherance of a movement which may be considered one of the most momentous in the Church's history.

The rector of St. Clement's takes this opportunity to appeal to every man and boy in the parish to give not only his money but his prayers and interest to the "Men's Forward Movement."

The parochial committee as appointed is as follows:

Mr. C. R. Woodruff, chairman; Messrs. Caleb F. Wright, G. Louis Mayer and William W. Lukens. Mr. Wright has been appointed the Treasurer of the fund.

We earnestly hope that these gentlemen may be aided and encouraged in their labors by the hearty co-operation of the men of St. Clement's Church, and that our parish may stand among the first in the generosity of its offering.

EASTER JOY.

For us, in a distant age, this fact, that Christ rose from death is not less full of precious hope and joy than for our first forefathers in the Faith. In our day there has been another resurrection, a resurrection of doubt. And the gloomy uncertainties about the future which were dissipated by Christ again threaten to overshadow sections of Christendom with little less than pagan darkness. But while negative speculation is ever active, the broad facts of human life remain what they always have been. Death claims, year by year, month by month, its victims from every household; science and thought, it may be reluctantly, bow their heads at the presence of death. They confess his power; they can suggest nothing to relieve the gloom which surrounds his empire. Only beside the tomb of Jesus Christ can this generation, or those who will succeed us, recover any true hope in the destinies of man; for "Christ is risen from the dead, and become the first fruits of them that slept. For since by man came death, by man came also the resurrection from the dead. For as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive."

It is this invigorating and joyous hope which Easter bestows upon us. Unbelief once wrote at the entrance of a cemetery "Fuerunt" ("They have been.") Faith always writes over the gate of a churchyard, "I am the Resurection and the Life." To unbelief the dead are but memories, memories of beings who have ceased to be. To Faith the dead are living, working, praying friends, whom nothing but the dullness of sense hides from sight.

The Resurection of Christ has done its work; it has quickened our perceptions of the unseen and the future; the hope of meeting those whom we have loved and lost; of renewing in a brighter atmosphere all that was worth keeping in the intercourse of earthly life; above all, the hope of seeing and being welcomed by Him, their Lord and ours, who in His human body is set at God's right hand in heavenly places. This hope, glorious and inspiring, springs directly from Easter Day.

Easter Day is a day for Christian joy. Of this joy the outward signs are around us. Nature and art are here; the flowers from the garden and the music of the choir, each contributes its best to the honor of our risen Lord May He grant that outward token of joy may be for us all, in keeping with an inward experience. The reality of a man's Easter joy is a fair test of his Christian sincerity. If we have at all felt sympathy with Christ in His sufferings, we must rejoice at the triumph which has ended them. If we do account our Christian faith as indeed the pearl of great price, we must rejoice at the event, which, more than any other, demonstrates its value; if we have staked our all upon the eternal future, our hearts must indeed abound with delight at the memory of that majestic fact, which shows that we have not wasted our efforts on an unsubstantial fancy. May Christ our Lord vouchsafe to deepen in us this joy in His Blessed Resurection, to give it more and more practical expression in our lives, and to satisfy it perfectly hereafter in that world where, through His death and resurrection, we shall be like Him, and shall see Him as He is.

CANON LIDDON.

THE DAUGHTERS OF JERUSALEM.

It has been allowed to condemned men in all ages to speak to the crowds assembled to witness their death. The dying speech used in this country to be a regular feature of executions. Even in ages of persecution the martyrs were usually allowed, as they ascended the ladder, to address the multitude; and these testimonies, some of which were of singular power and beauty, were treasured by the religious section of the community. It is nothing surprising, therefore, that Jesus should have addressed those who followed Him or should have been permitted to do so. No doubt He was at the last point of exhaustion, but, when He was relieved of the weight of the cross, He was able to rally strength sufficient for this effort. Pausing in the road and turning to the women, whose weeping and wailing were filling His ears, He addressed Himself to them.

His words are, in the first place, a revelation of Himself. They show what was demonstrated again and again during the crucifixion—how completely He could forget His own sufferings in care and anxiety for others. His sufferings had already been extreme; His soul had been filled with injustice and insult; at this very moment His body was quivering with pain and His mind darkened with the approach of still more atrocious agonies. Yet, when He heard behind Him the sobs of the daughters of Jerusalem, there rushed over His soul a wave of compassion in which for the moment His own troubles were submerged.

We see in His words, too, the depth and fervour of His patriotism. When He saw the tears of the women, the spectacle raised in His mind an image of the doom impending over the city whose daughters they were. Jerusalem, as has been already said, had always been extremely unresponsive to Him; she had played to Him an unmotherly part. None the less, however, did He feel for her the love of a loyal son. He had shown this a few days before, when, in the midst of His triumph, He paused on the brow of Olivet, where the city came into view, and burst into a flood of tears, accompanied with such a lyric cry of affection as has never been addressed to any other city on earth. Subsequently, sitting with His disciples over against the temple. He showed how well He foreknew the terrible fate which hung over the capital of His country, and how poignantly He felt it. The city's doom was nigh at hand: less than half a century distant: and it was to be unparalleled in its horror. The secular historian of it, himself a Jew, says in his narrative: "There has never been a race on earth, and there never will be one, whose sufferings can be matched with those of Jerusalem in the days of the siege." It was the foresight of this which made Jesus now say "Daughters of Jerusalem, weep not for Me, but weep for yourselves and for your children."

His words, still further, reveal His consideration for women and children. The tears of the women displayed an appreciation and sympathy for Him such as the men were incapable of; but well did He deserve them, for His words show that He had a comprehension of women and a sympathy with them such as had never before existed in the world. With the force of the imagination and the heart He realized how, in the approaching siege, the heaviest end of the misery would fall on the female portion of the population, and how the mothers would be wounded through their children. In that country, where children were regarded as the crown and glory of womanhood, the currents of nature would be so completely reversed by the madness of hunger and paid that barreness would be esteemed fortunate; and in a country where length of days had been considered the supreme blessings of life they would long and cry for sudden and early death.

Finally, there was in the words addressed to the daughters of Jerusalem an exhortation to repentance. When Jesus said, "Weep for yourselves and for your children." He was referring not merely to the approaching calamities of the city, but to its guilt. This was indicated most clearly in the closing words of His address to them—"For if they do these things in a green tree, what shall be done in the dry?"

He could speak of Himself as a green tree. He was young and He was innocent; to this the tears of the women testified; there was no reason why He should die; yet God permitted all these things to happen to Him. The Jewish nation ought also to have been a green tree. God had planted and tended it; it had enjoyed every advantage; but, when He came seeking fruit on it, He found none. It was withered; the sap of virtue and godliness had gone out of it; it was dry and ready for the burning; and, when the enemy came to apply the firebrand, why should God interpose? Thus did Jesus attempt once more to awaken repentance. He wished to thrust the impressions of the daughters of Jerusalem down from the region of feeling into a deeper place. They had given Him tears of emotion: He desired, besides these, tears of contrition; for in religion nothing is accomplished till impression touches the conscience.

Sin must be wept for some time—if not before punishment has fallen, then after; if not in time, then in eternity. This is a lesson for all. And has not that final word of Jesus a meaning for us even more solemn than it had for those to whom it was first addressed—"If these things be done in a green tree, what shall be done in the dry?" If woe and anguish fell, as they did, even on the Son of God, when He was bearing the sins of the world, what will be the portion of those who have to bear their own?

PARISH NOTES.

The Paschal candle was beautifully decorated this year by Miss McIlhenny.

The offerings on Ascension Day will be for All Saints' Seashore Home, Sea Isle City.

Confirmation is on May 23d. Prayers are asked for those who are preparing for the Sacrament.

A silver lavabo pitcher for S. Katharine's Altar has been presented by St. Nicholas Guild, in memory of Julia Neill Mayer.

Until the new parish building is erected, the choir will occupy temporary quarters in the basement of the Church, and will enter by the door under the organ.

On Wednesday in Passion Week Spohr's "Calvary" was sung by the combined choirs of S. Paul's, Camden, and S. Clement's. There was a large congregation.

In spite of the severe storm the Easter communion was a large one. The offering for all purposes amounted to $2553. The Mass sung was "The Sacred Heart" by Gounod.

The card for Rogation Intercession may be found in the corridor on Sunday, May 20th. The church will be open from 6 A. M. to 10 P. M. during the Rogation Days.

On Wednesday in Easter week a fair for the benefit of the Seashore Home was held in the parish hall. The whole was under the direction of Mrs. Keyes, and was an entire success. Too much cannot be said in praise of those who worked long and arduously in setting up the booths and decorating the hall. Something over three hundred dollars was realized.

The last service in S. John's Chapel was held on Monday evening, April 23d, when there was a meeting of S. Mary's Guild. Father Ward sang the office, and there was an address by the Rector. After the service ice cream and cake was served in the choir room. The Altar in the Chapel was taken out out on Tuesday morning, and has been offered to Father Field.

The clergy gratefully acknowledge many gifts that came to them on Easter, and especially the following donations from twenty-seven members of the congregation: 8 table cloths, 5 dozen napkins, 1 Canton flannel cover for dining table, 5 bed spreads, 1 dozen linen sheets, 1 dozen muslin sheets, 1 dozen linen bolster cases, 2 dozen linen pillow cases, 8 muslin pillow cases, 6½ dozen towels, 1 dozen Turkish towels, 1 dozen kitchen towels.

On Easter day the fete of the Catechism was held in the Church at 3 P. M., and a number of prizes were distributed asfollows:

Medals for attendance: Christine Boyle, Peter Boyle, Mildred Colston, Laura Colston, Henry Clay, Edith Downey, Louisa Dybeck, Jessie Forrester, Alice Fortune, Clara Fortune, Dorothea Haussam, Meta Haskins, Ethel Haskins, Norman Haskins, Cameron Hawkins, Alfred Johnson, John McLaughlan, Geo. McLaughlan, Thomas Sharpe, Grover Welch, Alex. Wood, Halsey Wood, Charles Decker.

2. Prize for diligences: Alice Fortune, Alex. Wood.

3. For recitations and examinations: Alice Fortune, George McLaughlin.

4. For reciting Gospel: Alex. Wood, Alice Fortune, Christine Boyle.

Solid silver crucifix, for perfect Gospel recitations: Meta Haskins.

The Greater Catechism has closed for the summer, and the Little Catechism meets in the church. Any of the older scholars who may desire to continue their instructions until June, will be provided with a teacher if they come to the Little Catechism.

Pictures and post cards of St. Clements' may be had at the Mission House at very reasonable prices.

THE "Practical" TROUSER-HANGER AND PRESS is the only perfect device for the care of trousers. It is made of quartered oak, therefore no metal to stain the cloth. It will make no disfiguring marks on the garment. It will double the capacity of your closet, keep your trousers "smooth as if ironed," make every pair separately get-at-able and is so easy to use, that "it's quicker than carelessness."

It has been on the market for ten years and there is not one dissatisfied customer.

OUR 52-PAGE BOOK

will convince you that you need the "Practical." Send for it now—or send us FIVE DOLLARS and we will send you, EXPRESS PAID,

A set of 5 Trousers-Hangers and 3 Closet Rods—or—4 Trousers-Hangers, 3 Rods and 6 Coat Hangers.

For $1.00 we will send, prepaid, 1 Trousers-Hanger, and afterward the balance of either set for $4.00, and if you are not satisfied, return the articles at our expense and we will refund the full purchase price.

PARISH NOTES.

Contributions are asked toward the expense of the Magazine.

The Sacrament of Confirmation was administered by the Bishop Coadjutor, on Wednesday evening, May 23d—twenty-five persons were confirmed.

During the building of the parish house, while the choir is obliged to occupy temporary quarters in the basement, Morning Prayer will be said at 7.30 on Sunday mornings.

The annual festival of the Confraternity of the Blessed Sacrament will be held on the feast of Corpus Christi, Thursday, June 14. Solemn High Mass will be sung at 9 o'clock.

Very excellent photographs of Saint John's Chapel can be obtained from Mr. Belinfante The larger size will cost $1.00, the smaller, 50 cents.

First Vespers of Corpus Christi will be sung on Wednesday, June 13, at 5.15 P. M., in the church—annual meeting of S. Saviour's Ward, in the rear of the church, immediately afterward.

A new picture has been hung on the south wall of the church, and is the gift of Mr. G. Theodore Roberts. The painting is a copy by Miss Roberts, of Bolticelli's Madonna of the Rosebush.

On week days, after July first, the 7.30 Mass will be discontinued. The weekly requiem will be said at 6.45 in the crypt. Also, after this date, there will be a low Mass on Sunday at 9.15 and no instruction, and the eight o'clock Mass will be omitted.

The clergy have secured the Smith cottage at Sea Isle City for the season. It is situated conveniently near All Saints' Home, and will enable a priest to be in residence all summer, so that a daily Mass can be said in the Sisters' Chapel.

The Sunday School picnic will be held at Almonesson Lake on Tuesday, July 10th. Tickets for the same will be ready for sale about a fortnight before that date. The children of the Sunday School are taken free. Tickets for adults at 40 cents; children at 20 cents.

The churchyard is looking its best during these Spring days. The shrubs and vines have been carefully trimmed and a number of plants set out. A new lawn-mower proves effectual in keeping the grass in condition, and the clergy have a pleasant garden spot for recreation on a summer's evening.

During the summer, the rector will be absent from the middle of July until September first. Father Quin will take his holiday during the first two weeks of July and the month of September. Fathers Ward and Schneeweiss will have the months of July and August respectively, and Father Kellogg will be away in September.

Solemn Mass was sung on Ascension Day at seven o'clock, with the rector as celebrant, and Fr. Quin and Fr. Ward as deacon and subdeacon. Later in the day the choir boys enjoyed their annual picnic at Laurel Springs, N. J. The outing was under the direction of Mr. Sears and Fr. Hutchinson. Fr. Quin and Fr. Kellogg were the guests of the day.

During the past month the work of dismantling the parish house has been accomplished. The Chapel Altar has been sent to Father Field, the chapel chairs given to the Mission House, and a vestment case presented to Calvary parish, W. Philadelphia. The vestments have been carefully laid away in the clergy house, and temporary quarters have been provided for the Choir in the basement of the church.

On Saturday morning, May 19, Rev. Nelson Kellogg was advanced to the priesthood by Bishop Doane in the Cathedral at Albany. The service in its simplicity was most impressive, there being hardly more than a dozen persons gathered in the choir of the Cathedral. Matins was followed by a low Mass with the bishop as celebrant, and the ordination took place immediately after the Gospel, the bishop sitting before the Altar, wearing the Mass vestments, and holding his pastoral staff. The candidate was presented by the Rev. C. S. Hutchinson, who, with the Rev. Fr. Stockitt, of Roxborough, Philadelphia, and two clergy of the diocese of Albany, assisted at the imposition of hands. The Philadelphia clergy returned on Saturday night, and Father Kellogg said his first Mass at the High Altar at eight o'clock on Sunday morning.

SAINT BARNABAS.

June 11.

Of Saint Barnabas we read that he was a good man, and full of the Holy Ghost and of faith. What words are these! "Full of the Holy Ghost." We have often heard them, and so our ears become dull to them. We know but little of it, and so we pass it by, as it were some ordinary thing. Yet so does Scripture entitle only one human being besides, and him one that was chosen to the high dignity of being first in "the noble army of Martyrs;" first to be "baptized in the Baptism" of his Lord, to share His Death, to confess Him before men, to be "confessed by Him before His Father, which is in Heaven." For, although the Apostles bid their brethren "look out among you seven men of honest report, full of the Holy Ghost," yet, among the seven so chosen, Holy Scripture singles out S. Stephen only for this great title: "They chose Stephen, a man full of faith and of the Holy Ghost;" this it repeats of him, just on the eve of his martyrdom, when his whole countenance, gleaming with the holy light of the indwelling Spirit, was visibly, to all who beheld "like the face of an angel," and he, through that Spirit, saw through the Heaven of Heavens, to the very throne of God, "and the Son of Man standing at the Right Hand of God." To him alone, besides S. Barnabas, does Scripture bear witness, that he was "full of the Holy Ghost;" doubtless it was so with the Twelve; it may have belonged to those who were thought worthy to be called Apostles; as, when our Lord called His "chosen vessel," S. Paul, at once to the Faith and to his Apostleship, Ananias was sent unto him, that he might be baptized and wash away his sins," and "receive his sight and be filled with the Holy Ghost;" doubtless, not for the time only (as is related of others), but to abide in him. Yet, so far, it has pleased God, that of these two only it should be accorded that they were full of the Holy Ghost; Nay, the mysterious depth of the title is thereby enlarged, that Scripture does so speak of One besides, Him, "in whom dwelt all the fullness of the God head," our very Blessed Lord Himself. Again, think of the title in itself: he saith not only, as at other times "filled," but "full of the Holy Ghost," i. e., not only filled for a time, but lastingly, abidingly; and full of Whom? Of the Holy Ghost, of God. Why, if we have from time to time some faint visitings of Him; if we are stirred up to conquer self more resolutely; to serve God more fervently; to deny ourselves more for God's glory or man's salvation, or, in the language of our Church, "feel in ourselves the Spirit of Christ, mortifying the works of the flesh and our earthly members, and drawing up our minds to high and heavenly things, it filleth us with joy, and doth greatly establish and confirm our faith of Eternal Salvation to be enjoyed through Christ." Men treasure through years the memory of such moments as these; amid much weakness and unsteadiness of purpose they turn back in thought to these bright spots; they often build their hope of salvation on them, although love has since waxed cold; but to be ever thus, to be ever filled with the Holy Ghost, to be able to endure in every part His Fiery Presence which consumeth all that is corrupt, or earthly, or defiled, "with the Spirit of judgment and the Spirit of burning," how can our dull hearts even think of this? "God is a consuming fire," and where He dwells, He must consume all that is alien or offensive to Him; and He dwelleth in us, in proportion as we shrink not from that burning touch, which (often with much pain that reaches to the very inmost soul) cleanses and makes us meet for His indwelling, by consuming what is unfit. What, then, must he have been, in whose whole self He dwelt? Who "was full of the Holy Ghost;" whose capacity of God's Presence had been so enlarged, in whom the earthly dross had been so refined, the interior of the temple of his body so purified from mere earthly garnishings, that it could be filled with God, full in every part, nothing excluded, every thought, wish, desire, feeling, action, motion, pulse of his whole frame, instinct with God; every chord of his whole heart vibrating truly to the touch of God, and answering to no other impulse—self wholly subdued, and God "all in all." his spirit, soul and body. Should I say that this is to be full of the Holy Ghost? No! I have spoken only of some accidents of it, some modes of His manifestation, some things without which it could not be, but what in itself it is, he only could tell, who himself were so filled, or God, Who filleth him. Others could as little conceive of it as the joys of Heaven, which heart hath never conceived, and to which it were most like; it were probably as little like what most Christians can guess of, as the midday sun is to the first faint gleam of twilight, which breaks through our darkness.

REV. E. B. PUSEY, D. D.

THE GARDENER.

"I am come into My Garden."
Cant. v:1.

Why bows the lily's lustrous head?
Why burns the rose with deeper glow?
What lightens every flower-bed?
He cometh, Whom thy heart doth know.

He cometh! Dews of herbs arise,
Sweet veils of wreathed fragrance float,
The lark, high hid in melting skies
Makes welcome from a blitheful throat.

He cometh! wondrous brightness lies
About His path on either hand,
Whilst every chilling shadow flies
From Light that glads a Heavenly Land.

Beams from their gentle Gardener's sight
Search all those glowing roses through:
And light your lily's lustrous white,
With opal gleams of rainbow hue.

Therefore, your lily bows her head;
Therefore, the roses deeper glow;
His sunshine o'er each floweret spread
He cometh, Whom thy soul doth know.

PARISH NOTES.

A new veil and burse have been given for use in the crypt chapel.

The Rev. Fr. Ward sailed for Bermuda on the 20th of June. He returns to the parish the first of August.

Flowers for the Altar are required during the summer. Please send them to the clergy house by 4 o'clock, Saturday afternoons.

Commencing July 1st, the eight o'clock Mass on Sunday will be discontinued until further notice, and Even-song will be said at five o'clock. There will be no 7.30 Mass on weekdays during the summer.

The Confraternity of the Blessed Sacrament held its annual meeting on the eve of Corpus Christi. Mr. Mowry was re-elected treasurer, and it was voted to make a contribution for the benefit of the Church of the Advent, San Francisco.

Notices have been sent to the men of the parish asking for subscriptions to the Men's Thank Offering to be presented at Richmond in 1907. It is to be hoped that every man in St. Clement's may do his part in giving a truly generous offering. It is understood that this may be applied to the relief of San Francisco.

The Catechism Pic-nic will be Tuesday, July 10th, at Almonesson Lake. The ferry leaves Chestnut Street Wharf at 9.30 a. m., to meet special cars leaving Camden. Returning, cars will leave the Lake at 6 p. m. All the children of the Catechism will receive free tickets. They may be had either from Fr. Schneeweiss or Fr. Kellogg, after July 1st. Tickets for adults will be 40 cents; for children, 20 cents. If any children wish to help in selling tickets, they may be had from the clergy at any time.

THE "MOTHERS' MEETING" MISSIONARY BOX

A few words of appreciation are due the "Mothers" for the valuable box sent to the Mountain District of North Carolina.

Not valuable with a money value, but because freighted with love.

Faithful attendance and willing hands soon gave us many finished garments.

A quilt and knitted garments, made by those too ill to attend the meetings, two aprons by one who is totally blind, have shown what a loving interest can do. Interesting books and pictures were sent, and many little gifts from unexpected sources.

So we trust the hearts of those at work in the Mission field we have chosen, will be cheered by this assurance of our friendship and prayers.

" Elizabeth Lithgow.

"Bring not my son thither again."

The patriarch Abraham was nearing the end of his days on earth. He knew himself as chosen by Almighty God out of all the world, to hold and teach among men the religion of the true God. He had been set apart from all others and honored by God with the gracious promise that "all the nations of the earth should be blessed in him."

The time came when a wife must be chosen for Abraham's son Isaac, who had been granted to him as his heir in his old age. We find Abraham fully realizing the danger for his son in meeting or mingling in any way with those, who although his own relatives, were still pagans in the old home at Haran in Mesopotamia.

She who was to become the wife of Abraham's son must be brought from the ancestral home to the land where Abraham and Isaac dwelt. Isaac, who was to be the successor of Abraham as the chosen of God, to represent the true religion in the world must on no account be exposed to the danger of being tempted to idolatry, and of weakening his faith in God, by going into heathen Mesopotamia. Hence the peremptory instruction of Abraham to his steward Eliezer, who was to choose the wife for Isaac: "Beware thou that thou bring not my son thither again."

We notice in Abraham the carefulness, the jealous devotion with which he strove to hold and preserve the faith which had been delivered by God to him, in trust for the nations of the world. There is in him no sign of the spirit of temporizing, or of compromise of the slightest kind when the service and honor due to the true God are in question.

And modern Christians may learn the lesson of constancy and consistency in God's service from Abraham "the Friend of God."

For there are modern Mesopotamias where it is not safe for the children of God to come or to tarry. There are modern pagans and idolaters to whom the service of the true God means nothing. In association with these the Christian is sure to find his religion in danger of being weakened, and the strength of his devotion to God sapped.

The Christian can never have the right to expose himself voluntarily to spiritual dangers. There are atmospheres which are unfit and dangerous for his soul as surely as there are localities where physical dangers lurk, and where his bodily health must suffer if he should remain in such places.

In choosing a place in which to spend the summer no one would knowingly select a spot where there was sure danger of contracting malaria. Yet it is only too true that very many who call themselves Christians choose their home for the summer with little or no regard as to whether or not they will be deprived of the spiritual helps which they have always been accustomed to use and enjoy. There is very little thought of any danger to their souls, and they run the risk of the spiritual counterpart to bodily malaria, which will mark its traces on their souls in a certain dullness and inactivity, an incapacity for the least spiritual effort. From such a condition the soul can only recover slowly, and with difficulty, as it becomes again earnest and faithful in the use of God's grace, and strives to renew its devotion to Him.

The tendency to yield to a spirit of laxity in the affairs of the spiritual life is a most real danger for those Christians who find themselves separated for any time from their accustomed spiritual surroundings.

Surely, then, they are more than ever called upon at such times to redouble their efforts to be consistent and earnest in their service of God. His claim upon Christians in all the affairs of their lives is of the first importance, and can never be trifled with or set aside without danger and loss to that part of their being which was bestowed upon them at the beginning when God "breathed into man's nostrils the breath of life, and man became a living soul."

To all the injunction comes at all times, "glorify God in your body and in your spirit, which are God's.

PARISH NOTES.

The number of communions made this month has been good.

Father Schneeweiss will leave for his vacation the first of August, returning the first of September.

It is hoped that more flowers will be given for the altars. We thank all those who have so thoughtfully sent them this summer.

Father Hutchinson left July 10th for Canada. Later he will go to Massachusetts, and will return September 1st. He spent the Fourth of July at Sea Isle.

The choir will have its vacation during August. During that month the eleven o'clock Mass will be a low Mass with hymns. There will be a sermon after the Mass.

The work on the new parish building is going on steadily. The old building and the old clergy house have been taken down. The men are now deepening the cellar, and new stone for the foundation has already arrived.

On Tuesday, the day before the Fourth of July, the Acolytes started for their annual outing together, under the care of Mr. Goodwin. They spent a very happy time at Elkinton's Farm, Alloway, New Jersey, and returned the following Monday.

The Feast of the Transfiguration, August 6th, falling on Monday this year, makes it necessary to omit the Mass in the crypt on that day. There will be instead the usual holy day Mass at half-past nine. There will be a requiem said on Wednesday, August 8th, at a quarter before seven in the crypt chapel.

The attendance at the Children's Mass has been very encouraging this summer. While not so many children come as do in winter, yet there are a goodly number. The Mass being a low Mass without hymns makes it harder for the children, but their coming shows a real desire to be present at the Holy Sacrifice.

The church garden is unusually pleasant this time of year, when it is the only spot of green in the neighborhood. Many new flowers have been put in the beds, and some new ivy has also been given. We are told that people who are accustomed to pass in the cars wait for a glimpse of our garden. It makes us realize all the more the need of a children's play ground in this part of town.

The All Saints' Sisters' Home at Sea Isle City is again open this summer. The second crowd has gone down to enjoy the coolness and the rest; while the children's delight in the bathing and in having the beach to play on is an ever increasing pleasure to those who have the privilege of being with them. The clergy have the house next but one to the "Home," and one of them is always in residence.

THE CATECHISM PICNIC.

July tenth came, bright and fair, and about fifty of us left for Almonesson Lake. There was the usual scramble for front seats in the car, and we started for the lake. It was almost impossible for us to wait till we arrived, so anxious were we for a row and a swim and something to eat.

Soon we were in the boats, but a most appalling sign met the boys: "No swimming in this lake." But soon we found the rule was relaxed "on the other side." Swimming and boating and eating and ball playing filled the day till at a few minutes after five we had to seek shelter from the sudden rain. The car came for us at six, and we were able to get home between the showers. There were no accidents, and it was a very happy day for all of us, only we wished more of the catechism could have been there too.

NEW CHURCH IN SOUTH AFRICA.

A new church under the patronage of St. Cuthbert, the Saint of Lindisfarne, has just been built and dedicated by the Cowley fathers in their South African mission.

The preparations for the consecration were enormous, for not only did all who came have to be sheltered, but also feasted. It was necessary to have 150 big pots for preparing the food.

The service took place in May, the Bishop and several clergy coming for the occasion.

The church is simple and severe, but very beautiful and much larger than the old church. In the new one there is room for the heathen at the west end. They depart after the sermon, for only Christians may rightly assist at the Holy Sacrifice.

Another feature of the church would seem strange to us—the baptismal tank instead of a font. At the time of the consecration the Bishop baptized, by immersion, eight men. Fr. Puller says it carried one back to apostolic days to see the ceremony.

The figures of our Lord, Blessed Mary and St. John on the rood made a deep impression on many of the heathen who came to take part in the feast. A service was arranged for them in the afternoon, after the dedication proper was over.

Some of them were talking to Fr. Puller after the service about the rood, and as he was explaining to them about the rood and our Lord's death, one of them said: "Then now He is dead;" and another heathen answered, "No, He rose again on the third day," showing how carefully he had listened to the instruction given a few minutes before.

The service of consecration began at seven o'clock in the morning, having been preceded by a Mass in the old church. Seven or eight hundred native Christians came from the out stations of the parish, each headed by their preacher in surplice and a banner bearing the name of the station. The procession passed around the outside of the church, headed by the Incense. Brother Maynard, whom many will remember, carried the beautiful processional crucifix belonging to the mission.

The service was entirely in Kaffir. The singing was especially remarkable. The choir sat in the front seats of the nave and merely led the congregation, as is their usual custom. After the various parts of the church had been consecrated, the Bishop began the Mass. The whole ceremony took about three hours.

After the consecration, about noon, the Bishop presided at the "opening meeting," at which people give their gifts in kind.

After the service for the heathen in the afternoon came the feast so long prepared for. Seven oxen had been killed for it. Every body sat down on the ground, and the chief personally supervised the distribution of the provisions. After this was over the heathen returned home, but the Christians stayed for evensong. It was at this service the baptisms took place. The men had been fasting all day.

Next morning about five hundred natives made their communions. Thus was fittingly closed the day of dedication of St. Cuthbert's Church, showing what can be done by devotion and self-sacrifice in heathen lands.

PARISH NOTES.

The choir returns for the first Sunday in September.

Evensong will be sung at eight o'clock, beginning Sunday, September 2.

Wednesday, Friday and Saturday, September 19, 21 and 22, are Ember days.

The eight o'clock Sunday Mass will be resumed September 16, the third Sunday of the month.

Fr. Hutchinson will return for the first Sunday in September. Frs. Quin and Kellogg go away for September.

On Monday, September 17, the seven-thirty Mass will be resumed, and the requiem said on Mondays at that hour.

The Little Catechism will begin the third Sunday in September, and the Great Catechism the first Sunday in October.

Friday, September 14, is the Feast of the Exaltation of the Holy Cross. Members of the Guild of the Holy Cross should be careful to receive Holy Communion.

The work on the parish building is progressing. The walls are nearly all up to the top of the first story, and one can gain some very tangible idea of the size and shape of the various rooms.

The number of flowers given during the summer is very gratifying. Flowers have been given every week for the crypt, and sometimes more often; and nearly every Sunday for the high altar. We are very thankful to those who have been so kind.

From the ninth to the eleventh of August a very successful fair was held at Mrs. Wells' cottage, Sea Isle City, for the benefit of the All Saints' Seashore Home. A goodly sum of money was realized, showing how much hard work had been done in preparation by the ladies. Sea Isle City was as thoroughly enjoyed during August as it had been during July. The last party returned on the twenty-fourth.

BROTHERHOOD OF ST. ANDREW.

Program for National Convention, Memphis.

The provisional program for the Twenty-first Annual Convention to be held in Memphis, October 18-21, has been announced, and while not yet completed, the subjects and speakers definitely arranged for indicate that same will be an extremely excellent one and should be of great interest to all attending, not only to Brotherhood men, but all who have the welfare of the Church at heart.

The subjects for the addresses are live questions of the day, and are pertinent to the work of the Brotherhood and the forward movement of the Church. The speakers include Bishops Bratton, of the Diocese of Mississippi; Kinsolving, of Texas; Anderson, of Chicago, and Gailor, of Tennessee. Among the laymen who will address the Convention are Jas. L. Houghteling, Founder of the Brotherhood; H. D. W. English, of Pittsburg, Pa., former President of the Brotherhood; E. H. Bonsall, of Philadelphia; J. H. Smale and Courtenay Barber, of Chicago; Hubert Carlton, General Secretary, and Traveling Secretaries Shelby, Randall and McAllister.

The Corporate Communion of the Brotherhood will be held at 7.00 A. M., October 20. Public meetings will be held on the night of October 18 and afternoon and night of October 21. All meetings, however, are open to those desiring to attend.

There will be several conferences and also several addresses for the Juniors, who will be a prominent part of the Convention. Considerable interest having been shown by those expecting to attend, in the University of the South at Sewanee, Tenn., the Transportation Committee is making arrangements with the railroads for stop-overs on Memphis excursion tickets and for an excursion from Memphis to Sewanee immediately following the Convention.

Excursion rates of approximately one fare for the round trip to Memphis have been announced by the railroads from all parts of the United States, except the Pacific coast. The Publicity Committee has issued a Convention folder which includes detailed information regarding Memphis hotel rates and also railroad excursion rates, a copy of which, with other information, may be obtained by addressing W. R. Fearon, Convention Secretary, 1312 Memphis Trust Building, Memphis, Tenn.

EXTREME UNCTION.

Forty years ago Bishop Forbes called unction of the sick "the lost pleiad of the Anglican firmament." And now, when church people have begun to know the Mass and are coming in increasing numbers to their confessions, extreme unction is still little better known, if we may judge from its use, than it was in Bishop Forbes' time.

Extreme unction is so-called from its being the last administration to the devout person of the various unctions or anointings of the body with Holy Oil which have been so common throughout the history of the church. Many people have the idea that the name comes from its being received in extremis, but it is usually only when the families of the sick are negligent that the reception of the sacrament is put off till a veritable miracle would be necessary to save the life of the dying person.

But let us look at the directions for this sacrament. If one can use the expression, it is one of the most scriptural of all the sacraments.

St. James says in his epistle: "Is there any sick among you? Let him call for the elders of the church, and let them pray over him, anointing him with oil in the name of the Lord, and the prayer of faith shall save the sick and the Lord shall raise him up; and if he have committed sins, they shall be forgiven him." (St. James, 5:14-15.)

Clearly here we are told to send for the elders (the priests) when we are sick; not to wait till death is imminent. When we or our friends realize the sickness is really severe, it is our duty to send for the presbyters that they may pray over us and anoint us with oil in the name of the Lord, and the effect will be that the prayer of faith will save the sick. This is the first and great effect of the sacrament: to "support the divine life by cleansing the soul from the remains of sin." To give the soul such sanctifying grace as may avail to restore and strengthen the sick for the trials and pains attendant upon sickness and even death, for even though we have fought a good fight all our lives, yet there is terrible danger of our falling away during especial times of trial, such as severe sickness, when the body is giving way and the will is weakened. It is not so much to relieve the defects that take away the spiritual life, i. e., mortal sin, for unction is a "sacrament of the living" that is like Holy Communion—it is to be received by those in a stage of grace, for Almighty God has ordained the sacrament of penance for those who have been so separated from Him. Again this holy anointing prepares the soul for its entrance into glory by washing away any sins that are still unabsolved, "and if he hath committed any sins they shall be forgiven him." It is on this account that some of the fathers call it the "Perfection and Consummation of Penance," and, thirdly, it is God's will for the good of the soul, there is given the healing of the body also. This sacrament was instituted "not to suspend the laws of nature, but to assist them." (And it is probable that because this fact was overlooked that Protestism in the church overreached itself and took the office for the anointing of the sick out of the prayer-book at the second revision under Edward VI, and to which it never has been restored.)

The fact that God gave the sacrament to assert the laws of nature, not to override them, goes to show us how wrong we are if we put off asking for this sacrament till by God's will we are about to draw our last breath; and, again, it is not meant to supersede the usual medicines God in His mercy has prepared for our use. We have no right to say that because we have received holy unction, therefore we need no more care, any more than we have a right to say that when we have delayed till the last moment of life according to nature, then by some tremenodus upheaval there will be given us new bodily life through His sacrament. God in His wisdom does either of these two things, but they are not a necessary part of the sacrament.

In order to receive the sacrament we must, of course, be baptized, as is always necessary. Then, too, we must have the use of our reason —it is no mere superstitious form— and again it is a sacrament for those really dangerously ill, for, as we have said, the purpose of the sacrament is to increase the sanctifying grace so that if it be God's will that we die, we may die in Him, and as these refer more especially to what we might call our bodily preparation, it is also necessary to be free from known mortal sin, for remember this is not the sacrament which primarily remits sin.

Then, too, we ought to make the most fervent acts of faith, hope and love, even as those who came to be healed by our blessed Lord came in faith that they would be healed, in a real hope of being healed and with as fervent love of the divine Lord as they were capable of giving.

What an awful thing it is for our friends to keep from us a knowledge of our state till we are really incapable of receiving the consolations of religion that the Sacred Heart of Jesus so lovingly longs to give us. It is a sin for which they will have to be answerable at the last day.

A word about the sacrament itself: The prayer of the priests and the anointing with oil is the outward sign, and we ought to be careful to have washed the parts of the body to be anointed, either as the first prayer-book of Edward VI directs—the forehead or the breast—or the five senses, as many theologians say. A table with a crucifix and two candles should, if possible, be placed near the bed of the sick person, that the sacrament may be administered more reverently.

The Guild of All Souls has for years used this prayer weekly for the restoration of holy unction:

"O blessed Lord, who didst send forth Thy disciples to anoint with oil the sick, of Thy loving kindness restore to use in this branch of Thy Church the comfortable sacrament of holy unction, that not only the sickness of our bodies, but the diseases of our souls may be driven out by the virtue of this holy anointing and the merits of Thy saving cross."

Surely many more faithful Christians could use this prayer that our Church may not be the only part of Christendom where this gift of God is so painfully neglected, especially now when it is so necessary for the Church to take a stand in regard to various practices which have sprung up, doubtless through our own fault in this regard.

Let us close with some pointed words from the Bishop of Brechin, from his work on the Thirty-nine Articles:

"One must at once confess and deplore that a distinctly scriptural practice has ceased to be commanded in the Church of England. Excuses may be made of 'corrupt following of the Apostles' in that it was used contrary to the mind of St. James when all hope of restoration of bodily health was gone; but it cannot be denied that there has been practically lost an Apostolic practice whereby, in case of grievous sickness the faithful were anointed and prayed over for the forgiveness of their sins, and to restore them, if God so willed, or to give them spiritual support in their maladies. . . . The rite was restored by the nonjuring bishops. Meanwhile, until it can be generally restored, it may be observed that it was never considered necessary to salvation, as is formally laid down by St. Thomas. It is rather a privilege of the devout."

It is needless to say that, like the rest of the Catholic faith and practice, this sacrament has been restored at St. Clement's, and the clergy are always ready and willing to administer it.

PARISH NOTES.

The offering on All Saints day will be for the All Saints Sisters, as usual.

Mr. Sears needs boys for the choir. Are there no boys in the church who are willing to offer themselves for this work, or has no one any boy acquaintance who is able to sing?

The clergy are grateful for many donations to the clergy house during the summer. Their friends have been most generous in supplying the "fruits of the earth" for their enjoyment.

Mr. Sears will resume his Sunday evening organ recitals on the first Sunday in October. He will also give four recitals in the church, on Tuesday evenings, October 23d and 30th and November 6th and 13th.

Owing to the extreme heat, the congregations during the summer have been even smaller than usual. As a consequence the parish treasury has suffered. We would be grateful for generous offerings toward the current expenses.

We must repeat a request made about a year ago, that those who come to the services during the week will sit as far forward as possible and make audible responses. This is specially necessary at present, as the noise of the work in the parish house renders it increasingly difficult to fill the church.

We shall need a new piano for the choir room in the parish building. It would be to our advantage to place the order at once and dispose of the old instrument. If this can be done we will also be able to lessen the expense now incurred in renting a piano for the church. Is there not some one who will contribute toward this object?

The work in the parish house has progressed slowly this summer, but within the last two weeks rapid strides have been made toward its completion, and some general idea can be gathered as to what the final result will be. It is hoped that the lower floor may be ready for use by St. Clement's Day. The whole to be completed early in the new year.

The month of October finds a full staff of clergy at St. Clement's. All are refreshed by their summer's rest and ready for the activities of the winter. There will be great need of efficient helpers in various departments, especially in the Sunday school. Are there not some faithful communicants who are willing to give a portion of their time each Sunday afternoon, and cannot parents endeavor to send their children to the Catechism, rather than to the Protestant Sunday schools of the neighborhood? This last is found to be the case only too often, and among those who consider themselves loyal to the Catholic faith. Protestant Sunday schools will never make Catholics of the children who attend them.

THE ORGAN.

Now that the new parish building is well under way, our thoughts naturally turn to the decoration of the sanctuary and the placing of a new memorial altar, two objects very dear to the heart of every loyal member of St. Clement's parish.

In order that this work may be carried out effectively it will be necessary to make some disposition of the organ, which as it now stands is anything but artistic or beautiful, looking merely like an aggregation of large, glaring tin pipes, so placed as to detract very materially from the appearance of the present sanctuary, and would mar entirely the color scheme of the contemplated decorations.

To move the organ, which is most essential to the carrying out of the sanctuary plans, means that it must be entirely rebuilt, placing it perhaps in an organ chamber especially constructed for the purpose, or perhaps put it in the space formerly occupied by the west gallery.

Our organ has for many years been one of the largest and finest in Philadelphia, and now that rebuilding seems to be a real necessity we should consider having the work so thoroughly and effectively done that we may have one of the noteworthy instruments of the country for many years to come.

To accomplish this will, of course, require a considerable amount of money, but there may be someone who would feel it a privilege to provide for it as a memorial to some friend or loved one.

"Make the praise of my name to be glorious," says Holy Scripture, and there could be no more fitting way of showing one's desire to do this than by improving the organ, which would also (by permitting the sanctuary to be, as it should, the prominent feature of the east end of the church) make more clear the marvelous beauty and dignity of our altar service and worship.

THE BURIAL OF RAYMOND

A very striking legend in the life of St. Bruno, which led to his conversion, according to the Carthusian tradition is said to have taken place while he was a student at Paris.

There was a certain canon of the Cathedral of Paris, a doctor and lecturer in the university, of great renown for his learning, and generally regarded as a man of blameless life. He died, and all the members of the University attended his funeral. While the body lay on the bier between flaming tapers of yellow unbleached nux, the clergy chanted around it and the officiating priest recited the proper lesson from the book of Job:

"Hear diligently my speech, and my declaration with your ears.
Behold, now, I have ordered my course; I know that I shall be justified.
Who is he that will plead with me? for now, if I hold my tongue, I shall give up the ghost.
Only do not two things unto me: then will I not hide myself from thee.
Withdraw thine hand far from me: and let not thy dread make me afraid.
Then call thou, and I will answer: or let me speak, and answer thou me."

At that moment the corpse opened it eyes, rose slowly on the bier, and said in a low voice: "I am accused at the just judgment-seat of God."

A horror fell on all present: they fled from the church, and the corpse, which had sunk back upon the bier was left alone.

Next day the funeral ceremony was re-commenced. With trembling voice the priest began the lesson:

"Hear diligently my speech, and my declaration with your ears.

Then call thou, and I will answer."

He paused. His nervous fingers could hardly hold the book. With an effort he proceeded:

"Let me speak, and answer thou me."

Again the corpse arose and opened its dead blank eyes; no color shot into the sallow cheeks, but the livid lips opened, and the words issued: "I am judged at the just Tribunal of God."

And again it fell back motionless as before.

The same panic fell on priests and assistants. The service was not concluded that day.

On the third day a crowd of wondering people attended, with faces blank with alarm. Amid the funeral trappings the yellow tapers seemed to burn faintly. A silence most profound fell on all as the choir began to intone the mournful psalms for the dead.

Then the Bishop himself advanced to read the dreaded lesson, and every breath was hushed in an agony of suspense.

"Then call thou, and I will answer: or let me speak and answer thou me."

Once more the corpse sat up, and with a loud and lamentable cry, that rang through the church, exclaimed:

"I am condemned by the just judgment of God."

As before the people were flying, and the clergy were looking this way and that in amazement—when the Bishop spoke: "Stay," said he, in a clear firm voice. "Take the body and carry it forth from the church and thrust it into the ground where ye will. That shall have no portion in holy earth which can only come forth to the Resurrection of Damnation."

Bruno, so runs the tale, was present during those awful scenes. The shock, the horror, overcame him, and he resolved forever to quit the world, its pomps and vanities and live with the just judgment of God ever before his eyes.

Dr. Neall remarks: "The terrible story of Raymond has, I fear, been well-nigh disproved as a piece of history. But the allegory is neither the less true nor the less striking."

REV. S. BARING-GOULD.

SAINT ETHELDREDA

Queen, Virgin, Abbess.
October 17.

Sometimes we have to speak of a servant; to-day we speak of a queen. See then how glorious a thing this is that we believe, that all those who belong to God's Holy Church, and have departed in His Faith and fear, are knit together in one communion and fellowship. None too low to be shut out from it; none too high to make it their chief glory.

We have an especial interest in Saint Etheldreda because she was an English queen, and we know the Cathedral in which she is now awaiting her Lord's second coming, the Cathedral of Ely. Her whole life was one long tissue of troubles. That is the way the Saints get to heaven; but we seem to fancy that we have found out a pleasanter road. "That we must through much tribulation enter into the Kingdom of God." Saint Luke says; but we have discovered that this is too troublesome a text; and one would think we had altered it, too; that we must through much pleasure enter into the Kingdom of God; God grant that they who do so may not find themselves bitterly mistaken when it is too late.

Hear what Saint Etheldreda thought of worldly pleasure. She was seized with a disease in the throat; very painful to bear. "Yes," she said "and it is a fit punishment to me for the pleasure I once took in wearing necklaces and jewels there."

We all of us, more or less, know what suffering means; all of us, as time goes on must expect to know more of it than we do now. Therefore this question of St. Paul's is very useful, "Have ye suffered so many things in vain?" For it shows that we may suffer in vain. Christ suffered that He might be like us; but we may suffer and not be at all like Christ. Take care that it be not said of us, "This is that man or that woman, whom God sought to bring to holiness; who was afflicted that he might see how vain everything in this world was; who had pain that he might learn to look forward to that world where there is no pain; who had tribulation enough here, but it did not make him fit for eternal happiness hereafter."

This is the most miserable of all states—to lose this world and not to gain the next; to be unable to have the pleasures of one, such as they are, and yet not to attain to the pleasures which are at God's right hand forever more. "If in this life only we have hope in Christ we are of all men most miserable."

Lazarus, that was laid at the rich man's gate, full of sores, if he, when he died, had in hell lifted up his eyes being in torments, he would have been wretched indeed. But do not deceive yourselves. It is not because Lazarus was poor and afflicted that he was carried by angels into Abraham's bosom. It was because his poverty and his sores made him a true servant of Him that was wounded for our transgressions and bruised for our iniquities. You may be as poor as Lazarus here, and yet have your portion with the rich man hereafter; just as St. Etheldreda had her portion with the rich man here, and yet now rests like Lazarus on Abraham's bosom.

There are two dangers in suffering. St. Paul tells us of them both: "My son, despise not thou the chastening of the Lord, nor faint when thou art rebuked of Him." We ought neither to determine not to feel them,. not to care about them, to go our own ways, to think our own thoughts, to do our own deeds all the same; nor yet so to murmur, so to repine, so to be discontented about them, as if we were treated cruelly or unjustly.—Rev. Dr. Neale.

Etheldreda is said to have been of dazzling beauty, so that she was sought in marriage by all the princes around. Of these suitors, the promise of her hand was won from her father by Toubert, an East Anglian prince. But from her earliest years she had devoted her virginity to God. The prince reverenced her, respected her vow, and, dying in two years, left her, as her dower, the Isle of Ely.

In her second marriage with Egfrid, son and heir of the powerful Osry, King of North Umbria, into which she was reluctantly compelled, the prince vainly endeavored to induce her to renounce her monastic purpose. On the other hand, Wilfred, Archbishop of York, counselled her to ask from her husband a formal separation that she might consecrate herself to God in a nunnery. Furnished with Egfrid's tardy permission, she fled to Coldingham, the great seaside monastery. There Wilfred gave her the veil and black robe, which should forever cut her off from her husband and from the pursuit of any earthly admirer. Egfrid, however, followed her to her retreat, unable to endure her absence, and the sacrifice she she had imposed upon him. The Abbess Ebba saw that she was powerless against her nephew; she therefore advised the queen to flee, and Etheldreda wandered away with one attendant, and lay hidden for a time in lonely places. At last she ventured to return to her own territories, the Isle of Ely, dower of her first husband, and there she founded an Abbey, of which Wilfred consecrated her Abbess, where she ruled for the remaining seven years of her life, over two houses, one a community of monks, the other of nuns. Many of her old servants and members of her household followed her, desiring to place themselves under the firm and gentle guidance of their beloved queen and mistress.

She gave her disciples, during the seven years that she passed at their head, an example of all the monastic virtues, and especially of fasting and prayer; it was her custom to continue in church, engaged in her devotions from Matin's till daybreak, and she seldom ate more than once in the twenty-four hours, except in great festivals. Few details exist of this period of her life; but the holiness of that life must have left deep traces in the memory of the Anglo-Saxon Christians, to have enabled it to triumph over time and human forgetfulness beyond that of any woman of her race.

She died young, and was buried by her own desire in the graveyard in the midst of her sisters, without any mark of distinction, and so remained until her celebrated translation into the Saxon Church, which took place on October 17, after an interval of sixteen years, under the Abbess of Sexburga, her own sister, who had succeeded her as head of the convent. Her remains were then placed in a beautiful marble sarcophagus of Roman workmanship, which had been dug up in the neighborhood.

There is little doubt that her remains still rest in her cathedral at Ely, though the exact spot is unknown.—Selected.

PARISH NOTES.

Bona Mors will be said on Mondays during November after Evensong.

The offerings on All Saints' Day will be for the All Saints Sisters, as usual.

The first meeting of the Altar Guild will be held on All Souls' Day, after the Solemn Mass.

Confessions for the festival may be made on the Wednesday and Thursday before. The hours will be posted later.

A new cushion for the missal rest at Saint Katharine's altar has been presented "in loving memory of Julia Dunlap."

The Endowment Fund has been increased by a gift of $5000 in memory of "John Douglas Brown and Anna, his wife."

Commencing Sunday evening, November 11, a Bible class for men will be conducted by the rector at quarter past seven, in the clergy house.

A Requiem Mass will be said every allowable day in November, at 7.30 o'clock. Names to be mentioned should be written and handed to the clergy at least the day before.

Any who intend to make their communion at the Solemn Mass (9 o'clock) should give notice to that effect beforehand. Otherwise the celebrant makes no provision for them.

On November 16, at 11 o'clock, a Solemn Requiem will be sung for the repose of the soul of George Herbert Moffett, Priest. At this time an offering will be taken for the memorial altar.

As usual, the offerings on Thanksgiving Day will be for the poor fund. Donations are also asked for the Episcopal Hospital. Offerings for the last-named object should be placed in marked envelopes.

A number of small devotional books have been taken from the crypt chapel. Will those who are using them be good enough to return them, as they are intended for any who may come to the crypt for their devotions.

Vespers of the dead will be sung on Thursday, November 1, at 5.15 in the church. The Masses on All Souls' Day will be at 6.30, 7 and 7.30, and Solemn Mass at 9 A. M. The Christian names of baptized persons to be remembered should be written out, and handed to the clergy by Thursday afternoon at the latest. They will be read out at one Mass which may be specified.

Beginning in Advent a mission study class for women will be held weekly in the mission house under the direction of Sister Frances Virginia. It will be carried on as S. Clement's Branch of the Woman's Auxiliary to the Board of Missions. The day and hour of the meetings will be announced later, and it is hoped that the women of the parish will give the class their cordial and interested support.

At a vestry meeting, held October 9, Messrs. George Lewis Mayer and W. W. Lukens were elected to fill the vacancies caused by the death of Mr. Clay and the resignation of Dr. Wells. It is with regret that we announce that the demands of his practice have compelled Dr. Wells to give up his position as vestryman. He has been a most valuable member of the Board, and will be missed by all.

Owing to the failure of the Real Estate Trust Company, the various funds which were at the rector's disposal have been temporarily lost. It is hoped that the full amount may in time be restored. At present the sum owing to us reaches $852. This does not include the poor fund, which is also a total loss. May we not ask for a special effort to restore at least the poor money, as the activities of the parish have been much embarrassed by the failure.

The number of communions, both on Sundays and weekdays has diminished very considerably during the last few months. Can it be that the devotion of S. Clement's people to the Blessed Sacrament is waning, or that their love for their Divine Lord is growing cold? It seems hardly possible that this can be the case, and yet one is at a loss to account for the condition in any other way. May we not all make a resolution to overcome our sloth and indifference and to increase our communions? The mark of the success or failure of any parish is the spiritual life that is manifested within it. The gauge of the spiritual life is the frequency with which the faithful make their communions. Without this life, all the parochial activity is a mockery—a mere empty shell from which the soul has been withdrawn. Let us during the coming festival offer ourselves anew to Jesus Christ, and let every communicant of S. Clement's parish receive his Lord during the octave of our feast.

On the 2d of September, 1906, entered into life eternal Edward Cook Clay, for many years a devout communicant and vestryman of Saint Clement's Church, Philadelphia.

Devoted to the Catholic Church, Mr. Clay believed with all his heart the "faith once delivered unto the Saints," and continually manifested in his life and conversation those Christian graces which, through that faith, were bestowed upon him.

The rector, wardens and vestry of Saint Clement's parish desire to record their deep appreciation of the singular beauty of his character, the purity of his life, his unswerving loyalty, and his untiring zeal in the performance of any duty laid upon him, and they humbly commend his soul to the keeping of that Divine Lord, whom while on earth he acknowledged as his God and his Redeemer. May he rest in peace. Amen.

S. CLEMENT'S TIDE, 1906.

This year our patronal feast will be celebrated on Friday, November 23. The preacher at the Solemn Mass will be the Rev. Edward M. Jefferys, rector of S. Peter's Church, Philadelphia. On Sunday morning it is hoped that Father McGarvey, of S. Elizabeth's, will occupy the pulpit, and on Sunday evening Dr. Christian, of the Church of S. Mary the Virgin, New York, will preach for the Sodality of S. Clement. The Solemn Procession of the Sodality will take place at this service, and it is desirable that all members of the guilds should endeavor to be present. Let us have as large a representation as last year. It is probable that the lower floor of the parish building will be sufficiently in order to admit of its temporary use. Owing to the uncertain conditions at present, no announcement can be made concerning the parish tea, but information will be given later.

Thursday, Nov. 22, 8 P. M.—First Vespers at S. Katharine's Altar.

Friday, Nov. 23—St. Clement, B. and M. (General Communion). Masses 6, 7, 8 and 8.30.

Solemn Mass, Procession and Sermon 11 A. M. (Thanksgiving for God's blessings on the parish).

Saturday, Nov. 24—Masses 7 and 7.30. (Commemoration of Dedication.)

Sunday, Nov. 25—St. Katharine V. and M. Masses 7, 8 and 9.15. Solemn Mass and Procession 11 A. M. (for the Faithful and the Sodality). 8 P. M., Solemn Vespers, Procession of Sodality and Te Deum.

Monday, Nov. 26—Masses 6.45 (Crypt), 7 and 7.30. Requiem for Benefactors and Communicants; 8 P. M., Children's Entertainment.

Tuesday, Nov. 27—Masses 7, 7.30 and 9.30 (The Sisters and Mission Work).

Wednesday, Nov. 28—Masses 7 and 7.30 (Penitents and Lapsed).

Thursday, Nov. 29—Thanksgiving Day Masses, 7, 8, 9.15 and Solemn Mass 11 A. M. (Thanksgiving for Harvest, God's Blessing on Country and Rulers).

Friday, Nov. 30—S. Andrew Ap. Octave of S. Clement. Masses 7, 7.30, 8, 9.30 (For the clergy).

Collect:—O God, who makest us to rejoice in the yearly solemnity of blessed Clement, Thy martyr and bishop, favorably grant that we who keep his festival may likewise imitate his fortitude in suffering, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Epistle: Phil. iii: 17—iv: 4.

The Holy Gospel: St. Matthew, xiv: 42-48.

Licensed for use in St. Clement's Church during the octave of the anniversary.

(Signed) O. W. WHITTAKER,
Bishop of Pennsylvania.

NOVENA—NOV. 14-23.

Memorial for the parish (to be said daily):

Ant.—I will pour water upon him that is thirsty, and floods upon the dry ground: I will pour my Spirit upon thy seed, and my blessing upon thine offspring.

V.—O Lord, look down from heaven.

R.—Behold, and visit this vine.

Let us pray.

Almighty and everlasting God, who does govern all things in heaven and earth, mercifully hear our supplications, and grant unto this parish all things that are needful for its spiritual welfare; schools in which to train the young in Thy faith and fear; ministers to labor in this portion of Thy vineyard; a Church restored to the beauty of holiness. Strengthen and confirm the faithful; visit and relieve the sick; turn and soften the wicked; rouse the careless; recover the fallen; restore the penitent; remove all hindrances to the advancement of Thy truth; bring all to be of one heart and one mind within the fold of Thy Holy Church; to the honor and glory of Thy Holy Name; through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

THE FIRST EPISTLE OF CLEMENT.

The first Epistle of S. Clement, Bishop of Rome, has been preserved in a single manuscript only. Though very frequently referred to by ancient Christian writers, it remained unknown to the scholars of Western Europe, until happily discovered in the Alexandrian manuscript. This manuscript of the Sacred Scriptures was presented in 1628 by Cyril, Patriarch of Constantinople to Charles I, and is now in the British Museum. The epistle was held in very great esteem by the early Church. The account given of it by Eusebius is as count given of it by Eusebius is as Epistle of Clement, great and admirable, which he wrote in the name of the Church of Rome to the Church at Corinth, sedition having then arisen in the latter church. We are aware that this epistle has been publicly read in very many churches both in old times and also in our own day." The epistle thus appears to have been read in numerous churches as being almost on a level with the canonical writings. And its place in the Alexandrian manuscript, immediately after the inspired books, is in harmony with the position thus assigned it by the primitive church.

Chapter I: The Salutaion. Praise of the Corinthians before the breaking forth of Schism among them.

The Church of God which sojourns at Rome to the Church of God, sojourning at Corinth, to them that are called and sanctified by the will of God, through our Lord Jesus Christ: Grace unto you and peace, from Almighty God through Jesus Christ be multiplied.

Owing, dear brethren to the sudden and successive calamitous events, which have happened to ourselves, we feel that we have been somewhat tardy in turning our attention to the points respecting which you consulted us; and especially to that shameful and detestable sedition, utterly abhorrent to the elect of God, which a few rash and self-confident persons have kindled to such a pitch of frenzy that your venerable and illustrious name, worthy to be universally loved, has suffered grievous injury. For whoever dwelt even for a short time among you, and did not find your faith to be as fruitful of virtue as it was firmly established?

Who did not admire the sobriety and moderation of your godliness in Christ? Who did not proclaim the magnificence of your habitual hospitality? And who did not rejoice over your perfect and well-grounded knowledge? For ye did all things without respect of persons, and walked in the commandments of God, being obedient to those who had the rule over you, and giving fitting honor to the presbyters among you. Ye enjoined young men to be of a sober and serious mind; ye instructed your wives to do all things with a blameless, becoming and pure conscience, loving their husbands as in duty bound, and ye taught them that living in the rule of obedience, they should manage their household affairs becomingly and in every respect marked by discretion.

Chapter III: The sad state of the Corinthian Church after sedition arose in it from envy and emulation.

Every kind of honor and happiness was bestowed upon you and there was fulfilled that which is written, "My beloved did eat and drink, and was enlarged and became fat and kicked." Hence flowed emulation and envy, strife and sedition, persecution and disorder, war and captivity. So the worthless rose up against the honored, those of no reputation against such as were renowned, the foolish against the wise, the young against those advanced in years. For this reason righteousness and peace are now far departed from you, inasmuch as every one abandons the fear of God, and is become blind in his faith, neither walks in the ordinances of his appointment, nor acts a part becoming a Christian, but walks after his own wicked lusts, resuming the practice of an unrighteous and ungodly envy, by which death itself entered into the world.

Chapter IV: Many evils have already flowed from this source in ancient times.

For thus it is written: "And it came to pass after certain days, that Cain brought of the fruits of the earth for a sacrifice unto God; and Abel also brought of the first things of his sheep and of the fat thereof. And God had respect unto Abel and to his offerings, but Cain and his sacrifices He did not regard. . . . And it came to pass, while they were in the field that Cain rose up against Abel, his brother, and slew him." Ye see, brethren, how envy and jealousy led to the murder of a brother. . . . On account of envy Aaron and Miriam had to make their abode without the camp. Through envy David underwent the hatred not only of foreigners, but was also persecuted by Saul, King of Israel.

Chapter V: No less evils have arisen from the same source in the most recent times.

But not to dwell upon ancient examples, let us come to the most recent spiritual heroes. Let us take the noble examples furnished in our own generation. Through envy and jealousy the greatest and most righteous pillars of the Church have been persecuted and put to death. Let us set before our eyes the illustrious apostles. Peter, through unrighteous envy, endured not one or two, but numerous labors; and when he had at length suffered martyrdom, departed to the place of glory due to him. Owing to envy, Paul also obtained the reward of patient endurance, after being seven times thrown into captivity, compelled to flee, and stoned. After preaching both in the east and west, he gained the illustrious reputation due to his faith, having preached righteousness to the whole world, and come to the extreme limit of the west, and suffered martyrdom under the prefects. Thus he was removed from the world and went into the holy place, having proved himself a striking example of patience.

Chapter VII: An exhortation to repentance.

These things, beloved, we write unto you, not merely to admonish you of your duty, but also to remind ourselves. For we are struggling in the same arena, and the same conflict is assigned to both of us. Wherefore let us give up vain and fruitless cares, and approach to the glorious and venerable rule of our holy calling. Let us attend to what is good, acceptable and pleasing in the sight of Him who formed us. Let us steadfastly look to the Blood of Christ, and see how precious that Blood is to God, which, having been shed for our salvation, has set the grace of repentance before the whole world. Let us turn to every age that has passed, and learn that from generation to generation, the Lord has granted a place of repentance to all such as would be converted unto Him. Noah preached repentance and as many as listened to him were saved. Jonah proclaimed destruction to the Ninevites, but they, repenting of their sins, propitiated God by prayer and obtained salvation, although they were aliens to the covenant of God. The ministers of the grace of God have by the Holy Spirit spoken of repentance, and the Lord of all things has Himself declared with an oath regarding it, "As I live, saith the Lord, I desire not the death of a sinner, but his repentance;" adding moreover this gracious declaration, "Repent, O house of Israel, of your iniquity. Say to the children of my people, Though your sins reach from earth to heaven, and though they be redder than scarlet, and blacker than sackcloth, yet if ye turn to Me with your whole heart and say Father! I will listen to you as a holy people." . . . Desiring, therefore, that all His beloved should be partakers of repentance, He has, by His almighty will, established these declarations.

Chapter IX: Examples of the Saints.

Wherefore, let us yield obedience to His excellent and glorious will; and imploring His mercy and loving kindness, while we forsake all fruitless labors and strife and envy, which leads to His compassions. Let us contemplate those who have ministered to His excellent glory. . . .

PARISH NOTES.

The clergy are grateful for many kindnesses received during the patronal feast.

It has been decided to postpone the parish tea until the completion of the new building.

During the last month there have been most generous gifts of flowers, both for the high altar and the crypt chapel.

Those who make their communions at the midnight mass on Christmas are asked to keep a fast of devotion for the six hours immediately preceding.

A Bible class is now held for women on Friday evenings at 8 o'clock in the Mission House of the All Saints' Sisters. It was begun at the request of the Guild of the Holy Cross, but the instructions are open to women who might find them helpful.

On the morning of December 16 Bishop Van Buren, of Porto Rico, is expected to preach, and on the same day in the evening the Bishop of Delaware will preach before the Church Association in the interests of labor. His subject will be "Christ's Attitude Toward Social Problems."

On November 16 a Solemn Mass of Requiem was sung for the repose of the soul of George Herbert Moffett, priest. In the enforced absence of the rector, the celebrant was the Rev. C. C. Quin, Father Ward being deacon, and Father Schneeweiss sub-deacon. The offering for the Memorial Altar amounted to $290.67.

On Sunday evening, November 18, Bishop Osborne, coadjutor of the Diocese of Springfield, Ill., preached at St. Clement's. He gave a most interesting account of his work in the Middle West, where the Church is weak and struggling, and the distances between the mission stations are very great. In the whole of his great diocese there are but thirty-one clergy. Anyone desiring to make a special offering to the mission field could not do better than to help the diocese of Springfield, and the rector will gladly forward any contributions that may be sent him for this purpose.

SAINT CLEMENT'S TIDE.

The patronal feast of St. Clement's Parish was observed with the customary devotion, on St. Clement's day, and the Sunday following.

On Friday, November 23, a good number of communions were made, and at 11 o'clock Gounod's Saint Cecelia Mass was sung to an orchestral accompaniment. Too much praise cannot be accorded Mr. Sears for the beautiful rendition of the service. The preacher for the occasion was the Rev. E. M. Jefferys, of St. Peter's Church, who delivered a remarkably powerful and inspiring sermon, summoning all to loyalty and chivalric devotion the to person of our Blessed Lord.

On Sunday morning Schubert's Mass in G was rendered by the choir and the Very Rev. Dean Vernon, of St. Luke's Cathedral, Portland, Me., was the preacher. He held before us with prophetic power the picture of the future which is in store for the American Catholic Church.

A large number joined in the procession of the Sodality in the evening, and Dr. Christian, of the Church of St. Mary the Virgin, New York city, touched all hearts by his searching words, on the right use of our Catholic privileges.

The parish building, although only partially completed, was opened for the feast, and thus the procession on Sunday evening was made possible.

It is to be hoped that the inspiration and blessing that God has bestowed upon us during the festival may have its lasting effect upon the life of St. Clement's Parish.

PARISH COMMUNION.

As there has been a misapprehension on the part of some, as to the decrease in the number of communions, we reprint the record of communions since 1899.

Year.	No. of com.	Decrease.
1899	8094	...
1900	8705	*611
1901	9606	*901
1902	9219	387
1903	8669	550
1904	8026	643
1905	7710	310
1906	7400	310

*Increase.

This shows a steady decrease since 1901. The number is reckoned from St. Clement's Day of each year. During the last year one daily communion has ceased to be recorded, which accounts in some measure, for the decrease.

THE MEN'S THANK OFFERING.

To commemorate the 300th anniversary of the first English celebration of the Holy Communion on American soil, the men of the Episcopal Church will present to the next general convention of the Church, to be held in Richmond, Va., in 1907, a "Missionary Thank Offering." This is the first time that the men as such will make a formal offering for missionary purposes.

The Bishop Coadjutor of New York is chairman of the Central Committee having in charge the work. Every diocese thus far, save one, is represented by a district committee, and more than a majority of the parishes are represented by parochial committees. The size of the offering is being subordinated to the desire to have every man in every parish in every diocese directly represented.

A further object of the movement, which has come to be known popularly as the "M. T. O. Movement," is the educational side. The laymen are being instructed not only in the history of the Church, but in the extent and character of its work, especially along missionary lines.

Dean Hodges, of the Cambridge Theological Seminary, has written, as a contribution to the movement, an interesting book, "Three Hundred Years of the Episcopal Church in America," giving in concise form a statement of what the Church has accomplished, and that it has contributed to the civilization of our land.

Another incident of the movement will be the compiling of a great "muster roll of the laymen" to be utilized in keeping them in touch with the work of the Church. A series of mass meetings are to be held in various parts of the country, the first of which was held in Philadelphia, where 3000 men and a surpliced choir of 500 men and boys filled the great Academy of Music to overflowing. The whole movement is revivifying the work of the laymen and bringing them into closer touch with the many lines of churchly activity, and at the same time awakening them to a realizing sense of the Church's great responsibilities and opportunities here and abroad.

St. Clement's is represented at the Diocesan Committee and it has a Parochial Committee, consisting of the Rector, Caleb F. Wright, William Weaver Lukens, G. Lewis Mayer and Clinton Rogers Woodruff, chairman.

An informal meeting to stimulate interest in the movement in this parish will be held in the Clergy House on the evening of December 5.

CHRISTIAN SOCIAL UNION.

The Executive Committee of the Christian Social Union in this city has made arrangements for the following sermons to be delivered during the coming winter and spring:

"The Relation of Labor to the Church," the Bishop Coadjutor of Pennsylvania, the Right Rev. Alexander Mackay-Smith, D. D., Church of the Holy Trinity, November 11, 1906, at 11 A. M.

"Church's Attitude Toward Social Problems," the Bishop of Delaware, the Right Rev. Leighton Coleman, D. D., St. Clement's Church, December 16, 1906, at 8 P. M.

"What Should be the Ultimate Authority in Social Practice?" Rev. Nathaniel S. Thomas, Church of the Holy Apostles, at Church of the Savior, January 13, 1907, at 8 P. M.

"The Social Teachings of the Lord's Prayer," Rev. W. M. Groton, S. T. D., Dean of Philadelphia Divinity School, Church of the Holy Apostles, February 10, 1907, at 8 P. M.

"The Kingdom of God and Democracy," Rev. Charles S. Hutchinson, of St. Clement's Church, Church of St. Simeon's, March 10, 1907, at 8 P. M.

The Rev. George Woolsey Hodge will also preach at St. Luke's Church, Germantown, and Dean Groton, at St. Peter's Church, Germantown, the topics and dates to be announced later.

On Monday evening, January 25, 1907, Dean Hodges, of the Cambridge Theological School, will address the Church Club on "The Christian Employer, Involving the Church's Relation to the Problem of Employer and Employe."

Other meetings and other forms of useful activity to promote the objects of this society are under consideration.

ADVENT.

Who comes? Christ, the King of Eternal Glory.

He came as a little Child, and was held in the arms of Mary, His Mother, and lay in the manger in Bethlehem. He, the holy, just and merciful Saviour; a little child, and yet a king—the Prince of Peace. He comes again, to dwell in our hearts by faith, and again He will come at the last great Day. All of life, with its varied experiences, its trials, successes and failures, its joys and its sorrows, its temptations and discipline, is given us by God to prepare us for the second coming of the Incarnate Lord. God now offers us new opportunities. It is for us to use them; for "the night cometh when no man can work."

To whom does He come? To us, sinners, who need His grace. There are, each year, new advents of Christ, in the present world. The holy Sacraments of the Church are special means of preparing us for the coming of Christ and ways by which Christ comes to us. By the help of the Sacraments we are prepared for death, for judgment and for eternity, as well as for holier lives in the present time. The Lord comes to us in baptism to unite our lives to His life and take from us the guilt of sin, making us sharers of His glory. He comes in Confirmation to strengthen our souls by the gifts of the Holy Spirit and prepare us for conflict with evil. He comes in Absolution to cleanse us from our sins, that so we may offer Him purer, better lives and be more fit for His abiding presence. He comes in the Blessed Sacrament, hiding His glory as in Bethlehem, to reveal Himself to us, to nourish us and unite us more closely with God and prepare us for the world to come. He comes to raise us from the darkness of this world to the Light of God's Presence in heaven above. Daily, we should learn better how to say: "The Lord is my light and my salvation, whom then shall I fear? The Lord is the strength of my life, of whom then shall I be afraid?"

How shall I prepare for Christ's coming?

Prepare to meet Him, by sorrow for past neglects of grace, by a broken and contrite spirit, by new purpose and resolution. By careful self-examination see what hinders you from making a perfect offering of your life to God. Is it a cowardly yielding to the temptations of the world or sense, a return to former sins, a lack of patience and steadfastness in serving God; bad associations, evil habits or a willful seeking of the occasions of sin? "Behold thy King cometh unto thee."

REV. JAS. G. CAMERON.

A PRAYER FOR ADVENT.

V. Come, Thou and save us, O Lord God of Hosts.

R. Show the Light of Thy Countenance and we shall be whole.

O God, who hast sent Thine only-Begotten Son into the world that we may live in Him: stir up our wills, blot out our sins, purify our hearts and strengthen our lives, that Thy Son when He cometh may find in us a dwelling-place, and that by His grace at last we may enter into the joys of Life Eternal. Through Jesus Christ, our Lord. Amen.

ADVENT COUNSELS.

1. Attend the Sunday services faithfully, morning and evening.

2. Attend the special week-day services, and give more time to your daily prayers. Add to them an Advent prayer.

3. Prepare for your Christmas communion, seeking the benefit of Absolution and making a good confession, before receiving the holy Sacrament.

4. Read your Bible oftener, exercising yourself in works of charity and trying to make progress in your spiritual life.

5. Try to save something by self-denial for a Christmas offering.

BISHOP SCHERESCHEWSKY

The Right Rev. Samuel I. J. Schereschewsky, D. D., some time Missionary Bishop of China, died in Toyko, Japan, October 14. Bishop Schereschewsky was one of the most remarkable men in the long history of the Christian Church. Born in Poland of Jewish parents, about seventy-five years ago, he became a Christian through his study of the Old Testament. To escape threatened persecution, he came to this country, met the late Bishop Kerfoot, of Pittsburg, decided to study for the ministry, and was sent to the General Theological Seminary in New York. While there he offered for the China Mission, and in July, 1859, started from New York in a clipper ship, reaching Shanghai in December.

He showed marvelous facility in acquiring Chinese and within two years began the series of translations which have placed him in the first rank of those who have made the Scriptures available for people of other tongues. Within a few years he had translated into the Mandarin dialect the entire Bible and a large part of the Prayer Book.

In 1877 he returned to the United States and was consecrated third Bishop of China. Returning to that country he continued his literary work besides carrying the heavy burdens of the episcopate.

While on a visitation during the intense heat of the summer of 1881, the Bishop was stricken down with a disease that developed into almost complete paralysis. Unable to do his work he resigned his see, but could not content himself with idleness. He resolved to translate the entire Bible into the Wen-li, or classical written language of China. But what could a man smitten with paralysis do? Unable to use a pen he procured a typewrite only to find that he lacked muscular energy sufficient to move the keys.

After some months he was able to use the middle finger of his right hand, but sometimes even this failed, and he used a stick to press down the keys one by one. Thus he toiled through nine years, writing the Chinese words phonetically in Roman letters.

In 1895 he returned to the Far East and since 1896 has made his home in Tokyo. Here, with the aid of a Japanese and a Chinese secretary, he rewrote the Romanized typewritten pages into the Chinese characters. In 1903 the monumental work was completed and was published by the American Bible Society. Through all these years the Bishop was helpless. Whenever he left the house he was carried from his chair to a carriage, but in spite of all, he bent to his self-imposed task in the spirit of a hero.

China's spoken language is broken up into a multitude of dialects. The the man from Shanghai, and neither can understand the Cantonese. Classman from Pekin cannot understand ical Wen-li is the universally written language. So Bishop Schereschewsky's years of heroic labor turned the Scriptures into the written language of more than 300,000,000 people, or nearly one-quarter of the population of the world.

Samuel I. J. Schereschewsky—bishop, missionary, scholar, translator, hero! A man for whom the Church may well thank God. His life work must ever be precious and inspiring memories.

THE EPISTLE OF CLEMENT.

Chapter XIII: An exhortation and Humility.

Let us therefore, brethren, be of humble mind, laying aside all haughtiness, and pride, and foolishness, and angry feelings; and let us act according to that which is written (for the Holy Spirit saith, "Let not the wise man glory in his wisdom, neither let the mighty man glory in his might, neither let the rich man glory in his riches; but let him that glorieth glory in the Lord, in diligently seeking Him, and doing judgment and righteousness"), being especially mindful of the words of the Lord Jesus which He spake, teaching us meekness and long-suffering. For thus He spoke: "Be ye merciful that ye may obtain mercy; forgive, that it may be forgiven to you; as ye do, so shall it be done unto you; as ye judge so shall ye be judged; as ye are kind so shall kindness be shown to you; with what measure ye mete, with the same it shall be measured to you." By this precept and by these rules, let us establish ourselves, that we will walk with humility in obedience to His holy words. For the holy word saith: "On whom shall I look but on Him that is meek and peacable, and that trembleth at my words?"

PARISH NOTES.

A new carpet has been given for St. Katharine's altar by certain members of St. Vincent's Guild.

During Lent the Friday evening Bible class for women will be changed from Friday evening to Wednesday evening.

During the last few weeks the church windows have been thoroughly repaired and present a much better appearance.

The corridor of the parish building is now practically completed, and work has been commenced upon the church vestibule. As soon as the new doors are in place the corridor will be opened for use on Sundays.

Owing to the delay on the parish building the festivities usually held at Christmastide have been unavoidably postponed. It is hoped that when the new building is formally opened each Guild may have its part in the festival.

A new missal has been presented for use in the Crypt Chapel as a memorial to Rev. G. H. Moffett. It is beautifully bound in blue leather and contains the proper Collects, Epistles and Gospels for the Black Letter Holy Days and for special occasions.

Generous offerings are asked on January 20th for the missions of the church. Please place offerings in envelopes marked "foreign," "domestic" or "diocesan," as you may desire to contribute. Offerings are specially asked for the work of Bishop Osborne in the diocese of Springfield.

On Wednesday evening, the fifth of December, an informal smoker was held in the clergy house in the interest of the M. T. O. The speakers for the evening were Rev. Fr. Damuth, of Calvary Church, West Philadelphia; Mr. Norris Earle and Mr. Clinton Rogers Woodruff. In spite of the inclement weather about sixty of the men of the parish were present. A light refreshment was served, and the evening passed most pleasantly.

On December fifth a branch of the Woman's Auxiliary was inaugurated in the parish. The meetings are to be held at the Mission House, on Wednesday afternoon of each week, at 3 o'clock. The officers are as follows: President, Miss Lawson; secretary-treasurer, Miss Hutchinson; Foreign Committee, Mrs. Penrose; Indian Committee, Miss Ruff; Domestic Committee, Miss Hutchinson; Colored Committee, Mrs. Grubb; Diocesan Committee, Miss Klapp. In connection with the Auxiliary a mission study class will be conducted by Sister Frances Virginia, of All Saints'. All the women of the parish are urged to attend.

The church carpet, which after years of constant use had become very shabby and unsanitary, has been removed, and the floors have been stained to harmonize with the wainscoting of the church. We now need new cushions for the pews. The present cushions have been in the church for a long time and were not new when they were purchased. Estimates have been made by the Ostermoor Company for the refitting of the pews and choir stalls. The cost will be about thirteen hundred dollars. This does not include the kneeling pads. The generous donations of the parishioners are urgently requested to meet this need. The condition of the present cushions is a disgrace to the parish.

CHRISTMASTIDE.

Christmas, the feast of our Lord's Nativity, was most fittingly celebrated in St. Clement's. After the Solemn Litany on Sunday night, the Guild of St. Vincent, trimmed the choir screen and placed it in position and decorated the church. The Creche which has heretofore been placed in St. John's Chapel was put up this year at the end of the north aisle, and gives an added touch of beauty to the church.

First vespers of Christmas were sung on Monday evening, at 8 o'clock, by Father Quin, and there were 309 communions made at all the early masses. At the solemn high mass Father Quin was celebrant, and Fathers Ward and Schneeweiss deacon and sub-deacon. Gounod's Sacred Heart Mass was beautifully rendered by the choir.

The Christmas tree for the children was held in the church on Wednesday evening. The tree was placed in the midst of the choir, and decorated with candles only, which were lit during the singing of the first carol. The sight from the church was very beautiful and spoke to all of the Light of Lights, who was manifested in the flesh on Christmas day. The packages were not opened until the children left the church and the conduct of all was most seemly and discreet, and yet there was an underlying note of Christmas joy.

THE EPISTLE OF CLEMENT.

Chap. xxxvii.—Christ is our Leader, and we His soldiers.

Let us then, men and brethren, with all energy, act the part of soldiers, in accordance with His holy commandments. Let us consider those who serve under our generals, with what order, obedience and submissiveness, they perform the things that are commanded them. All are not prefects, nor commanders of a thousand, nor of a hundred, nor of fifty, nor the like, but each one in his own rank performs the things commanded by the king and the generals. The great cannot subsist without the small, nor the small without the great. There is a kind of mixture in all things and thence arises mutual advantage. Let us take our body for example. The head is nothing without the feet, and the feet are nothing without the head; yea, the very smallest members of our body are necessary and useful to the whole body. But all work harmoniously together, and are under one rule for the preservation of the whole body.

Chap.—xl.—Let us preserve in the church, the order appointed by God.

These things, therefore, being manifest to us, and since we look into the depths of the divine knowledge, it behooves us to do all things in their proper order, which the Lord has commanded us to perform at stated times. He has enjoined offerings to be presented and service to be performed, and that not carelessly or irregularly, but at the appointed times and hours. Where and by whom He desires these things to be done He Himself has fixed by His own supreme will, in order that all things being piously done according to His good pleasure may be acceptable unto Him. Those, therefore, who present their offerings at the appointed times are accepted and blessed. . . . For his own peculiar service is assigned to the high priest, and their own proper place is prescribed to the priests, and their own special ministrations devolve upon the Levites.

Chap. xlii.—The order of ministers in the Church.

The Apostles have preached the Gospel to us from the Lord Jesus Christ; Jesus Christ has done so from God. Christ, therefore, was sent forth by God and the Apostles by Christ. Both these appointments, then, were made in an orderly way, according to the Will of God. Having, therefore, received their orders, and being fully assured by the resurrection of Jesus Christ, and established in the Word of God, with full assurance of the Holy Ghost, they went forth proclaiming that the kingdom of God was at hand. And thus preaching through countries and cities, they appointed the first fruits of their labors, having first proved them by the Spirit, to be bishops and deacons of those who should afterwards believe.

Chap. xliv.—The ordinances of the Apostles, that there might be no contention respecting the priestly office.

Our Apostles also knew, through our Lord Jesus Christ, that there would be strife on account of the office of the episcopate. For this reason, therefore, in as much as they had obtained a perfect foreknowledge of this, they appointed those already mentioned, and afterwards gave instructions that when these should fall asleep others approved now should succeed them in the ministry. We are of opinion, therefore, that those appointed by them, or afterwards by other eminent men, with the consent of the whole church, and who have blamelessly served the flock of Christ in a humble, peaceable and disinterested spirit, and have for a long time possessed the good opinion of all, cannot be justly dismissed from the ministry. . . . But we see that ye have removed some men of excellent behavior from the ministry which they fulfilled blamelessly and with honor.

Chap. xlviii.—Let us return to the practice of brotherly love.

Let us, therefore, with all haste, put an end to this state of things and let us fall down before the Lord and beseech Him with tears, that He would mercifully be reconciled to us and restore to us our former seemly and holy practice of brotherly love. For such conduct is the gate of righteousness, which is set open for the attainment of life, as it is written, "Open to me the gates of righteousness; I will go in by them, and will praise the Lord; this is the gate of the Lord; the righteous shall enter in by it."

Although, therefore, many gates have been set open, yet this gate of righteousness is that gate in Christ by which blessed are all they that have entered in and have directed their way in holiness and righteousness, doing all things without disorder.

Chap. xlix.—The praise of Love.

Let him who has love in Christ keep the commandments of Christ. Who can describe the blessed bond of the love of God? What man is able to tell the excellence of its beauty as it ought to be told. The height to which love exalts is misspeakable. Love unites us to God. Love covers a multitude of sins. Love heareth all things, is long-suffering in all things. There is nothing base, nothing arrogant in love. Love admits of no schisms; love gives rise to no seditions; love does all things in harmony. By love have all the elect of God been made perfect, without love nothing is well pleasing to God. In love has the Lord taken us to Himself. On account of the love He bore us Jesus Christ, our Lord, gave His blood for us, by the will of God; His flesh for our flesh, and His soul for our soul.

Chap. lviii.—Blessings sought for all who call upon God.

May God, who seeth all things, and who is the Ruler of all spirits and the Lord of all flesh—who chose our Lord Jesus Christ and us through Him to be a peculiar people—grant to every soul that calleth upon His glorious and holy Name, faith, fear, peace, patience, long-suffering, self-control, purity and sobriety, to the well pleasing of His Name, through our High Priest and Protector, Jesus Christ, by whom be to Him glory and majesty, and power and honor, both now and evermore. Amen.

Chap. lix.—The Corinthians are exhorted speedily to send back word that peace has been restored. The Benediction.

Send back speedily to us in peace, and with joy, these messengers to you: Claudius Ephebers, and Valerius Bito, with Fortunatis; that they may the sooner announce to us the peace and harmony we so earnestly desire and long for among you, and that we may the more quickly rejoice over the good order re-established among you. The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with you, and with all everywhere that are the called of God through Him, by whom be to Him glory, honor, power, majesty and eternal dominion from everlasting to everlasting and everlasting. Amen.

ST. POLYCARP.

January 26.

In the year 167 a fierce persecution of the Christians broke out in Smyrna. The aged Bishop Polycarp, who had been the disciple and a friend of the evangelist, St. John, was advised to withdraw from the storm, and be concealed himself for some time at a short distance from the city. But his retreat was betrayed by a boy, who was threatened with the rack, unless he discovered him. When Polycarp heard that his pursuers were at the door he refused to make his escape, saying "God's will be done," and, meeting them, he begged to be left alone for a little time, which he spent in prayer. The aged Saint was brought into Smyrna early on Holy Saturday, and, as he entered the city, a voice came from heaven, and was heard by many: "Polycarp, be strong!" He was led directly to the Tribunal of the Proconsul, who exhorted him to respect his own age, to swear by the genius of the Emperor, and to blaspheme Christ. Polycarp replied: "I have served him the four-score and six years, and He never did me any harm, but much good. How can I then blaspheme my King and my Saviour? Instead of an oath by the genius of Caesar, hear my free confession. I am a Christian; but if you desire to learn the Christian religion, appoint a time and hear me."

When the Proconsul threatened him with fire Polycarp told him that the fire of this world would burn but for a short time, while the fire prepared for the wicked lasteth forever. He added: "Why do you delay? Bring against me what you please."

Whilst he said this his countenance shone with a certain heavenly grace, insomuch that the Proconsul was struck with admiration. However, he ordered a proclamation to be made three times: "Polycarp has confessed himself a Christian," whereupon the whole multitude of Jews and Gentiles gave a great shout, and unanimously demanded that he should be burned alive. Their request was no sooner granted than every one ran, with all speed, to fetch wood. The Jews were particularly active and busy on this occasion. The pile being prepared, Polycarp put off his garments, untied his girdle and began to take off his shoes. The executioners would have attached him to the stake, but he said to them: "Suffer me to be as I am. He who gives me grace to endure this fire will enable me to stand still without that precaution." The fire was lighted, but the flames formed themselves into an arch around the body of the martyr, so they stabbed him to the heart, and his dead body was burned. "Then," say the writers of his acts, "we took up the bones more precious than the richest jewels or gold, and deposited them in a fitting place.

Thus was Polycarp faithful unto death, so as to receive a Crown of life. His tomb is still honored, near Smyrna, which continues to remain a Christian city, in the midst of Mohammedanism. It possesses many churches, though that which is believed to have been the first has become a Mosque; but the long line of Bishops and the Christian worship has never ceased in Smyrna since St. Polycarp gained his crown.

—Rev. S. Baring Gould's Lives.

THE BEATIFIC VISION.

"Beatific Vision" is composed of three Latin words—beatus, happy; facio, I make, and visio, a sight, all of which taken together make up and mean a happy-making sight. Therefore, in its very etymology, Beatific Vision means a sight which contains in itself the power of banishing all pain, all sorrow, from the beholder, and of infusing in their stead, joy and happiness.

Theologians tell us that the Beatific Vision, considered as a perfect and permanent state, consists of three acts, which are so many elements essential to its integrity and perfection. These are, first, the sight or vision of God; second, the love of God, and, third, the enjoyment of God. These three acts, though really distinct from each other, are not separable, for, if even one of them be excluded, the Beatific Vision no longer exists in its integrity. We will now say a few words on each of these constituents of heavenly bliss.

1. First, the sight or vision of God means that the intellect, which is the noblest faculty of the soul, is suddenly elevated by the light of glory and enabled to see God as He is, by a clear and unclouded perception of His Divine essence. It is, therefore, a vision in which the soul sees God face to face; not indeed with the eyes of the body, but with the intellect. For God is a Spirit, and cannot be seen with material eyes. And, if our bodily eyes were necessary for that vision, we could not see God until the day of judgment, for it is only then that our eyes will be restored to us. Hence it is the soul that sees God; but, then, she sees Him more clearly and perfectly than she can now see anything with her material eyes.

2. The second element of the Beatific Vision is an act of perfect and inexpressible love. It is the sight or knowledge of God as He is that produces this love; because it is impossible for the soul to see God in His Divine beauty, goodness and unspeakable love for her without loving Him with all the power of her being. It were easier to go near an immense fire and not feel the heat than to see God in His very essence, and yet not be inflamed with Divine Love. It is, therefore, a necessary act; that is, one which the Blessed could not possibly withhold as we now can do in this world. For, with our imperfect vision of God, as He is reflected from the mirror of creation, we can, and unfortunately do, withhold our love from Him—even when the light of faith is superadded to the knowledge we may have of Him from the teachings of nature. Not so in heaven. There the Blessed see God as He is; and, therefore, they love Him spontaneously, intensely and supremely.

3. The third element of the Beatific Vision is an act of excessive joy, which proceeds spontaneously from both the vision and the love of God. It is an act by which the soul rejoices in the possession of God, who is the Supreme Good.

He is her own God, her own possession and in the enjoyment of Him her cravings for happiness are completely gratified. Evidently, then, the Beatific Vision necessarily includes the possession of God, for without it this last act could have no existence, and the happiness of the Blessed would not be complete, could we suppose it to have existence at all. A moment's reflection will make this as evident as the light of day. A beggar, for instance, gazes upon a magnificent palace, filled with untold wealth, and all that can gratify the sense. Does the mere sight of it make him happy? It certainly does not, because it is not and never can be his. He may admire its grand architecture and exquisite workmanship, and thus receive some trifling pleasure, but as he can never call that palace nor its wealth his own, the mere gazing upon, and even loving its beauty, can never render him happy. For this the possession of it is essential. Again, the starving beggar gazes upon the rich man's table, loaded with every imaginable luxury. Does that mere sight relieve the pangs of hunger? It certainly does not. It rather adds to his wretchedness by intensifying his hunger without satisfying its cravings. Even so would it be in heaven, could we suppose a soul admitted there and allowed to gaze upon the beauty of God while she cannot possess or enjoy Him. Such a sight would be no Beatific Vision for her. The possession of God is, therefore, absolutely necessary in order that the soul may enjoy Him, and rest in Him as her last end. Hence the act of seeing God is also the act by which the Blessed possess God, and enter into the joy of their Lord.

Speaking of the three acts which constitute the Beatific Vision, the great theologian, Lessius, says: In these three acts resides God's chiefest glory which He Himself intended in all His works, and so, likewise, in these acts reside the highest good and formal beatitude of men and angels. By these acts the Blessed Spirits are vastly elevated above themselves, and, in their union with God, become God-like by a most lofty and supereminent similitude with God, so that the mind can conceive no greater.

In heaven the occupation of the Saints will be to contemplate the infinite beauty of God, to love His infinite goodness, to enjoy His infinite sweetness, to be filled to overflowing with the torrent of His pleasures, and to exult with an unspeakable delight in His infinite glory, and in all the good things which He and they possess. Hence come perpetual praise, and benedictions, and thanksgivings, and thus the Blessed, having reached the consummation of all their desires and knowing not what more to crave rest in God as their last end.—Selected.

PARISH NOTES.

Communions for December, 1260.

Communions Jan. 1st, 13th, 259.

The Rev. Father Powell, of the Society of St. John the Evangelist, is expected to preach on Good Friday.

The chairs used at the "smoker" recently held in the clergy house, were very generously lent to us by Mr. J. J. Earley.

Work has been commenced on the church vestibule, and it is hoped that the parish building will be ready for occupancy by Easter.

Candles will be blessed as usual on the Feast of the Purification. Such persons as desire can leave candles of their own with name written on the package.

Ashes, after the ancient custom, will be blessed before the 6.30 mass on Ash Wednesday, and may be received by those who are so minded before each succeeding mass.

Two new rugs have been purchased for the Sanctuary to replace those in front of the sedilia, which are very much worn. New carpet has also been provided for the Crypt and the Sacristy.

It is recommended that during the present prosecution of the French Church, the members of the congregation add to their daily intercessions a special petition for the Catholic Church in France. The Collects for the Sixteenth and Twenty-second Sundays after Trinity.

We are printing in successive numbers of the Magazine, a list of the male communicants of the parish with their addresses. We should be very glad for any corrections that may be necessary either in name or address. It is of the utmost importance that we should have a correct list.

The Parish Retreat will be held as usual on Ash Wednesday, but owing to the condition of the parish building it will not be possible to offer refreshments to those who may come. In this connection it may be as well to remind the congregation that Ash Wednesday should be kept as a strict fast.

The daily masses are very poorly attended. Will we not, during the Lenten season, make an effort to repair in some measure our neglect of our Blessed Lord in the Sacrament of the Altar. Every communicant of St. Clement's should make it a Lenten rule, to assist at one early mass, at least, on weekdays in Lent.

Our hymnal is imported from England, and is more costly than the American Church hymnal, and its evident superiority makes the additional cost quite worth while. We need two hundred and eighty dollars to pay for the new books. Will not the members of the congregation make contributions for this object?

In the service of the church, the congregation should stand and sit with the Choir. The prevailing custom of remaining seated until the first note of the canticle or hymn is sung, and then rising, is most unseemly. The first words are often wholly lost in the disturbance that is made by a large number of people rising to their feet simultaneously.

The list of Lenten services will be ready by Quinquagesima. During Lent there will be an additional Mass daily at 6.30 A. M., Sundays excepted. The daily afternoon addresses will be discontinued this year, but the Penitential office will be said after Evensong. Addresses will be given at 10 A. M. on Tuesdays and Thursdays, an instruction on Wednesdays at 5.15 P. M., and a sermon followed by the Stations of the Cross on Friday evenings.

The purchase of new hymnals and prayer books for the Church, having become a necessity, a fresh supply has been ordered. This involves considerable expense, as the books must be stamped with the name of the Church in order to prevent unscrupulous persons from carrying them away. It is surprising how prevalent this form of stealing is, among occasional churchgoers. It will be remembered that some weeks ago mention was made in the Magazine of certain devotional books which have been stolen from the Crypt Chapel, and which have not been returned at the present writing.

The parishioners are reminded that those who attend the service of the Stations of the Cross during Lent, are expected to join in the procession and must not remain in their pews. The only valid excuses for not following our Lord in the Way of Sorrows, are extreme age or physical disability. There are very few of St. Clement's people who can be placed in either of these classes. It is an act of pure slothfulness to remain in one's pew turning about as if one were on a pivot while more devout souls proceed around the church, and this form of taking part in the Stations cannot be of great benefit to any, as it empties the service of the meaning.

ELIZABETH PIERCE FRYER.

On the seventh day of January, after long weeks of illness, Mrs. Elizabeth P. Fryer entered into rest. Mrs. Fryer was for many years a devoted member of St. Clement's parish. Of a singularly sweet and sympathetic nature she won the affection of all with whom she came in contact. With a wonderful insight with things spiritual, she bore her suffering with the patience and fortitude of one who had been "with Jesus," and her quiet falling asleep was the fitting consummation of a life of deep interior peace. Grant unto her, O Lord, eternal rest, and let bright perpetual shine upon her. Amen.

SAINT MARY'S GUILD.

St. Mary's Guild gathered before St. Katharine's Altar on Monday evening in the Octave of the Epiphany, to sing the Office of the Guild, and then adjourned to the Mission House to enjoy the supper and entertainment which had been provided there.

The tables prepared for supper made a pretty sight, and when supper was over, each member of the Guild was invited to "pull out a plum" from little Jack Horner's Christmas Pie. And how good these "plums" were, could be seen by the pleased faces of those who had "put in their thumbs" in search of them!

On a small Christmas tree at the other end of the room were stars of red and gold, containing names of saints and virtues. With a wand each one pointed out the stars they would have, and so learned the name of the saint and virtue which would be theirs during the coming year.

Mrs. Davis, once again, as on former occasions, delighted the Guild with several bright and humorous readings.

Only relentless time brought to an end a very happy evening, whose memory will long be treasured up by the members of St. Mary's Guild.

THE MOTHERS' MEETING—CHRISTMAS, 1906.

To many of the mothers it was quite a surprise when on going to the Mission House after the usual service on Thursday, January 3d, they found a Christmas treat awaiting them.

The unavoidable disappointment of not having the Christmas supper was almost forgotten in the pleasant evening which followed at the Mission House.

After all had partaken of ice cream and cake, a musical programme was enjoyed. The Misses Nowell very kindly and graciously sang a number of songs and duets, which were greatly appreciated, and Mrs. Hackenberger, who has become an especial favorite with the mothers, very kindly gave several beautiful solos on the saxophone. Her playing of this instrument, with its rich contralto tones, is always full of feeling, and reaches the hearts of all who listen.

The time for departure came all too soon, but they were all happy faces which said good-night to the Sisters.

S. KATHARINE'S GUILD.

On the evening of the Feast of the Circumcision, S. Katharine's Guild held its Christmas party. The Guild Office was sung in Church at eight o'clock, after which the members met in the Mission House. The Sisters and Associates of the Guild had prepared a delicious supper and the cake which always excites much interest, for it contained the usual ring, thimble, and dime. Only a very few of the members were absent, and that on account of sickness. After supper the cake was cut, and Ethel Haskins was the fortunate one to find the ring; Nellie Finney found the dime, and Jessie Forrester the thimble.

The Christmas tree was in bloom with red buds containing a saint and white containing a virtue. These were plucked by members, the one lucky enough to draw St. Katharine getting the prize. Then followed a game of guessing the names of prepared liquids and powders by smelling and tasting, a prize to be given for the one making the best guesses.

The evening was so jolly that it seemed very short, although the Sister Superior was most indulgent in granting a longer extension of time.

ST. NICHOLAS GUILD.

St. Nicholas Guild met Saturday afternoon, December twenty-ninth, for their Christmas party. The Guild is now meeting in a room at Twentieth and Carlton streets, and it was impossible to have the usual Christmas decorations. But all the boys seemed to enjoy themselves just as thoroughly as ever and everybody was very happy and jolly. After the boys had received their presents, they sat down at a long table, it was rather crowded but everybody was all the merrier for it, to eat the refreshments. This made the end of the festivities and everybody went home happy and contented.

THE GUILD OF THE HOLY CHILD.

The Guild of the Holy Child had its usual Christmas festivity at the Mission House, Saturday, December twenty-ninth, at half past three in the afternoon. Before the children arrived the tables were beautifully decorated by the Associates. They were in the form of the letter T and on each was a miniature Christmas tree, and at one end a huge cake, while at each plate there was, besides many goods things to eat, a little red Christmas candle burning. The children marched to their places and then sang a carol. Grace was said and all sat down. Much anxiety was caused by the fact that the cake had in it, a ring, a dime and a thimble. But after each had been found, everyone was able to pay more strict attention to the good things set before them. Mysterious papers were then given out, containing a part of a rhyme from Mother Goose, the presents had the corresponding part of the stanza and were given out not by the calling of the name but by the reading of the verse. A great deal of merriment was caused by this novel method. Each child received then its saint and virtue for the year. Then after singing a carol all went home with the joy of a very happy party in their hearts.

F. Ward was a most welcome guest of the Guild at its party.

The Silver Crucifix usually awarded at this time was given to Margaret Welch in acknowledgement of her truly remarkable record of attendance at Mass, Guild and Catechism.

LENT.

The object of Lent is spiritual growth. If we are to make a good Lent, if our Easter Communion is to be a real resurrection unto newness of life, we must keep this object of Lent always before us. Many souls have come to their Easter Communions, having fearfully misused Lent because they have had some other object, the keeping of a rule for the rule's sake, or worse, even trying to see how much they could "do," being in a state of feverish, unspiritual excitement, rushing off to church, making Evensong a sort of fetish, and neglecting some plain duty at home, losing their tempers twenty times a day, and only too, often forgetful of a mortal sin unconfessed, blackening their souls, destroying their spiritual life and leaving them unprepared for eternity. Therefore it behooves us to have constantly in sight the fact that Almighty God is giving us another Lent for our spiritual growth. And the way we are to grow spiritually is to strive earnestly towards some one virtue we need to acquire; and that one will be the virtue opposite to our besetting sin. Let us examine ourselves carefully as to this sin; it is apt to be the one we most often in our inmost thoughts accuse others of committing, and having found that sin to bend all our energies in this Lent the gaining of the necessary virtue. If, for example, our besetting sin is pride, let us strive earnestly for the virtue of humanity, and be content to strive in that one direction all through Lent. It is very easy indeed to ruin what would otherwise be a very well kept Lent by seeking growth in too many ways at once.

The first point then in keeping Lent is to concentrate our efforts towards growth where we each of us most fearfully need it.

Next let each one who would use this coming Lent for the Glory of God and the Salvation of his own soul, having always in mind the virtue he would gain, write out a sensible definite rule, which he can keep. It is far better to make a rule to do one definite act during Lent, simple as may be, and keep it, than to make out a most elaborate rule that is impossible to keep, or that in all probability will be broken. The rule must be definite that you may know whether you are keeping it or not. For example, to make a rule you will go to mass often during the week is a poor rule, for it might mean twice or seven times. A better rule would be to promise to go to mass three times a week, and then go oftener if possible; but to let nothing interfere with the absolute rule of three times a week.

Then the rule must be written out and kept safe. If this is not done, some day when you are tempted to break your rule, you may perhaps salve your conscience by saying I did not promise to do that every day, and so take back the gift you have offered to Almighty God. But if the rule is written out in black and white, the one way you can quiet your conscience is by keeping it, the second point in the observance of Lent then is a sensible, definite, written rule.

When Lent is over keep some one thing that you have added to your devotional life as a matter of daily habit throughout the year. It is a sad thing that many people think by keeping Lent well, they may be excused from further trouble, as it were, during the year.

If a monthly communion has been the habit and the Blessed Sacrament is received more often during Lent, don't go back after Easter to the old rule, but let there be some real, however slight, advance in the number of communions during the year. The third rule in the observance of Lent then is to keep the standard of the rest of the year higher in some real way than it had been before Lent.

And lastly, if the sin of pride has kept you up to this time from accepting God's mercy and securing forgiveness of Him through the Sacrament of Penance, God's ordained way, do not let another Easter pass without humbling yourself before God and making your confession.

SOME SUGGESTIONS FOR MAKING A LENTEN RULE.

1. Strive for greater reality in whatever you do.
2. Let the centre of your rule be Holy Communion.
3. Keep in view the three great duties:
   A. Prayer—Private;
      Public; Mass, Evensong, Stations of the Cross.
      For Others; The Friday Noon Intercessions.
   B. Tasting.
      The church directs a flesh fast on Wednesdays and Fridays and the Ember days during Lent. Flesh is to be eaten only once a day on the other days. Ash Wednesday and Good Friday are strict fasts from twelve midnight till six in the evening.
   C. Almsgiving. Prepare daily for your Easter offering.

THE PASSING OF CONFUCIUS

Kwang Su, the Emperor of China, by an imperial edict published in Pekin on December 31, 1906, raised the rank of Confucius to the highest degree—equal to Heaven and Earth—a rank so high that in future no one but the Emperor himself will be permitted to worship him.

The reason given for this action is, that the Christian students, who are fast becoming the leaders in every progressive movement are not willing to participate in the idolatrous ceremonies each month in the newly-opened government schools. For centuries, worship of the tablet of Confucius at regular periods has been required, yet latterly for all practical purposes it has become a custom more honored in the breach than in the observance. About two years ago a group of officials, realizing that Confucianism as a force in the life of the people was dead, made a vigorous effort to revive it. At their request an order was given by the Throne, compelling all students to worship the Sage's tablet, or else to leave the schools. From the first it was felt to be an artificial movement, and the worship soon became merely a hollow show and ceremony. This development the Emperor has seen, and in true Chinese fashion, instead of admitting his error and revoking the order, he has changed his tactics, and now forbids the worship of Confucius by those whom he commanded to worship him two years ago. This he does by exalting Confucius to a sphere equal to the highest known Powers; above the reach of all but himself, beyond the worship of those who have no desire to worship him even if they could! If Confucianism is to be a dead letter, he argues, it would be well to anticipate popular action and make it such by Imperial decree—and that while appearing to exalt it—and so save his position in the matter by indirectly sanctioning that which he cannot prevent.

This action is a presage, which the Chinese will quickly recognize, of the passing of Confucianism as a religious factor in the nation. Confucianism is largely responsible for the backward view which has prevailed hitherto in China. It is, too, chiefly responsible for the degradation of women and the low estimate of girls.

The edict is convincing testimony to the ever-increasing influence of Chinese Christians. The past decades of Christian education and training have produced thousands of men and women of such intelligence and character, that the people of the country are greatly impressed and in many cases, desire to be like the Christians. Among the Chinese who have become followers of Christ, is no less a person, than a direct lineal descendant of Confucius himself. This young man, now studying in America, still bears the surname of his distinguished ancestor, and is preparing to return to his native land to preach the Gospel to his own people.

The cable message telling of this remarkable edict, states that the removal of Confucius from the worship of the Chinese people is "in deference to the religious scruples of the Christian students in the government colleges." Such action is another instance of the increasing tolerance and friendliness on the part of the rulers of the land—a fact to which missionaries are constantly bearing witness. Too many proofs of official favor and approval have been given of late years to doubt their appreciation of missionary activities.

PARISH NOTES.

Any who desire to make their communions at the 9.15 Mass on Sunday are requested to notify the priest beforehand; otherwise provision will not be made for them.

The Retreat for the Guild of the Holy Cross was held at the Mission House on the second Sunday in Lent. About forty were in retreat. Fr. Schneeweiss was the Conductor.

The fiscal year of the parish will commence March 25th. All pew rents and pledges should be paid by March 24th, as the books of the Accounting Warden close on that date. The pledge envelopes will be ready for distribution on Palm Sunday.

The parochial retreat on Ash Wednesday was conducted by the Rev. Fr. Brookins, curate of St. Mark's Church, and vicar of St. Mary's. Three most helpful addresses were given on the healing of Blind Bartimaeus. A good number was in attendance throughout the day.

A new chalice and paten have been presented to the parish. The chalice is of frosted silver with six carbuncles inserted in the knop. It bears the following inscription: "Presented to St. Clements Church by Mary L. Freeman, to the Glory of God, and in loving memory of my sisters, Margaret C. and Emily H. Freeman, 1907."

The new hymnals have been placed in the church, and the prayer books will be supplied as soon as the Sunday School is removed to the parish house. The rector earnestly desires contributions to pay for the new books. At the present writing twenty-five dollars has been received. The bill, as noted in the previous number of the Magazine, amounts to two hundred and eighty dollars.

On Monday, Feb. 11th, the Pre-Lenten service for the clergy of the diocese was held at the Church of St. Luke and the Epiphany. The Bishop of the diocese said Mass and there were a number of priests present. This was made the occasion for presenting to Bishop Whitaker addresses from the General Convention and from the clergy and the laity. At the same time the sum of money collected for the endowment of the Deaconess House was laid upon the altar. Our venerable diocesan replied to the addresses with his usual directness and sincerity. In all his intercourse with St. Clements during the past twenty years, he has proved himself a veritable Father in God to the parish, and the rector and people have received the utmost consideration at his hands. We trust that God may grant a much longer continuance among us, and pledge him our unfeigned loyalty and obedience.

THE ANNUNCIATION.

Falling as it does this year on the Monday in Holy Week, the feast of the Annunciation is, according to Catholic custom, transferred to the first free day, which will be the Monday following Low Sunday. On Sunday evening, first Vespers of the feast will be sung, with procession and solemn Te Deum, and on Monday morning there will be a Solemn Mass at seven o'clock, which it is hoped the parishioners will make every effort to attend.

In these days, when within the ranks of our own clergy, the Virginity of the Mother of God is denied, and the doctrine of the Incarnation explained away, it behooves every Catholic parish to celebrate with great devotion this great "Feast of the Incarnation," when the Second Person of the Blessed Trinity took flesh of the substance of a pure Virgin. St. Clement's parish, which has always stood in the forefront of the battle for Catholicity in the American Church, ought not to remain in the background when the honor of our dear Lord, and of His blessed Mother is at stake. We should be among the first to show by our increased devotion to Jesus Christ of and by our loving reverence for her who bore Him, that in the midst of an age of scepticism and of doubt, St. Clement's Church as always, holds "the faith once delivered unto the Saints," and especially should we unite in asking the intercession of the Blessed Virgin, that by her prayers and the prayers of all Saints this branch of the Catholic Church may be preserved from the growth of heresy and false teaching within her fold, and above all from that subtly false interpretation of the Catholic creeds, which can only end in the denial of the God-Head of Jesus Christ.

AVE, MARIS STELLA.

Hail, O Star that pointest
Towards the port of heaven,
Thou to whom as maiden
God for Son was given.
When the salutation
Gabriel had spoken,
Peace was shed upon us,
Eden's bonds were broken.
Bound by Satan's fetters,
Health and vision needing,
God will aid and light us
At thy gentle pleading.
Jesus' tender Mother
Make thy supplication
Unto Him who chose thee,
At His Incarnation.
That, O matchless Maiden,
Passing meek and lowly,
Thy dear Son may make us
Blameless, chaste and holy.
So, as now we journey,
Aid our week endeavor,
Till we gaze on Jesus,
And rejoice forever.
Father, Son and Spirit,
Three in One confessing;
Give me equal glory,
Equal praise and blessing.
—From the "English Hymnal," translated from a hymn of the 9th century.

THE MASS OF THE PRE-SANCTIFIED.

It hardly need be said that the "Mass of the Pre-sanctified," as it is commonly called, is no true Mass; that is to say, it is not theologically speaking, a sacrifice. In reality, the rite which closes the ceremonies of Good Friday is no more than a Communion Service, although a certain solemnity is given to it by the employments of liturgical forms and acts which are usually associated only with the Mass itself. In the Greek Church throughout Lent the Mass of the Pre-sanctified is celebrated every day, but the Holy Sacrifice itself is offered only on Sundays. It has been maintained that this custom can be traced back to the time of the Councils of Faodicea (a. d. 314) and Trullo, but the matter is very uncertain. In the Western Church it is probable that the Sacrifice was not much more frequently offered than in the Eastern, although in this case we have not the same evidence of the use of any rite which simulated the forms and ceremonies of the Mass itself. Mgr. Duchesne professes to have proved that in the time of Pope Innocent I, about the beginning of the fifth century, there was usually no sacrifice celebrated in Rome, even on Wednesdays and Fridays. There was indeed a "station" which involved a fast, and there was a synaxis or religious service. It also seems very probable that this service, which no doubt resembled closely the earlier portion of the Good Friday Office was terminated by a reception of the Holy Communion. To pass from this to a rite, which might deserve to be called a Mass of the Pre-sanctified, required but a very short step indeed. However on this point no satisfactory evidence is forthcoming. All that can be said is that the concluding ceremonies of the present Good Friday function were probably to be witnessed in the early Church repeatedly throughout the year, but that while greater and greater freedom was gradually permitted in offering the Holy Sacrifice of the Mass, extending first to Sundays and festivals, and then to certain defined days in the week, and then to all week days, a feeling of respect for the sublime mystery enacted on Mt. Calvary has always prevented the Church from permitting Mass to be offered on this one day in the year, and on this one day alone.

It may be interesting to quote a popular description of the Good Friday ritual written nine hundred years ago, in Anglo-Saxon, by Abbot Aelfric.

"I pray you that you take heed of yourselves, so as your books instruct you how you should do in these days to come. Housel may not be allowed on Good Friday, because Christ suffered on that day for us; but there must nevertheless, be done what appertains to that day; so that two lessons be read, with two tracts, and with two collects, and Christ's Passion; and afterwards the prayers. And let them pray to the holy rood, so that they all greet the rood of God with a kiss. Let the priest then go to the altar of God with the housel bread that he hallowed on Thursday, and with unhallowed wine mixed with water, and cover it with his corporale, and then immediately say: "Oremus; Praeceptis salutaribus moniti, and "Pater noster" to the end. And then let him put a part of the housel into the Chalice, as it is, however, usual; then let him go silently to housel; and for the rest let look who will." Selected from Lent and Holy Week, by Thurston.

S. CHAD.

March 2.

Bede says, S. Chad's death was announced by a call of Heavenly music. His disciple, the monk Owen, had followed him to Lichfield. Owen had once been a great man, Chamberlain and Councillor of Queen Etheldreda. He was a Monk of great merit, having forsaken the world with the pure intention of obtaining the Heavenly reward; worthy in all respects to have the secrets of the Lord revealed to him, and worthy to have credit given by his hearers to what he said. One day, when Owen was employed abroad, and his companions had gone to the Church, and the Bishop was alone in his oratory, Owen heard voices singing most sweetly, and appearing to descend from heaven. This sound seemed to come from the south-east, and it afterwards drew nigh the oratory, where the Bishop then was, and entering therein, filled the same and all around. Owen listened attentively to what he heard, and after about half an hour, noticed the same strain of joy ascend from the oratory with inexpressible sweetness and return to Heaven. When he had stood for some time wondering, the Bishop opened the windows of the oratory, and making a sign with his hand, as he was often wont to do, ordered him to come in to him. He accordingly went hastily in. Then the holy Chad told Owen that the day of his death was at hand; for, said he, "That amiable guest, who was wont to visit our brethren, has vouchsafed also to visit me this day, and to summon me out of this world." The Bishop added: "Return to the Church, and speak to the brethren, that they, in their prayers, recommend my passage to our Lord, and that they be careful to provide for their own departure out of this world, the hour whereof is uncertain, by watching prayer and good works."

And so it was; seven days after, on the 2d of March, 672, S. Chad entered into his rest, and was buried in Litchfield, by St. Mary's Church. In 1236 the Chapel of S. Chad was added to the Cathedral, and there the Saint's head was long preserved as a precious relique. In 1296 Bishop Walter Langton added the Lady Chapel, and erected in it a costly shrine to contain the body of the Saint. The Chapel erected in 1236, was unroofed at the seige of Lichfield (1643) but was beautifully restored by Dean Luckrock in 1897.

Though S. Chad's episcopate was short (he was Bishop of Lichfield only two and a half years), it was abundantly esteemed by the warm hearted Mercians, for thirty-one churches (including the fair Cathedral) are dedicated in his honour, in or near his ancient diocese.

As long as the virtues of chastity, humility, and a forsaking of all for Christ's sake, are esteemed among men, the name of the Apostle of the Mercians ought not to be forgotten.

PARISH NOTES.

The vestry election will be held on Easter Monday in the reception room of the clergy house. Polls open from 12 M. to 2 P. M.

Donations are asked for Easter flowers. They may be handed to the clergy or sent to the Misses Arnold, 3722 Locust street.

Every communicant should fill out and send in an Easter Communion card. The communicant list is revised after Easter.

"To the glory of God, and in loving memory of Helen Wilson Thomson and Emma Florence Thomson. Christmas, 1906."

The envelopes for the ensuing year are ready for distribution. Members of S. Vincent's Guild did the work of dating and numbering.

For the Solemn Mass on Easter Day the parishioners will be admitted by the Cherry street door until 10.30 o'clock, when the corridor doors will be opened.

The retreat for men on mid-Lent Sunday was well attended, there being fourteen in retreat. The retreat for S. Vincent's Guild was held on Passion Sunday.

The Bishop Coadjutor has signified his intention of visiting the parish on the evening of June 12th. Confirmation classes will be formed immediately after Easter.

The Office of the Guild of the Holy Cross will be sung on the first Friday evening of the month, instead of the first Sunday of the month. This change begins in April.

The Bible class held by the members of the Guild of the Holy Cross will meet on Friday evenings. During Lent we were obliged to meet on Wednesdays, but will now return to the usual time of meeting.

A very beautiful pyx has been presented and is in use at S. Clement's. It has been most skillfully made from a gold watch case, which was an heirloom, and a very fine gold chain forms part of the gift. It is inscribed as follows:

Many questions are being asked as to what is being done for the restoration of the church interior. It is hoped that in a few weeks a colored sketch of the proposed alterations may be put before the parish. It must be remembered, however, that we have before us a very difficult problem, and the work cannot be accomplished quickly or in any hurried fashion. The organ must be entirely rebuilt, which will be a most expensive undertaking, and the marble work which is contemplated will necessitate the expenditure of a very large sum of money. In fact, the new plans will require practically the renovation of the interior of the entire church. The plans must be prepared with great care and deliberation. It is possible that in the course of a year we may be able to make a beginning, but it will not be practicable to attempt anything before that time.

We are grateful to the "Crusader," a church paper, of San Diego, Cal., for the following very gracious notice of our parish. At the same time it should bring to us the deepest sense of humility and unworthiness. God has indeed blessed S. Clement's, and we pray that He may always bless it, but we must all be fully conscious of our sad neglect of the opportunities that He has given us. We do not deserve the warm praise that we have received. Let us all strive to be more worthy of it in the future. "Unto whomsoever much is given, of him shall much be required:"

"In your last issue something was said in this column about certain parishes which seemed full of devotion, around whose shrines the faithful seem to gather, both more frequently and more fervently. Such a place is historic S. Clement's, in Philadelphia. Five priests are now ministering there and living almost the community life. The preaching of the Cowley Fathers and the force and character of the late Moffett have left their mighty impress. Another influence must not be disregarded, the long service of the curates, two of whom have remained there for ten years under different rectorships. The glory of S. Clement's is that the people are converted; nearly everybody goes to confession, young and old; there is always a priest to be had on the premises; the Communions are many; not alone Easter, but all the time. The congregation hear Mass; the great privileges are appreciated. Philadelphia would be a heap poorer without S. Clement's."

THE EASTER OFFERING.

The vestry ask the generous contributions of the congregation on Easter Day for the current expenses of the parish. At the present meeting there are several outstanding bills which must be paid, and it is imperative that enough should be contributed to meet not only our present indebtedness, but also to support the parish during the summer months, when the contributions often do not exceed $5 a Sunday. In a parish of this size the expenses are many, and there are continual expenditures necessary which cannot be foreseen.

We need also about $300 to complete the vestibule of the church.

If the sum of $3000 can be given at Easter we will be placed once more on a firm financial basis. Will not each member of the parish give as generously as he may be able, for the furtherance of God's Kingdom in the city of Philadelphia?

The following has been received from Bishop Graves:

"American Church Mission,
"Shanghai, Feb. 4, 1907.

"Will you oblige me by inserting in your parish paper a paragraph conveying my thanks on behalf of the mission to the unknown friend in St. Clement's parish who sent $500 through the treasurer in New York and stating that the money has been devoted to the building of the chapel in Tsingpoo?

"The late rector, Father Moffett, was a very dear friend of mine, and for his sake, as well as for the good work that is done there by yourself and others, I wish all success to St. Clement's.

"Yours faithfully in Christ,
"J. R. GRAVES."

THE PIERCED SIDE.

Ancient ecclesiastical history tells us that the man who pierced our Lord's side was called Longinus; and some writers tell us he was blind, and that some drops of our Lord's blood issuing from the wound reached his eyes and straightway cured him. But if not in body, most certainly he was spiritually so blind as not to discover the Lord hanging on the cross before him, nor the benefits which he himself was conferring on the whole world by opening our Lord's side. He was, however, so highly favored that the wound opened by the lance opened also the eyes of his soul, and in him the heart of Jesus received the first fruits of those souls, which hereafter should be supported by the riches of His side.

From the wound in our Lord's side came forth blood and water, and so largely and so distinct one from the other that St. John could bear witness to it as having seen it, which could not have been had the blood and water issued forth mingled together. And since water is the element appointed to be employed in the Holy Sacrament of baptism, and since the most sacred blood of Christ alone gives to it all the efficacy it possesses to sanctify souls, let no one doubt that from the divine side of Jesus came forth that holy laver which cleanses us from all sin, and makes us the sons of God. And so of any sacrament, if it conveys in any way the virtue of Christ's blood, it also proceeded from the same sacred source, the spring of every stream of grace, and of all spiritual and heavenly blessings. Christ called the sacrament of baptism, regeneration, because we, who are by nature the offspring of sinful Adam, and the children of wrath, in holy Baptism are made the children of mercy and of God; and as we are born from our mother's womb to exile and death, so in baptism are we born again to the inheritance of eternal life. We must understand then that, if through the water and blood which flowed from His side we are born holy, and the sons of God, all we who are baptized are without doubt the sons of His bowels, for to them we owe our spiritual birth. And thus our Lord would pledge Himself to bear to us a mother's love, although already in so many ways He has shown us the love of a father, in order that He might infinitely exceed all others in the immensity of those natural claims which He has to our love. Seeing, then, that we are so loved in every way and by every means by Him, in every way let us repay Him, by loving Him as our father and our mother, our master, servant, brother, son, companion, our dearest friend; and let us not regard with less love and confidence the Lord's side, whence we were born again to heaven, than we do the bosom of our mother, from whom we were born into this fallen world.—Selected.

PARISH NOTES.

Four hundred and fifteen communions on Easter day.

The Catechism and Bible Classes will close on Trinity Sunday.

The Paschal candle was very beautifully decorated by Miss McIlhenny.

The Annual Convention of the Diocese of Pennsylvania will meet in the Church of St. Luke and Epiphany, May 7 and 8.

The regular meeting of the Confraternity of the Blessed Sacrament on Sunday, May 12, will be omitted.

The Rev. R. E. Wood, of Wuchang, in the Diocese of Hankow, China, preached at the Solemn High Mass on Low Sunday.

A very fine hood for the black cope has been embroidered by a member of the parish, and given in memory of George Herbert Moffett, priest.

The continual intercessions will be kept up as usual in the Rogation days, May 6, 7 and 8. The schedule of hours will be arranged the preceding Sunday.

After Trinity Sunday the sermon at the 9.15 Mass will be discontinued. The sermon at the High Mass will be preached at the close of the service, and Evensong will be read at 5 o'clock.

On the Third Sunday after Trinity there will be a special sermon preached in behalf of the M. T. O. and also a corporate communion of all the men of the parish. A collection for the fund will also be taken on this Sunday.

The meeting of the Convention of North Philadelphia will be held in St. Clement's Parish House on May 14. A business meeting will be held at 5 o'clock. Supper will be served at 6, and there will be a missionary meeting in the church in the evening.

Solemn High Mass will be sung on Ascension day at 7 A. M., and on Corpus Christi at 9 A. M. First Vespers of Corpus Christi will be sung on Wednesday, May 29, at 5.15 P. M., at S. Katherine's altar. The annual meeting of S. Saviour's Ward, C. B. S., will follow immediately.

The following memorials have been recently given:

Flowers for the Crypt Chapel in memory of Amy P. McIlhenny.

Miss J. E. Johnson—Flowers in memory of Father Moffett.

Miss J. A. Cadwallader—Easter flowers for the high altar in memory of Edith Cadwallader Crowder.

The M. T. O. movement is meeting with marked success throughout the Church. In our own parish about three hundred dollars has been thus far collected. During the next few months the parochial committee will canvass the parish, and so far as possible each man will be given the opportunity of adding his contribution to the fund.

The united offering of the Woman's Auxiliary to the Board of Missions will be presented during the meeting of the General Convention at Richmond, in October. It is desirable that the mite boxes which have been distributed in the parish should be returned as soon as possible, as the treasurer desires to send the amount to the Central Committee soon after May 1st. Any women who may have the mite boxes are asked to send their contents to Miss Hutchinson, 2413 Spruce street, by May 1st.

The Bishop Coadjutor will make his annual visitation, and administer the Sacrament of Confirmation on June 12. Confirmation classes are now being held as follows:

For men, Friday evenings, at 8, at the clergy house.

For boys, Tuesdays and Fridays, at noon, at the clergy house.

For girls, Wednesdays, at 4 P. M., at the mission house.

For women, Tuesdays, at 7.30 P. M., at the mission house.

Special arrangement can be made for private instruction if these hours should prove inconvenient to any.

HOLY WEEK AND EASTER.

Holy week and Easter brought many blessings to the parish, and were full of spiritual uplift. On Maundy Thursday, after the Solemn Mass, the Blessed Sacrament was carried to the Crypt Chapel by the celebrant, preceded by incense and cross, with acolytes and clergy carrying lighted tapers. On Good Friday the Mass of the pre-Sanctified was celebrated, and the reproaches sung at 10.30 A. M. The Rev. Fr. Powel, S. S. J. E., preached the "Three Hours." The addresses were full of spiritul power and helpfulness. The congregation was very large, and the majority remained until the end. The congregational singing of the hymns was unusually good. On Easter day there was a slight increase in communions over last year. At 11 o'clock Solemn High Mass was sung, with Fr. Quin as celebrant and Frs. Ward and Schneeweiss as deacon and subdeacon. Gounod's Third Mass was beautifully rendered by the choir.

In the evening a quartet of horns with drums added to the beauty of the service. On Low Sunday the music was repeated, but in the evening the first Vespers of the Annunciation were sung with appropriate hymns. On Monday, April 8, the Feast of the Annunciation was observed by a Solemn High Mass at 7 o'clock.

VESTRY ELECTION AND MEETING.

The annual election of the Vestrymen for S. Clement's Parish was held on Easter Monday. The following communicants were elected to serve for the ensuing year: Messrs. S. McKean Bayard, Francis M. Berry, Walter A. Buchanan, Harry Connelly, Greville E. Fryer, W. W. Lukens, Geo. Lewis Mayer, G. Theo. Roberts, Francis D. Wetherill, Clinton Rogers Woodruff, Caleb F. Wright.

At the stated meeting for organization, held on Easter Tuesday, Mr. Greville E. Fryer was appointed rector's warden, Mr. S. McK. Bayard was re-elected accounting warden, Mr. Caleb F. Wright was re-elected clerk. Mr. Stevenson H. Walsh was elected to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of Mr. Harry Connelly.

The following is an abstract of the Accounting Warden's report for the parochial year ending March 24, 1907:

Entered in Philadelphia Post-office as second-class mail matter.

PARISH NOTES.

Solemn Evensong will be continued through the month of June at 8 o'clock on Sunday evenings.

New dust covers have been given for all the altars, including the crypt chapel.

The name of Mr. George H. Lea should have been included in the list of the vestry, printed last month.

The Bishop-Coadjutor will administer the Sacrament of Confirmation on the evening of June 12th at 8 o'clock.

The Magazine, which has never been self-supporting, is in need of donations. Will not our friends make some contributions toward "current expenses?"

On St. Barnabas' day Fr. Hutchinson and Fr. Schneeweiss will celebrate the tenth anniversary of their ordination to the priesthood, and ask the prayers of the congregation at the Masses on June 11th.

Commencing June 16th, the third Sunday after Trinity, the 8 o'clock Mass on Sundays will be omitted. The Litany at noon on Fridays will be omitted after June 1st, and the 7.30 Mass on week days will be omitted after the first of July.

The clergy will take their holidays as follows: Fr. Hutchinson, June 29-Oct. 1; Fr. Quin, Sept. 1-Oct. 19; Fr. Ward, June 13-Aug. 1; Fr. Schneeweiss, June 13-July 1 and the month of August; Fr. Kellogg, Sept. 1-Oct. 19. There will be two clergy resident in Philadelphia during the summer and one at Sea Isle City.

On Sunday, June 16th, there will be a corporate communion of the men of the parish at 7 o'clock. This day is the three hundredth anniversary of the first Mass celebrated in English on the American Continent. Will not the men of S. Clement's make a special effort to communicate on this day? A similar corporate communion will be made in all the Philadelphia churches. A collection will be taken for the men's thank offering. At the 11 o'clock Mass a special sermon will be preached.

Owing to the inclement weather the choir picnic on Ascension Day was abandoned of necessity. The boys had breakfast in the clergy house, and then adjourned to the choir room, where they spent the morning in playing games, and at noon disposed of the good things that had been prepared for their outing. Mr. Colston generously donated the fruit. In the afternoon they were taken to Keith's Theatre and the day was voted a success. Later in the summer it is hoped that an outing may be arranged.

It is the duty of every Christian person to attend Mass on Sunday, whether it be in August or December. So far as one can gather, it is the custom of some so-called Catholics to make no effort during the holidays to keep up their Sunday duty. This means that they have little conception of the Catholic faith. Everyone of the parishioners is urged so to arrange his holiday that he may not be deprived of church privileges, and also to make some effort to live as a Catholic on Sunday, even if it does mean some slight effort and inconvenience.

The Convocation of North Philadelphia held its quarterly meeting at St. Clement's on May 14th. The parish hall was used for the first time and proved in every way satisfactory. There was a business meeting at 5 o'clock, at which the Bishop-Coadjutor presided. After the meeting, supper was served by some ladies of the parish and at 8 o'clock there was a missionary meeting in the church. The Rev. Fr. Brookins, Vicar of S. Mary's Chapel, St. Mark's parish, spoke of his work among the colored people and Rev. Dr. Duhring, of the City Mission, gave an interesting address. The Convocation has in charge the missionary work of North Philadelphia.

The picture of the Last Supper, which formed a portion of the reredos in the chapel of S. John Evangelist, in the old parish building, has been sent to an art dealer for renovation. It is found that the copy is exceedingly valuable, being appraised at $1500. It will cost $100 to restore the picture properly and another one hundred to frame and glaze it, so that it may be protected. When finished it will hang on the west wall of S. John's Chapel in the new building. Will not some interested persons contribute toward this sum of $200? The picture should be preserved, and we are assured that if the work is done now in the best way possible it will last for many years. Contributions may be sent to the rector.

We commence in the present issue the list of female communicants. It is possible that there are some errors or omissions. These are not intentional. If any name has been omitted the rector will be glad to restore such an one, if he is informed. If he is not informed it is manifestly impossible for the correction to be made. In this connection it may be as well to repeat an announcement, which was made by Fr. Moffett in the November issue of the Magazine in 1901: "The present addresses of certain parishioners are unknown to the clergy, and this prevents their being visited. It is the intention that every faithful and regular member of the congregation shall be visited, as far as possible, by one of the clergy at least once during each year." If there is any person in the parish who has been overlooked, will such an one please write name and address on a card and send to the rector? The rector again urges that requests for prayers, or for sick calls should be written. If the clergy are not informed as to changed addresses or sickness they cannot be responsible for any oversights, as they have not been endowed with the gift of omniscience.

SAINT BOTOLPH.

June 22.

Sts. Botolph and Adulph were two nobly-born English brothers, whose eyes were opened to the light of faith at the time that the Gospel day first dawned upon our ancestors. Astonished at the great truths which they had learned, and penetrated with the most profound sentiments which religion inspires, they went abroad to Saxony, or more probably to Gaul, there to find some religious houses and school of virtue, which were then scarce in England. They attached themselves to a monastery, and assumed the clerical habit, and in a short time made great progress in virtue and knowledge. Nor was it long before Adulph, on the urgent petition of the people, was promoted to the Episcopal dignity, which he administered in so holy a manner that he is honored in France among the Saints, on the 17th of June.

S. Botolph returned to England to bring to his own country the treasure he had found. Having met in Gaul the sisters of the sub-King Ethelmund, who reigned over South Anglia, he begged of him some barren spot of ground on which to found a monastery. Free permission was given him to choose any unoccupied land which might suit him best, and, after mature deliberation, he selected Shanhoe, generally supposed to be near Boston, in Lincolnshire. It is described as a God-forsaken, devil-possessed spot, on a hoe or mound, covered with trees, girdled with rushes in a vast, stagnant morass, the haunt of wild fowl. Here he laid the foundations of his monastery in the year 654, and in a short time he collected a community, whom he trained according to the rule of S. Benedict. His life appears to have been singularly barren of stirring events, but he was beloved by all who came near him, on account of his humility, gentleness and affability. All his discourse was on things which tended to edification, and his example was still more efficacious to instill the true spirit of every virtue. When he was oppressed by any sickness, he never ceased thanking and praising God with holy Job. His extraordinary sanctity attracted many visitors, among whom was S. Coelfrid, who would gladly have remained with him had he not been called by S. Benedict Biscop to take part in his work at Wearmouth.

Botolph lived to a good old age, and was purified by a long illness before his happy death, which occurred in 680, in the same year with that of S. Hilda.

His monastery, probably a few huts of wood and thatch, having been destroyed by the Danes in 870, his reliques were carried, part to the monastery of Ely, and part to that of Thorny. S. Edward the Confessor, afterward bestowed some portion of them on his own Abbey of Westminster. A certain proof of the great veneration in which S. Botolph was held by our ancestors is the number of churches dedicated to his honor. Three parishes in London, and innumerable others throughout the country bear his name. Botolph's town (Boston), in Lincolnshire, and Botolph's Bridge (Brattlebridge), in Huntingdonshire, are called after him.—Selected.

PARISH NOTES.

Fr. Quin will be in charge of the parish during July and August, and Fr. Ward in September.

Owing to the delay in completing the parish building, the consecration will be postponed until the autumn.

The Bishop Coadjutor visited S. Clement's on Wednesday evening, June 12th, and confirmed twenty-nine persons, one of whom was a candidate from S. Elizabeth's parish.

The Sister Superior has gone down to Sea Isle City to prepare for the opening of the Sea Shore home which is set for July 1st. The clergy will occupy an adjacent cottage during the summer.

A slip of ivy from Melrose Abbey, Scotland, which was presented by Mr. Caleb F. Wright some two years ago, is apparently flourishing. It is growing under the second window from the entrance, on the south side of the church.

The publication of the list of communicants is already bearing fruit. Several addresses have been changed, one or two names added. It is most important that the list be absolutely correct. Will not each one take an active interest in making it so?

We repeat the notice that after the first of July the 7.30 mass on week days will be discontinued, and the 8 o'clock service on Sunday evening given up. Even-song will be read on Sunday at 5 o'clock. The 8 o'clock mass on Sunday has been discontinued.

The Rector sailed for England on the S. S. Minnetonka on June 29th. He is due in London, July 8th, and will pass the greater part of the summer in Cornwall, sailing for home the twenty-first of September. Fr. Ward will spend his holiday in the middle west.

The tile mosaic which has been inserted in the tabernacle door in the new chapel, is a copy of a mediaeval design and represents the pelican feeding her young with her own blood. This symbol of our Lord comes down to us from very ancient times. The coloring of the door is remarkably soft and pleasing.

Word has come to us from Fr. Field that Fr. Waggett S. S. J. E., who is to visit this country in the early fall, will preach at S. Clement's on the evening of October 13th. Fr. Waggett is one the foremost preachers of the Society and has done remarkable work for the church along apologetic lines, being a man well versed in modern science.

On the third Sunday after Trinity, June 16th, at the request of the bishop, there was a corporate communion of the men of the parish. The occasion was the 300th anniversary of the first English Mass, celebrated on the American continent, in Jamestown, 1607. The amount of the offering for the M. T. O. from S. Clement's has reached the neighborhood of $500. It is hoped that this full amount may be sent to the treasurer.

AN ALLEGORY.

An Angel and a woman stood in a railway station on a day in the early Autumn. "How well all these people look," said the woman. "They are returning from their summer holidays."

"You cannot see," said the Angel. "I will show you their souls," and passed a hand over her eyes.

"Alas," cried the woman; "see that young girl who but now looked so rosy. She is white and ill."

"She has had no fresh air all summer," said the Angel. "She has not been to church once and has said her prayers but rarely. And that emaciated woman beside her?"

"She has had no food," said the Angel. "All summer she has neglected the Blessed Sacrament."

"And the two behind them? One limps,—and has an unsightly hump on her back." "She has either talked of herself, or gossiped unkindly about others."

"And her companion walks with uncertain step." "Yes," said the Angel. "She could not see God's love in the beauties of His Kingdom—river and ocean, forest and mountain, sunset and sunrise, and the sound of the wind and rain gave her no thought of Him. She is blind."

"And oh, this poor little dwarf—shriveled and withered."

"He grew smaller this summer," said the Angel sadly. "He has thought only of himself and his own happiness; with self-denial and unselfishness he would have grown, but at the end of each summer I see him smaller. He will dwindle away entirely in a few years."

"But here is one who really looks well," said the woman eagerly. "How tall and strong and bronzed he looks." "Ah!" replied the Angel. "he has had food—and air—and sunlight. He has made the best of such spiritual opportunities as were given him. He has thought of others, and forgotten himself—and he has seen and thanked God in the beauties of His world."

"Give me back my earthly sight," said the woman. But when it was done she saw that the man was a shabby white-faced cripple.

"He has not been away at all," said the Angel.—St. Mark's Messenger.

PARISH NOTES.

Fr. Schneeweiss will leave for his holiday on the 1st of August.

Prayers are asked for the repose of the soul of Alice Elizabeth Leigh, wife of Thomas Leigh, who departed this life May 6, 1907, aged 60 years.

The choir takes its vacation during August. There will be a Low Mass with hymns, followed by a sermon at eleven o'clock, on Sundays during the month.

The choir picnic, which was delayed by the stormy weather on Ascension Day, took place on Monday, July 1st. The boys, under the leadership of Mr. Sears, went to Laurel Springs. They had a most enjoyable time.

The Sea Shore Home opened on the 1st of July, although the Sister Superior and some of the helpers had been there before. The second crowd went down on the 15th. The Sunday services at the Sisters' chapel are especially well attended this year.

The Acolytes had their yearly outing, under the direction of Mr. Goodwin, from the 3rd to the 8th of July. They went, as for the two years past, to Alloway, New Jersey, but to a house near a different lake. The change gave an added pleasure to the delights of Alloway.

This year the Catechism went on a "combination" picnic with the churches of St. John and Our Saviour, Camden, to Grenlock Park, New Jersey. About seventy-five of our own people went. The day was beautiful, and boating and other amusements helped to make a very happy time. The boys were especially interested in the swimming. The picnic left Philadelphia at 8.30 in the morning, and left the park at 7.30 in the evening. There was neither rain nor accidents to mar the pleasure of the day.

An attempt is being made to have a "vacation school" in the parish during July and August. It will meet every day in the week except Saturday and Sunday from nine till twelve in the Parish Building. The first hour will be devoted to religious instruction, the next to a modified form of manual training, and the third hour to games. The plan is to take any and all children from the neighborhood from the age of three to twelve.

The clergy are very thankful to all who have given flowers for the altars this summer. Flowers for the altars should be sent to the Clergy House as early as possible on Saturday.

HOURS FOR CONFESSION.

A CRISIS.

There are certain alarmists in evidence among us who apparently find a morbid satisfaction in proclaiming that the Church is, to use a well-worn phrase, "on the eve of a crisis." Now, is this really so, or is it simply a spirit of pessimism? In one sense the Church is necessarily ever dealing with a crisis—the crisis in individual souls who may, perhaps, be tempted to neglect "the time of their visitation"—but as to the crisis which is so often thought to be pending we surely need not be especially perturbed. If it is only the fact that we are face to face with most perplexing questions and tremendous difficulties in setting forth the Catholic faith, we need not assume that this is anything novel or unusual, for the Church has been dealing with such conditions from the very beginning.

The Apostolic College itself was not free from sharp dissensions, nor need we expect to escape them. As we cast our eye over the pages of ecclesiastical history, we find in the very ages which cover a united Christendom disputations and quarrels before which those of the present day are as nothing. We are very apt to draw a line of distinction between past periods and our own times, mentally giving the former a glamour which does not belong to them and looking upon our own days as particularly evil. We think of the Church of the Middle Ages, for instance, as a vision of harmony and beauty, even in its earthly aspect; but is not this rather a picturesque delusion than an absolute reality? We certainly know with what facility we can turn to many and many an instance during those supposed halcyon days of the Church's glory, when the conduct of her sons was too shameful even to be recalled to mind. The most indifferent and careless churchman among us to-day would be shocked beyond measure could the happenings of those times be repeated now. We all remember the case of St. Thomas of Canterbury—to take but a single illustration. What would be thought if the present King of England were to subject the Archbishop of Canterbury to the effrontery and brutality to which the Catholic King, Henry II., subjected his great primate. It is not the most pleasant of occupations to dwell on such historical facts, but it is sometimes salutary if only to show that our Lord's prediction that the wheat and the tares should grow together is fulfilled in every age. The human element must ever be manifest, and we know by experience what to expect from it. And yet, as even in the most troublous times, the Church went straight on with her divine mission to souls, so now, though bishops and priests quarrel and recriminate, though dissensions take place even as to the very faith itself, yet the Church goes on the regular tenor of her way, giving the sacraments and upbuilding souls. The same human element is present that showed itself in Apostolic times and that will continue to show itself until the end; but though "the waves of the sea are mighty and rage horribly," yet we are sure that "One who dwelleth on high is mightier," and that God can and does overrule for the enlightenment of His Church, and the perfecting of His children, these very upheavals.

We are not to think chaos is reigning, and we become doubtful and discouraged; but let us have recourse to the Blessed Sacrament, and behold! all the clouds are dissipated, and we hear the "still, small voice" from the Altar speaking to us words of peace and comfort. Here, in the contemplation of this tremendous mystery, the human element fades away, and there is a transcending of all worldly feelings, and although our daily duties require that we should come out from the heavenly vision and return to the discord of temporal matters, yet our souls may reflect the brightness of the light which shone upon us, and we may carry with us the "peace which passeth all understanding." We cannot think of controversies and quarrels when our hearts are filled with the realization of the abiding presence of our Lord Himself, and in this we have the cure for all our discontent and discouragement. We forget sometimes, in our desire to escape trouble, that we are not placed in this world to do that which most ministers to our tastes or ease, but simply and solely to do the will of God. Outside of this we can have no vocation; without it, life is worthless—yes, worse than worthless.

If God has ordered that we should be born in practical America or stolid England instead of in the Catholic atmosphere which surrounds the "Eternal City," and that we should be made heirs of the Kingdom of Heaven by holy baptism in a Low Church parish, at the hands of an "Episcopal minister" instead of in an Italian cathedral by a Latin priest, let us accept this as His all-wise purpose, and feel sure that no better lot could befall us than the infinite blessing of being admitted to the Catholic Church at all, where we are called to be saints, and are given the means of attaining our high calling. If we are compelled to attend a service which to our devotional aspirations is cold and bare, let us associate ourselves in spirit with the early Christians, whose ritual was of necessity the plainest, and whose temples were caves and dens of the earth, and let us endeavor to emulate the wonderful lives that age produced. We may not, indeed, be required to figure prominently as champions of the faith, but the most obscure life may patiently witness for the truth by loyalty and perseverance.

For those who look only at God's most blessed will there is no fear of a crisis. The faith, even as a grain of mustard-seed, will remove mountains of difficulty, and there will come to the soul such a cheerfulness and tranquillity as will lift it far above all discouragement and will place it in the company of those "who, going through the vale of misery, use it for a well, and the pools are filled with water."

PARISH NOTES.

The attendance at the Masses has been fairly good during the summer.

There were 313 Communions made in the parish from July 20 to August 20.

Father Quin and Father Kellogg leave for their holidays the first of September.

The Sunday services will be Low Mass at 7 and 9.15, Missa Cantata at 11 and Evensong at 8.

Evensong will be sung Sunday evening at 8 o'clock, beginning with the first Sunday in September.

The choir, which had its vacation during August, will begin work again on the first Sunday in September.

Your offerings are asked for the poor fund. There have been many calls, and the fund is very low indeed.

Saturday, September 14, is the feast of the Exaltation of the Holy Cross. Masses at 6.30 and 7. Members of the Guild of the Holy Cross are reminded of the corporate Communion.

Wednesday, Friday and Saturday, September 18, 20 and 21, are Ember days, on which it is incumbent on all Catholics to abstain from flesh-meat and to give themselves to prayer for those to be ordained on the Lord's Day following.

The Kindergarten, started about the middle of July under the superintendence of Sister Elisabeth Paula and Miss Matilda Clair, has succeeded beyond our expectations. The school is for children between the ages of 3 and 12 years. The attendance at the last report was an average of over twenty. We take this opportunity to express our gratitude to those who have labored so faithfully and aided the work by their generous gifts.

The Little and Great Catechisms will begin the Sixteenth Sunday after Trinity, September 15, at 3 o'clock. The Great Catechism will meet in S. John's Chapel and the Little Catechism in the large room on the second floor. The Bible Classes will meet in the Parish Building on the Nineteenth Sunday after Trinity, October 6, after the close of the Children's Mass. The session will end in time to allow those who have not been to Mass to be present at the High Mass.

With the close of summer coming on it is time for us to ask ourselves whether we have diligently kept the precepts of God's Catholic Church. Whether we have remembered, wherever we were and however warm it has been, that the Church commands our attendance at Mass every Sunday during the year. Has there been any lessening in the frequency of our Communion? Have our Confessions been carefully made? Have we been diligent in prayer and in reading God's Word? If we have not — if, through the wiles of Satan and our own weaknesses, we have neglected our regular duties—it is now time to turn and repent and "amend our ways."

SEA ISLE CITY.

The work at The Sea Shore Home came to an end for this summer on August 23, when the last party of mothers and children returned to the city. The weather has been unusually kind this year; there has been scarcely a day when it was impossible to go out. Fortunately, there have been no serious illness or other mishaps.

As usual, there have been only four parties of visitors; but we still hope that another year may so increase the subscriptions that it may be possible to take another set.

So many who would be helped by the change of air have always to be refused.

The Chapel has been very well attended by summer visitors to Sea Isle City. It is a pleasure to provide for the needs of others besides our own immediate circle, and to make the services of the Church accessible to many who would otherwise be cut off from them.

SOCIETY OF S. JOHN THE EVANGELIST.

It will interest many readers of S. CLEMENT'S MAGAZINE to know that Father Page has resigned his office as Superior General. He had held the office for seventeen years. At the Chapter held on Tuesday, July 30, Father Maxwell was elected as his successor.

The Society has lately opened a "House of Retreat" at Iona, where S. Columba and his twelve companions took up their abode on leaving Ireland. The monastery founded so long ago had for hundreds of years been ruinous, and it is near the old ruins that the Cowley Fathers have started their house. So again, after a long lapse of years, prayer and sacrifice are daily offered to Almighty God at the shrine of one of the greatest of the early Christian missionaries.

EMBERTIDE.

In the Parish Notes is a notice of the three Ember Days occurring in the middle of September. Four times a year—in Lent, before Trinity Sunday, in September and December—the Church sets apart a week of special prayer and three days of abstinence for those who are about to be ordained to any holy function.

The Church lays this prayer and fasting on us as a duty, and doubtless the reason the Church lacks priests is neglect of the people of the Church to obey her express command.

The Church owes it to herself to pray and fast diligently, that God may raise up faithful priests to serve at her altars. And when one reads sometimes that a priest is unfaithful, is it not largely the fault of the Church in neglecting to pray for her priests?

In providing the Ember Seasons the Church accentuates this duty, especially for those who have not yet received the yoke of Christ, or for those who are about to receive a heavier form of that yoke.

The Sacrament of Order, that which confers the powers of the priesthood, gives a character to the soul which is indelible. "Once a priest always a priest, in heaven or in hell," and the very fearfulness of the office demands our prayers at all times, and especially at the times of ordination.

Neglect of this duty involves sin on our part and a certain lack of grace in those who have a right to our prayers. Special prayers for the Ember Days are to be found on page 40 of the Prayer Book.

THE HOLY CROSS.

The 3d of May and the 14th of September are the two days set apart by the Church every year in honor of the Holy Cross. While the origin of these feasts may be more or less a matter of legend, yet few days have been more carefully observed throughout the ages than these. There are very many churches in England dedicated to this most holy Symbol of the Catholic Faith.

Throughout the whole Church relics of the wood of the True Cross, supposed to have been discovered by S. Helena, the mother of the Emperor Constantine, were treated with the greatest veneration, as being the most likely reminder of the Passion and Death of our Divine Lord. The description given by Scott in "The Talisman" of the honor paid to a piece of the True Cross is without doubt a very good account of the reverence felt and the reverent feelings awakened in the hearts of the faithful from the earliest times until now when in the presence of an undoubted relic of the Tree of Glory on which our Saviour died.

Faithful Cross! above all other,
One and only noble Tree!
None in foliage, none in blossom,
None in fruit thy peers may be;
Sweetest Wood and sweetest Iron,
Sweetest Weight is hung on thee!

The poets of the Church have loved to tell its glories and the faithful have sung its praises.

And yet, while all this is good and laudable, unless there is something deeper and more like a cross in our own lives, our merely singing its praises will help but little on the path of Perfection.

He Who died on the Cross said, "Learn of Me, for I am meek and lowly, and ye shall find rest for your souls." And He also said, "Take up your cross daily." The cross that Jesus gives us is to be borne, not to be put on high, admired and covered with kisses. But, as when He went along the Royal Road to Calvary, His shoulder was bruised and torn by the weight of the Cross, so we must bear our cross, feeling its weight, letting it make its mark on our souls. When Calais was lost to England Queen Mary said at her death the word Calais would be written in her heart; so on the heart of every Christian must be the sign of the cross which he so often marks outwardly on his breast.

A Christian without a cross is a stranger in the land of his fathers. He hath no part or lot in this matter. But the Christian who with firm trust and confidence in Jesus accepts his cross and tries to carry it will find Jesus will carry the heavy end of it Himself, and his cross, which seemed to him before a burden too heavy to be borne, will carry him.

PARISH NOTES.

Since Sunday, September 15, the Children's Mass, at 9.15, has been Missa Cantata, with sermon. All are glad to have music at the Mass once more.

The Choir returned to work on the first Sunday in September. There are a number of new voices among the boys, while some familiar faces are missed.

It is necessary to repeat the call for offerings for the Poor Fund. At this time it is very low, while the demands upon it are not lessened. It, consequently, becomes a difficult matter to provide for the needs of many who are dependent for support upon the alms of the faithful.

THE SUMMER SCHOOL

began with twelve children, boys and girls, Tuesday, July 16, in the new Parish Hall; by the following Monday there were twenty-five; very soon, however, this number increased to sixty-five as the knowledge of the work spread. Of these, twenty-four belong to the Church, several are sectarians, and the remaining ones of the Latin Church.

Considering the season of the year and the counter attractions, namely, excursions and the Fresh Air Society trips for different little ones, the average attendance of twenty-three was good.

Boys outnumbered the girls, an agreeable surprise, knowing that the typical small boy has a greater fondness for the street than for any indoor occupation, however attractive it may be.

This points out somewhat the kind of work a summer school may do.

Boys must have a vent for their overactivity, and during the weeks without regular school a way besides being in the streets ought to be provided. How to use the scroll-saw, to cane chairs, to make hammocks, etc., are means to that end.

Furthermore, there is a responsibility in the spiritual as well as the mental and physical development of the children of our own Parish.

It is an impressionable age at which they come to us; and, surely, there is encouragement for the work of future summers when we realize that these little boys and girls willingly spent three hours, morning after morning, during the hot summer days, not only learning to play intelligently and trying to finish the work begun, but were attentive and interested in the daily catechizing and instruction; until, on the closing morning, more than two tables were covered with their handiwork, including their manual work illustrating the spiritual instruction, and reed baskets, blotters, a variety of kindergarten work, also wooden match holders cut out by the older boys, and lastly all sorts of designs molded from clay, which boys and girls alike enjoyed doing.

It was difficult for one teacher to instruct all and do justice to the different ages. Our efforts this summer prove the necessity of having one person responsible for the older scholars, who are able to do work beyond the ability of the younger ones, and some one for them also, as they need special care and watchful guidance.

Miss Clair, the kindergarten teacher, who kindly undertook the school, very bravely met the emergency, and St. Clement's Summer School is grateful to her, and also to the other ladies who generously gave of their time and leisure to assisting regularly on special days every week: Mrs. Cline, Miss Esther Ball, Miss Sammis, Miss Paton, and Miss Averyl Connelly, who also added to the children's pleasure by sending twice a week a quantity of flowers that were distributed in bunches to each child as he or she went home.

One small boy casually remarked one afternoon, "My grandmother always likes the flowers I bring her, and puts them in water to keep them."

The school closed Thursday morning, August 29, after a happy morning, when rewards were given and all had enjoyed a treat of ice cream, cake, and candy, provided through the generosity of interested friends.

FATHER WAGGETT, S. S. J. E.

The Rev. P. N. Waggett, S. S. J. E., is expected to be the preacher at Solemn Evensong, on October 13.

It is with very pleasurable anticipation that we look for the coming of Father Waggett to St. Clement's. He has given in London, Oxford, and Cambridge, from time to time, several notable series of sermons. He is much in demand as a preacher, and has the distinction of being the first member of a religious order who has preached in Westminster Abbey since the Reformation. In his preaching he is said to deal with old truths in a most novel and striking manner, so that his originality never fails to hold the attention and interest of those who hear him. From September 9 to 13 he gave a retreat at Holy Cross Monastery, West Park on the Hudson, at which two bishops and fifty-five priests were present.

A volume of addresses by Father Waggett, published under the title, "The Scientific Temper in Religion," is now well known in religious literature.

DAILY MASS.

There is a tendency, quite peculiarly Protestant, to draw the distinction between Sunday and the rest of the week, as though the affairs of a man's religion were to be confined for the most part to the first day of the week, and secular concerns were to engross him almost exclusively during the other days. And we find such a tendency strongly surviving among certain Church people, and we even discover it strongly prevalent in some who have had Catholic teaching. They do not seem to realize that religious acts have just as much efficacy and value on Monday or any other day of the week as on Sunday.

In the case of such persons it becomes necessary from time to time to emphasize the fact and the meaning of the daily offering of the Holy Sacrifice at the Parish altar.

The number of those who are able to attend daily Mass may for good and well-explained reasons be small, even in a Parish with as large a list of communicants as St. Clement's. In the case of many, the conditions of their daily work, or the demands upon them in the household, may prevent attendance at the church on other days than Sunday. Yet such persons are by no means excused, whether at work in city offices and stores or factories, or busy with necessary household duties, from taking a few moments every day to remember the daily Mass being said by God's priest on behalf of themselves as well as for those who are present in the church.

The priest standing at the Altar to offer the Holy Sacrifice makes supplication for every member of the Parish when he says, "to all Thy people give Thy Heavenly grace." Should not all then gladly claim their share in this daily supplication by uniting themselves in spirit with their priest and those parishioners present with him? Do you, who read this now, esteem as you should this great privilege and opportunity of associating yourself with the offering of the daily Mass? Or are you content to forget altogether our Lord's Presence on the Altar each morning, and so lose the blessing which He is ready to bestow upon you as the new day begins? Surely the work of the day will be lightened, troubles and difficulties which arise be more bravely faced and endured, and temptations of every kind be more completely overcome, by this daily thought of the great Sacrifice being offered up before God, and the promised presence of our Lord and Saviour with His people!

There are many who, if they are honest with themselves and with God, would confess that they could attend Mass several times at least during the week besides Sunday. And there are none who, though unable to be present in the church, could not associate themselves each morning with their Lord in the Blessed Sacrament of the Altar, and receive His blessing upon their lives.

Let all examine themselves in this matter.

WHAT CONSTITUTES THE FULFILLING THE DUTY OF ASSISTING AT MASS.

One well instructed in the Faith knows that he must be present at Mass every Sunday under pain of committing sin, unless for some good reason he is prevented from doing so. Just how serious the sin is can be determined by the intention that keeps him away. So, from being no sin, because the person is detained at home by his own illness, or for the sake of some charitable act, it may become even mortal, as our Lord teaches in the parable of the Marriage of the King's Son.

Now, must he be present at the entire Mass, or may he fail to assist at a part, and yet fulfill the obligation? Of course, he is bound to hear the entire Mass in order to fulfill the obligation, and so if he be late, or leave before the Mass is finished, he has failed to render all that is due, and so is guilty of sin.

Some one, however, who fully accepts the teaching of Holy Church, may, on account of some uncontrollable circumstances, come into the church after the priest has begun Mass; or through illness, or for the sake of charity, may be obliged to leave before the Mass is ended: what, under such circumstances, would constitute fulfilling the obligation?

Take, for example, a man who started for church in plenty of time, and, on account of the distance, was obliged to make use of the cars, which were delayed by accident. He enters the church after the Mass is begun. Should he enter in time to hear the Mass from the beginning of the Epistle and remain throughout the rest of the service he would then fulfill the obligation. Or, supposing he were taken ill and was obliged to leave, or some urgent duty of charity forced him to leave after the Communion of the priest, then again he would fulfill the obligation.

So, if a man assists from the beginning of the Epistle until after the Communion of the priest, he can be considered to have fulfilled the obligation.

Carelessness in starting for church in plenty of time, or attending to some unimportant business or household duties, or for a woman to leave the church before the close of Mass to get breakfast two or three minutes earlier, cannot be regarded as sufficient to excuse from some guilt of sin.

Again: one does not fulfill the obligation of assisting at Mass by being present at the ending of one Mass and the beginning of another; that is to say, to be present from the Prayer of Consecration of the first Mass until the end, and to hear another from the beginning of the Mass up to the Prayer of Consecration. It is necessary to assist at least from the Epistle until after the Communion of the priest. Failing in this, it will be necessary to assist at another Mass.

These are the conclusions of excellent moral theologians, and we should be guided by these rules when examining ourselves as to whether or not we have fulfilled our obligations.

It is sometimes noticed that a person will come to Mass after the Confession has been said, and then go to the Altar to receive Holy Communion. If the rubrics mean anything, this is altogether wrong. Such a one ought not to make his Communion; for the Church orders that he first shall make the general Confession before doing so. Let him wait for another Mass.

Should a person, wishing to receive Holy Communion, enter the church in time to join in the Confession, he may make his Communion. But let him know that this does not fulfill the obligation of assisting at Mass. It is irregular; it is making his Communion out of Mass, a concession allowed only under exceptional circumstances; e. g., when a person is sick and unable to go to church, but feels the need of the Blessed Sacrament, or is prevented from some other weighty cause.

As this service is so awful and holy, we cannot be too careful of the part we have in it, or the use to which we put it. As the benefit is inestimable in its proper use, so is the danger great if there is any irreverence.

PARISH NOTES.

The rector's Bible Class for men will commence in Advent.

Bona Mass will be said on Mondays during November after Evensong.

The offering on All Saints' Day will be given, as usual, to the All Saints' Sisters.

A Requiem Mass will be said every allowable day in November at 7.30 o'clock.

The Poor Fund is sadly in need of replenishing. Remember the poor on Thanksgiving Day.

A low Mass of Requiem will be said for the repose of the soul of George Herbert Moffett, priest, on Saturday, November 16, at 9.30 A. M.

Confessions before the patronal feast may be made on the Thursday and Friday before. The hours will be posted later. The entire parish should make a devout Communion during the octave.

The Rev. Charles Fiske, rector of St. John's Church, Somerville, N. J., will preach on St. Clement's Day at 11 o'clock; and the Rev. Dr. Tomkins, rector of Holy Trinity, Philadelphia, will be the preacher at the guild service on the Sunday evening in the octave. The preacher for Sunday morning will be announced later.

The rector returned from his holiday on September 30, after a delightful sojourn of three months in Devonshire and Cornwall. During his absence the parish prospered under the care of the various curates in charge. All the clergy have now returned from their vacations, and are ready and eager for the winter's work.

On November 2, All Souls' Day, Masses will be said at 6.30, 7, and 7.30, and Solemn Mass at 9 o'clock. Any who intend to communicate at the Solemn Mass should give notice to that effect beforehand; otherwise the celebrant will make no provision for them. The Christian names of baptized persons to be remembered should be written out and handed to the clergy not later than Friday afternoon. They will be read at one Mass, which may be specified.

The Bible Classes will meet this winter immediately after the 9.15 Mass, and the Catechism at 3 o'clock, as heretofore. It is greatly to be wished that parents would make an effort to send their children to the Catechism, and also to influence the children in their immediate neighborhood to come to St. Clement's if they do not go elsewhere. We must endeavor to do the work of real missionaries in spreading the Catholic Faith in Philadelphia. We have too long held ourselves aloof in self-satisfied isolation. Those who appreciate the blessings of Catholic privileges should be anxious to have others share them.

FRANK EDWARD REMONT.

On the 15th of October Frank Edward Remont entered into rest. In the death of Mr. Remont St. Clement's loses from its midst one of God's saints. Connected with the parish for forty years, and for eighteen years a member of the choir, Mr. Remont was a familiar figure to every member of the congregation, and his simple and unaffected Christian charity made him beloved by all. Holy lives are very rare among us, and the age of saints is manifestly not the twentieth century. It is especially well for us, therefore, to mark those in whom God's Holy Spirit has brought forth the fruits of his indwelling. If one looks for the source of the beauty of our dear friend's life it will require no prolonged search. The wellspring of Mr. Remont's life was the Blessed Sacrament of the Body and Blood of Christ. Every Sunday, with but one exception, for twenty years, Mr. Remont has made his communion at St. Clement's altar. During the last few years of his life this necessitated his rising soon after 3 o'clock on Sunday morning and walking seven miles, often through snow or rain, in order to be present at the 7 o'clock Mass. Early in the dark hours on a Sunday morning in winter he would be seen going up the north side of the church on his way to the chapel of the Blessed Sacrament, where he made the preparation for his communion, and for which he had a great devotion. It was his custom to offer many intercessions for the parish and for its members, mentioning each one by name before God. About the first of last September he found it necessary to give up his connection with the parish, and sent the following letter to the rector:

"I have just learned that it will be necessary for me to withdraw from St. Clement's Church. After almost forty (though not consecutive) years' connection with our dear old parish, you can, perhaps, get some idea of the agony of grief this separation costs me. I went there in my youth, full of energy, earnestness and enthusiasm, as one of a little band to help start the Catholic movement, and soon it grew, little by little, to its present full development. I had hoped to end my days there, but God has said, "No," and to His Will I submit. The prayers I have for so long daily offered for St. Clement's, its clergy, its people in general, and its many dear saints who have done so much to aid my spiritual life, will surely bring it many future victories and blessings. I am sure, because I believe God will fulfil His promises and hear our prayers and grant us what we desire. I leave with you kind and loving remembrances for all my friends."

To the great regret of the clergy they were not informed of Mr. Remont's illness, and were not aware of his death until the day before the funeral, which was held in Mt. Moriah Cemetery. They would gladly have journeyed any distance to have administered the last sacrament of the Church to such a faithful communicant, and St. Clement's would have opened wide her doors to give him the burial which was his due.

A Solemn Mass of Requiem will be sung on November 18, the thirtieth day after his burial, at 11 o'clock.

May he rest in peace and pray for us.

NOCTNA—NOVEMBER 14-23.

Memorial for the parish (to be said daily):

Ant.—I will pour water upon him that is thirsty, and floods upon the dry ground: I will pour my Spirit upon thy seed, and my blessing upon thine offspring.

V.—O Lord, look down from heaven.

R.—Behold, and visit this vine.

Let us pray:

Almighty and everlasting God, who dost govern all things in heaven and earth, mercifully hear our supplications, and grant unto this parish all things that are needful for its spiritual welfare; schools in which to train the young in Thy faith and fear; ministers to labor in this portion of Thy vineyard; a church restored to the beauty of holiness. Strengthen and confirm the faithful; visit and relieve the sick; turn and soften the wicked; rouse the careless; recover the fallen; restore the penitent; remove all hindrances to the advancement of Thy truth; bring all to be of one heart and one mind within the fold of Thy Holy Church; to the honor and glory of Thy Holy Name; through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

ST. CLEMENT'S CHURCH, 1857-1907.

The date which we read upon the tower of St. Clement's Church reminds us that with this present year the building completes fifty years of its history. It has been a period full of momentous happenings, both in the parish and the Church at large. It would seem fitting that we should mark our coming festival in some special way and make a special thank offering to Almighty God for His marvelous loving kindness to us during half a century of parish life. Since the laying of the corner-stone of this church in 1856, and its ultimate consecration in 1864, there have been many changes wrought in the interior. We are told by an early parishioner that in those first days the altar was a small wooden table, covered on "Communion Sunday" with a white linen cloth, but at other times quite unadorned. The choir and organ were in the old west gallery, and at times of prayer the congregation rose in a body, faced the west end of the church, turning their backs to the sanctuary, and said their prayers with their heads hidden by the backs of the pews. At a little later date an altar was erected in the church, which was of dark oak and in harmony with the present sedilia, which were placed in the sanctuary at the same time. The holy place was further adorned by angel figures which are now in St. Mary's Chapel, Baltimore, and there were stained windows in the apse, two of which have been preserved in the south aisle of the church. When the surpliced choir was instituted the stalls were placed within the chancel arch, but Father Prescott built the present choir and enlarged the sanctuary to its present size. In the summer of 1879 Brother Maynard decorated the walls of the sanctuary and church, cutting his own stencils and making his own design. The sunflowers upon the ceiling were copied from those in the garden in the rear of St. John's Chapel. He was assisted in his work by three acolytes, one of which is now the clerk of the vestry.

On Friday, September 21, 1883, being the Feast of St. Matthew, the present high altar was used for the first time. The furnishings were entirely new, including the cross, candlesticks and lamps, and all were memorials. Our present festal baldachino had been made some time before, largely under the superintendence of Miss Mary F. Lex. In November of the same year the organ was removed from the west end of the church and placed in its present position. In the summer of 1885 the last two pews on either side of the broad aisle were removed and the floor replaced by tile, thus providing a passageway around the church, which was needed for processions.

From the record in the old magazines it would appear that at one time a choir screen was erected of light wood, which was removed in 1883, a new one having been promised, which was never built.

For a number of years there seems to have been no change in the interior of the church, until Christmas, 1898, when St. Katharine's altar, the gift of Miss Julia Dunlap, was erected at the head of the south aisle. It was blessed and the first Mass said on Christmas Eve. About this time the font was placed in its present position. In Holy Week, 1898, the confessionals were used for the first time. Heretofore confessions had been heard in St. John's Chapel. On the Wednesday in Holy Week of this same year the altar of Our Lady in the Crypt Chapel was dedicated and the Blessed Sacrament reserved. The altar was erected in memory of Wm. Halsey Wood. This chapel secured for St. Clement's the inestimable privilege of the continual sacramental presence of Jesus Christ in the tabernacle. In 1904 the old gallery was removed from the west end of the church, as it had become unsafe.

It will be seen from this brief record that, while much has been done to improve the interior, nothing has been done since 1854 toward preserving the building itself. For two or three years we have been endeavoring to raise a sum of money sufficient to place a new memorial altar in the sanctuary, and to redecorate the walls of the chancel and the church. It is hoped that we may be able to place the church at the disposal of the architect early next summer for the much-needed improvements.

In connection with the drawing up of the plans for the proposed renovation, it was deemed prudent to examine the building and ascertain its exact condition. The report is not encouraging. There are many repairs necessary for the preservation of the building itself, which must not be long delayed. Such items as decaying beams and crumbling walls cannot be lightly disregarded. What, then, is to be done?

Does it not seem fitting that the offertory on St. Clement's Day should be made a great thank offering for these fifty years of blessing, and that it should be devoted to the preservation of St. Clement's Church?

For many, the old building is full of most tender associations; its walls are redolent with the incense of prayer and praise; the odor of sanctity lurks in its every part; it stands as the venerable monument of the Catholic faith in the American Church, and is regarded as a place of pilgrimage by many devout souls. It must be preserved, and its preservation means prompt action. Years ago, we read in the pages of St. Clement's Magazine a crusade was organized by the late rector for the payment of the parish debt. Shall we not at this time start such a crusade for the preservation of our church building, and with this end in view will not each parishioner, during St. Clement's-tide, contribute as the Lord hath prospered him to the repair fund of the church?

SONG FOR ALL SOULS.

(November Second.)

God bless all poor souls to-day,
Those who weep or those who pray;
Those who sing or those who sigh
Underneath the roof-tree sky;
North, or east, or far, or near,
Kinsmen linked by a tear.

Thou, that art my brother, say
God bless all poor souls to-day.

God bless all poor souls to-day,
Love alone doth reign alway;
Bold or brave, or weak or worn,
Jewel-decked or tatter-torn;
Beggar, prince, or clown or king,
Weeping bird with bruised wing.

All within Love's sov'reign sway,—
God bless all poor souls to-day.

—Robert Loveman.

THE CORNFIELDS ON THE SABBATH DAY.

As I went, by chance, through the waving fields of gold one peaceful Sunday evening, I saw before me, as in a moving picture, the scene that has been painted for us in those words of the synoptic Gospels: "It came to pass that Jesus walked through the cornfields on the Sabbath day, and His disciples, being hungry, began to go forward and to pluck the ears of corn and to eat, rubbing them in their hands." Following from afar, like an unworthy disciple, I also plucked a few ears as I passed—for they were friendly fields—feeling that I should be absolved by the Lord of the Sabbath, as the first followers were, I and the "Sabbath-breaking quail" that was piping among the neighboring sheaves.

"The Holy time (was) quiet as a nun, Breathless with adoration."

And, under its influence, I hurried to catch up with that blessed company, that I also might adore; but only to find that I had been day-dreaming of the far-away and the long-ago. But soon as I looked along the golden path before me, my narrowing way seemed like some chapel's central aisle that lets you see the tabernacle, and I was already less lonely and alone, for I could conjure up some shadow of the Divine presence surrounded, as I was, by the living symbol of the Eucharist, and I wondered what, in the fulness of time, that ripened grain would be. For some of it, I said, the unfrightened birds will come, harvesting in their way, and later on the timorous legions of the fledglings of the year will eke out many a meal where the villagers no longer glean. And in thought I set apart the title of those little tax gatherers of God, remembering the Magna Charta of their liberties: "Behold the fowls of the air, they sow not, neither do they reap nor gather into barns; yet your heavenly Father feedeth them." And some, no doubt, would some day be the alms bestowed by the poor on the poorer than themselves, that are our Lord's own proxies; and I asked a blessing on that breakfast of the beggar at the door. And some, I was sure—here an ear and there an ear, undistinguished by the eye of man, but not unknown to God—would be consecrated somewhere in some morning Mass, or to be the little hosts of some ciborium hidden away in some lonely tabernacle, and lying in wait for the needy souls of men. In southern lands, in the "dim religious light" of the summer evening, I had often seen upon my homeward way the little glowworm flames that, twinkling here and there in the harvest fields, seemed like so many tiny altar lamps, which night, like dark-robed nun, had lit before the chosen ears that should some day be the Holy Eucharist, or at least be changed, by the almost priestly power of Christian charity, into the real presence of our blessed Saviour in His poor. But lo! the whispering wheat on either side, just reaching to my knees, seemed to woo them down to the worship of the Blessed Sacrament; and as I genuflected upon a step of that green altar-stair the incense of a natural prayer rose up to God from my heart's red thurible.—From "Eucharistic Elevations," by Rev. John Fitzpatrick.

PARISH NOTES.

The rector's Bible class for men will meet in the second floor of the parish building every Sunday evening at 7 o'clock, until further notice.

Contributions are asked toward the "Children's Christmas Fund." This supplies presents and entertainment for the children during the holidays.

Immediately after the service on the last two Sundays in Advent the choir, under the direction of Mr. Sears, will render Spohr's "Last Judgment."

The weekday services are now held in St. John's Chapel. The rear door of the chapel, on Cherry street, will be open for Mass and evensong, and, also, the entrance to the corridor from Appletree street.

Designs for the new altar are in progress, and it is hoped may be completed so that the work may be commenced soon after Easter. A sketch of the proposed design was exhibited at the parish tea.

Boxes are to be sent by the Woman's Auxiliary to the boys of S. Andrew's School. Sewanee, Tenn., and S. Mary's School for girls, at the same place. Contributions for these objects may be sent to the Clergy House.

On Christmas Day there will be a Mass at midnight in St. John's Chapel, and Masses at 6, 7, 8, 9.15 and Solemn Mass at 11 A. M. Those who feel constrained to make their communion at midnight are urged to keep a fast of devotion for the six hours previous.

The hours for confession before Christmas will be as follows: Father Hutchinson—Monday, 10-12, 3-5 P. M. Tuesday, 11-12, 7-9 P. M. The other clergy—Monday, 7-9 P. M.; Tuesday, 3-5, 7-9 P. M.

The rector will not be in church on Saturday, December 21, from 11-12.

The number of communions made during the past year in the parish was 7,622, an increase of 200 over last year. To these should be added the communions made at Sea Isle City, which have heretofore been counted with the rest. The number of these last has not yet been ascertained.

A red light burning before St. Katharine's Altar signifies that the Blessed Sacrament is reserved in the Tabernacle. A genuflection should be made on entering and leaving the church as an act of adoration to our Lord Jesus Christ, really and objectively present under the Sacramental veils.

It is with regret that we announce the resignation of Mr. Harry Johnson as sexton of St. Clement's. He has held his position for a number of years, and has been uniformly courteous and considerate to every one. He will be missed by all, and we tender him our heartiest wishes for success in his new work.

On Sundays pews will be reserved by the ushers until the commencement of the Introit. On great feasts sittings will be reserved until ten minutes before the commencement of the service. Pew holders desiring to have their sittings held longer on these days will confer a favor by informing the clergy.

During Advent the Blessed Sacrament will be reserved at St. Katharine's altar on weekdays, excepting at those times when the church is being put in order. It is to be hoped that many will avail themselves of this opportunity for intercession before the Tabernacle. If all respond to the appeal of the Sacramental Presence of our Lord, the Christmas feast will be abundantly blessed.

Intercessions are still said with the Litany, every Friday at noon in St. John's Chapel. The attendance is not as large as it might be. Let each one endeavor to come to this service weekly, and bring some one else. We ought to have the chapel filled. The parishioners are asked to send subjects for intercession and the names of persons to be prayed for.

A new cross for the gospel procession was blessed on St. Clement's eve. The cross is of ivory, mounted in brass, with the figure in silver. The staff is of oak, with brass mountings. This was purchased with a fund made up by the accumulation of small memorial gifts of money, and was specially designed and executed by Gorham, of New York. It will be used at all the High Masses for the procession of the gospel, and on the great feasts will be carried in the solemn procession.

For the information of those who may be contemplating gifts to the church, we print a list of articles that are needed, and special funds that should be increased:

The endowment fund.
The repair fund.
The restoration fund (for restoring the nave).
Rug for the altar steps in chapel.
For St. John's altar: Cruets, lavabo and pitcher, sanctus bell, linen.
New curtains for confessionals in church.
Piano for choir room.
Restoration and framing of picture of "The Last Supper."
Kneeling cushions for St. John's Chapel.

VIRGINIA GRAY HUTCHINSON

Every life has its message for the world. To us, Virginia Hutchinson seems to have been the embodiment of Christian joy. She brought with her always the impression of splendid vitality, of glad enjoyment of life, of triumphant cheerfulness. And underlying all the brightness of disposition there was a deep perception of spiritual things and an entire devotion to our Blessed Lord, which found its expression in a rare sweetness and sympathy. Hers was that lightness of heart that is the portion of souls who have found the "hidden treasure" and exult in the knowledge of Jesus Christ.

From her early childhood a member of the parish, she had won its heart, and St. Clement's people truly mourn her loss, while they rejoice at her release from the bondage of this world. Fortified in the early days of her illness by the Holy Oil, and living in frequent communion with our Lord, Who came to her weekly in the Blessed Sacrament, she suddenly fell asleep on the 20th of November. May she find abundant refreshment and light in the nearer presence of her Lord and Redeemer.

ST. CLEMENT'S TIDE, 1907.

It seems to be the consensus of opinion that the parish festival this year was one of the happiest that we have celebrated for a long time. The Novena was kept with much more devotion than in the past, numbers visited the Blessed Sacrament, and the result was made evident in an increased number of communions and in the largely attended services. First Vespers were sung on Friday evening in St. John's Chapel by Father Quin. The new altar was adorned with the candlesticks that were in the old chapel, and which will be replaced eventually by a set that have been especially designed and will be memorials. The chapel was filled, and Mr. Sears very kindly presided at the organ and permitted the choir boys to assist in the singing.

On Saturday morning the early Masses was well attended, and the number of communions was slightly larger than last year. At the Solemn High Mass every seat in the church was taken, and there were people kneeling in the aisles. In this connection, it was pleasant to note the spirit of Christian hospitality which everywhere prevailed. St. Clement's people seemed happy that others came to rejoice with them in their feast. Father Quin was the celebrant of the High Mass, with Father Hutchinson and Father Ward as deacon and sub-deacon. The preacher was the Rev. Charles Fiske, of Somerville, N. J., who gave a most helpful sermon on the "Proper Use of a Christian Church." The music was superbly rendered by the choir, with Messrs. Dundas and Holtz and Master Bert Poland as soloists. The choir was assisted by twenty members from the Philadelphia Orchestra. Mr. Sears directed the orchestra and choir, while Mr. Fry, the organist of Holy Trinity Chapel, presided at the organ. Too much praise cannot be accorded to Mr. Sears for his work. The parish should consider itself fortunate in the possession of an organist of such ability and a choir that is willing to work so arduously for the glory of God. On Sunday, in spite of the inclement weather, there were large communions, and a good congregation at High Mass. Father Powell, of the Society of St. John the Evangelist, preached on the "Invocation of Saints." The guild service was most inspiring. The night was very stormy, but it did not prevent the attendance of another large congregation, and nearly every member of the Sodality took part in the procession. Dr. Tomkins, of Holy Trinity Parish, preached an admirable sermon, and the service closed with a solemn Te Deum sung before the altar, with an accompaniment of horns and tympani.

On Tuesday night the parish tea was held, after a lapse of two years. There was a large gathering in the parish hall, and the building was open for inspection. The following ladies presided at the tables: Miss Kates, Mrs. Boudinot, Mrs. Lea, Mrs. Woodruff, Mrs. Brock, Miss Lawson and Mrs. Lukens. Mrs. Hackenberger kindly gave two selections on the saxaphone. One feels that in our recent festival God has been pleased to bless us most abundantly, and we should show our thankfulness by the fruit of good living.

THE PARISH BUILDING

On Thursday, November 21, being the Feast of the Presentation of the Blessed Virgin Mary, the new parish house was blessed. The ceremonies were of the simplest character possible. The Bishop Coadjutor arrived at half-past 10 o'clock, and with the clergy and wardens, went quietly through the building, blessing each room and consecrating the Chapel altar. A low Mass was celebrated immediately afterward. St. John's Chapel has now been properly consecrated and set apart by episcopal authority, and in consequence possesses the same sacred character as the church, which was not the case with the old chapel. The building proves to be most satisfactory, and all are rejoicing in the increased facilities for work. The gymnasium will prove of especial value for our young people. Definite nights have been set apart for its use, and on Thursday nights it will be given up to the young women and girls of the parish.

ACKNOWLEDGMENT.

The Clergy desire to express their sincere appreciation of the kindness shown them by many of the parishioners during the festival.

THE GENERAL CONVENTION.

The General Convention has come to an end, and we most heartily thank God that it had not a longer session. Absolutely nothing seems to have been accomplished, and we breathe a sigh of relief as we settle down to three more years of undisturbed tranquillity, so far as church legislation is concerned. It is a humiliating spectacle for any loyal Catholic—this triennial assemblage of the Church. There is so much foolish and sentimental twaddle indulged in by lay members who are filled with an exaggerated sense of their own importance and feel qualified to give dogmatic statements concerning the mysteries of the faith, and to talk wildly upon any subject that may be presented. An illustration of the extremes to which these self-sufficient laymen can venture is furnished us by recent numbers of The Church Standard, in which a certain delegate to the convention gives his individual opinion concerning the doings of the august body of which he is a member, and delivers his utterances with an exaggeration of the "ego" which makes it not unlike a "bull" emanating from the Holy See itself, filled with a cheap wit that holds nothing sacred, and displaying no apparent knowledge of the principles upon which the Church is founded. If only our laymen would content themselves with saying their prayers, and would cease to regard the Church as a fair field for exhibiting their political ability, we might hope for great results in the future. Until such a happy condition prevails, it is to be feared that there will be but little advancement along spiritual lines. It is likewise discouraging to find certain members of the "upper house" who have watered down their former Catholicity to suit the "present expediency," endeavoring to render it increasingly difficult to provide dying souls with the viaticum. We thank God most heartily that He has, in His love, saved the Church from the grievous mistake of separating herself still further from primitive Catholicity, and from the other branches of the Church, by restricting or forbidding the reservation of the Blessed Sacrament.

Yet, notwithstanding present discouragement, the Church is God's, not man's. She is the Bride of Jesus Christ. She does not depend for her life and power upon individual bishops or conceited laymen. She lives by the Sacramental Life of her Divine Head, and the gates of hell shall not prevail against her. Strong in this faith, we look forward to the next three years realizing that they must be years of increasing prayer, devotion and self-sacrifice. And humbly trusting that out of all the laxity and weakness and the dreadful subserviency to worldly riches, God will in His own good time bring forth a "glorious Church without spot or wrinkle or any such thing."

THE CONCEPTION OF THE BLESSED VIRGIN MARY.

December 8.

In this Advent season we begin to have a glimmering of the approach of the Incarnate Son of God, whose advent had been long expected and desired. Prophecies, types, revelations, and foreshadowings of the Coming One had been long given; age after age had passed away, and still no signs appeared of the Deliverer of the Chosen People. The hatred between the seed of the Woman and the seed of the Serpent had continued for generation after generation. The people of Israel—that nation which Abraham saw in prophetic reality as the possessors of Canaan—had long been the inhabitants of the Land of Promise, had been in captivity in Babylon, and again restored to their adopted home. The nation was now in subjection to a Proconsul, who exacted his yearly tribute for the Cæsars. The people had begun to hope for a temporal deliverer who would rescue them from bondage. But their real Deliverer was to be no temporal one, rescuing them from captivity and tribute. That day was now gone. Their darkness, wanderings, captivities and bondage were not material—those of the nation; they were moral and spiritual, extending to the depths of their very souls, in the corruptions of the nation's ways.

The Conception of Mary was like the dawning of the early day, breaking stilly upon the slumberer, in the midst of the blackest darkness of the long-drawn night. It was like the first genial blowing of the springtide wind, when men feel the approach of warmth after the fogs and mists of dreary winter. In the time of renovation woman—the first to fall—was the first to rise, a second Mother of the Human Race. We may adopt the metaphor of the wise man, and say of Mary, that she was among the daughters of Eve "as the lily among thorns." She was as "a garden enclosed," which the serpent could not enter, "a spring shut up, a fountain sealed," which Satan could not defile. Like the Throne and Tabernacle of Solomon, and the Ark of the Testament, she contained all that there was of the New Law, which claims our highest, deepest reverence. Jesus, the Saviour, called her not a servant in whom He gloried; she was more. She could say with Isaiah, "The Lord hath called me from the womb; from the bowels of my mother hath He made mention of my name."

The Festival of the Conception of the Blessed Virgin Mary has been observed from very ancient times in Eastern Christendom, but its observance in the West is of later institution. The Church of England honors the Conception of Mary, as she does also her nativity, and, by appointing these festivals in her honor, shows that she at least is far from showing that disregard, not to say contempt, which much of our popular teaching has contrived to fasten upon her holy name. Our Church would rather lead us to think of the graces and virtues with which the Holy Virgin must have been filled, so that she was worthy to be the Temple of the Incarnate God. From her very Conception, she was marked out as the Mother of the Eternal: the Lord possessed her in the beginning of His way, "before His works of old."

Let us learn by the Festival of the Conception to thank God for the Incarnation of His Son Jesus Christ our Lord, by whom we have been redeemed and brought back to God; reverencing also the memory of His mother, by whom He was pleased to enter the world; remembering that, though she was a creature, she was nearer to the Eternal Son than any of us, inasmuch as for a period she was the very shrine of the Incarnate One; to whom, with the Father and the Holy Spirit, be all glory and worship throughout the ages. Amen. —Selected.

ST NICOLAS, BISHOP OF MYRA.

December 5.

One of the few Saints, whose name is in all the Kalendars, whose praise is in all the churches, the Patron of little children, of friendless maidens; the Saint of the people, of the oppressed, of strangers; the "Santa Claus" of the children; chief Patron of Russia; with more churches dedicated to him than any Saint in the Kalendar. In England there is scarcely a town without a church dedicated to his name.

St. John Chrysostom calls him "Father of the friendless, and the standard of the faith." St. Peter Damian, "The joy of the aged, the glory of the young, the light of Priests."

Justinian built a church under his invocation at Constantinople, A.D. 560, two hundred years after his death.

Such a memory of graciousness, gentleness, insight into sin and sorrow, and power to succor, has that life shed forth, bearing witness to the presence of a real star at the heart of the prismatic halo of quaint, wild legend which surrounds it. For, unfortunately, we have little trustworthy information concerning the probably most popular Saint in Christendom. All we can say for certain is that he was born somewhere about the beginning of the fourth century, at Patara, a town of Lycia, in Asia Minor; that he became Bishop of Myra, the capital of the province, a city only three miles from his birthplace; that there he spent his life, and that there he was buried. His remains reposed at Myra until the eleventh century. But he was often called St. Nicolas of Bari, on account of the translation of his body from Myra to Bari, in the Neapolitan territory, by a daring band of Italian sailors, after Mohammedanism had swept over Asia. They landed at Bari, on May 9, 1087, with their sacred treasure, which was deposited by the Archbishop in the Church of St. Stephen.

St. Nicolas is said to have been imprisoned and tortured in the persecutions under Diocletian and Maximin, and afterwards to have been among the Confessors who appeared with their glorious scars at the Council of Nicæ.

There is a story told of his rushing to the place of execution to deliver two innocent men, who had been unjustly condemned to death. Finding the victims on their knees, their eyes bandaged, ready to receive the fatal blow, St. Nicolas stopped the executioner, took away his sword, sent for the Judge, reproved him for his mercenary cruelty, in virtue of his authority as Bishop reversed the sentence, and sent the men to their homes free and rejoicing.

And so this gracious vision of the protector of the weak and the oppressed shone on the toiling people through the strong mediæval oppression and tumult and of the rule of the strongest. East and West, North and South recognized in St. Nicolas the disciple and reflection of Him who went about doing good.—Selected.

PARISH NOTES.

A friend has presented St. Mary's Guild with a supply of cups and saucers.

A silver lavabo has been presented for St. John's Chapel and a rug to lie before the prayer desk.

The box for St. Andrew's School has been sent to Fr. Hughson, but the barrel for St. Mary's School has not yet been filled. We would be glad for further contributions in the way of clothing or canned goods.

The annual turkey supper will take place on January 9. This is the first one to be held in the new building. The dinner for St. Vincent's Guild will be given on St. Vincent's night, January 22, at 7 o'clock. The Guild of the Holy Child will hold its festival on Saturday, January 11.

On January 8, at 3.30 P. M., Miss Byerly, of St. Hilda's School, Wuchang, will address the Woman's Auxiliary in the parish hall. Miss Byerly worked for some time with our Sisters in Baltimore, and is an associate of All Saints' Community. It is to be hoped that she may receive a warm welcome from St. Clement's people, and all the women of the parish are urged to attend the meeting.

ELLIS HORNOR YARNALL.

St. Clement's has suffered much in the last few years through the death of many of the old members of the parish. On December 18 Ellis Hornor Yarnall entered into rest. He had been for many years connected with St. Clement's, and was for some time a member of the vestry. Uncompromising in his churchmanship, Mr. Yarnall was a staunch Catholic, and was a true defender of the Faith in the early history of the parish. Devout in his Christian life, and sincere and straightforward in his dealings with others, he was respected by all who knew him. His illness was of brief duration, and his death came as a surprise to many. May he rest in peace.

CHRISTMASTIDE.

The Feast of Christmas began with First Vespers in St. John's Chapel at 8, sung by Fr. Quin.

The Midnight Mass was well attended, and in its simplicity, accompanied by the Christmas hymns, it took the thoughts of those who worshipped and sang back to that first early Christmas morning, when the "watchful shepherds heard the good tidings of great joy" brought by the angels who sang in the skies over Bethlehem, and heralded the birth of man's Saviour and Redeemer.

A large number of communions was made at the Masses at 6, 7, 8, and 9.15.

The choir sang Schubert in G for the Solemn Mass at 11.

On the Sunday after Christmas the music was repeated, and after Solemn Evensong there was a procession, ending with Solemn Te Deum.

On the evening of St. Stephen's Day, the Festival of the Catechism and Bible Classes was held in the parish hall. The "Christmas Mystery," which was given by the children two years ago, was repeated at this time. The various parts were carefully prepared, and very well taken. Presents were given out afterwards.

THE CHILDREN'S FESTIVAL.

On Thursday, the Feast of St. Stephen, the children had their Christmas tree and festival.

Before the presents were given the children performed Fr. Field's mystery play, which was given two years ago. A new stage was put up in the parish hall, and the ladies of the parish were most kind in making the curtains and in preparing both the children and their costumes for the play.

Masie Bambach represented St. Elizabeth, and Elizabeth Fortune St. Mary the Virgin.

Alfred Johnson was St. Gabriel and Herbert Daniels was St. Joseph.

The three magi were Horace Moore, Walter Fairbanks and Bayard Goodwin.

Charles Johnson was King Herod, and his soldiers were Samuel Kay, James McLaughlin, Thomas Mulholland and Frank Dean.

William Kay, William McLaughlin and Charles Fortune were the shepherds, the angels being Kenneth Haskins, Alfred Cody, Patricius Daly, Francis McLaughlin and Russell Copstick.

Harry Johnson and Charles Decker were the curtain raisers.

The play went off very well. It was rather hard getting used to the new stage, and many ways of improvement have presented themselves for future productions. Too much praise cannot be given the ladies for their most kind and untiring help.

THE CRIB.

Not many people who kneel before the Crib in the church realize that we owe to the devotion of St. Francis of Assisi what has become throughout the world one of the most tender associations of the Christmastide.

The Christmas tree, with its home associations; the carols, dear to young and old, have not so much reality to most of us as the Crib, with its little plaster figures and its straw and little lights.

St. Francis desired above all things to teach his people the love of God in becoming man for us. So, in order to bring before people's minds the reality of the Incarnation, in the year 1223 he had a rustic manger prepared in the church. It was fitted up as any stable in the country round about, with a live ox and ass, to convey the idea that the Incarnation is as real for us to-day as it was when our Lord was born.

St. Francis was a deacon, and he sang the Holy Gospel at the Midnight Mass. After the Mass was over St. Francis and the friars went to the manger and stood there singing songs of the Incarnation, while multitudes of people came to receive from the crude representation of the miracle of the Incarnation a renewal of their faith. We can see the church lit up by the torches of those who came to visit the manger; their faces lit with new love for the Divine Child and His pure Mother.

From that time to this the custom has grown of having the Crèche in almost every church of Catholic Christendom. In some places infinite care and ingenuity make the Christmas manger a most wonderful piece of art, while in others a little straw and a few cheap figures of plaster tell the story of the love and humility of the Incarnation. There is something about the rudeness and lack of show indeed that seems to bring home to our hearts, more than the mere ornate representations, the fact that when He who while on earth had nowhere to lay His head met His first rebuff from the world at His Birth, when there was "no room for them in the inn."

But in whatever way it is represented it seems to bring home to our minds more perhaps than hearing the story read, more than any picture of the Nativity, the graciousness and reality of Our Lord's becoming Man for us.

THE PRESENT DISTRESS!

It is the tendency of human nature to minimize past distresses and exaggerate present evils, to throw a halo of romance about the past and to be profoundly discouraged by the present. We must take account of this tendency if we would form any calm judgment of the conditions in the Church today.

The spirit of discouragement seems to be in the air. Many Catholic Churchmen are asking in agitated tones what is to become of the Church. Some express their opinion that the situation is hopeless, others that it is bad, but not so bad as it might be; others shake their heads ominously and say nothing, which is by far the better policy usually.

One must frankly acknowledge that certain results of the present Convention are not encouraging, but surely we can conceive of a state of things far worse. The Convention might have acknowledged sectarian orders, or have given permission in no uncertain language to Protestant ministers to occupy our pulpits; it might have forbidden the reservation of the Blessed Sacrament, or even have denied an article of the Faith. But it did none of these things.

As a matter of fact, the Convention did pass an amendment to Canon 19, whereby permission is given to the bishop of a diocese to allow Christian men not ministers of this Church to deliver addresses in church on special occasions. Of course, this was a compromise. The amendment as it came up from the lower house was a practical acknowledgment of the sectarian ministers. In order to defeat this more radical measure, some of the bishops thought it expedient to present a milder "amendment to the amendment." Of course, they did not clearly see where the "amended amendment" would land them, and they did not foresee the sectarian ministers preaching and officiating in Conshohocken, nor the Campbellite preacher at High Mass in a Western diocese, nor the Unitarian minister in the church at Winchester, Mass. The "prophetic office" having fallen into disrepute among us, and being in this present generation apparently a gift bestowed exclusively on sectarians, our Reverend Fathers in God were unable in this instance to discern the signs of the times. Neither did they realize the burden they were placing on their own shoulders nor the seed of discord they were sowing among themselves. It will be interesting, and no doubt amusing, as time goes on to observe the action of individual bishops in the matter of the so-called open pulpit and the various interpretations of the term "Christian man." In Massachusetts it may mean a Unitarian, in Utah an elder in the "Church of Jesus Christ of the Latter-day Saints," while in Fond du Lac it will mean a person baptized with water in the name of the Blessed Trinity.

We may have an Eddyite, a Unitarian, a Universalist, and a Roman Catholic, each exercising the "prophetic office" in Albany Cathedral, and afterwards kneeling side by side at the altar rail, receiving the Holy Communion from the hands of the Bishop. The situation we have no doubt will be sufficiently farcical in many instances, and it is a brave man indeed who is not afraid of ridicule. Just at present a good many of our separated brethren are inclined to laugh; at least, those among them who are not offended at what they choose to consider an insult. If they will only laugh long and loud enough the canon will doubtless be repealed at the next Convention. In the meantime Catholics need not be panic-stricken. This is not the first time that the Church has been confronted by perplexing problems or has suffered from foolish lawmaking and the silly whims and prejudices of her members. If our present distress has the effect of bringing Catholic-minded clergy and laity closer together, and causing them to stand shoulder to shoulder, laying aside stupid jealousy and parochialism, the much-heralded amendment will have wrought a miracle. This is a time when the greatest patience is needed, and clear, sane judgment as well. Let us avoid controversy and excitement. Let us to prayer! For the next three years let leagues of intercession be formed in the various parishes, let Masses be frequently offered for the guidance and protection of the Church. Let us pray especially for the next General Convention. Let us beseech God, who alone can bring good out of evil, to deliver us in these troublous times, and to overrule for good the ill-considered utterances of bishops, priests and laymen. Above all, let us be striving to live more earnest Christian lives, lives that may bear witness to the sacramental life within our souls and to the truth of the Catholic Faith.

LETTERS OF A DIOCESAN.

I.

Episcopal Residence,
Compromise, P. E., Jan. 1, 1908.

To the Rev. B. Easy Jones,
Church of Perpetual Elocution,
Milk and Water Streets.

My Very Dear Brother: I am in receipt of your letter, and hasten to grant the desired license. There is, of course, no objection to your inviting Mrs. Hazy to speak from your pulpit on the occasion of your grand Hodge Podge service. This great Church of ours must be truly comprehensive if it is to fulfill its mission as the Church of the English-speaking race. It must be as universal as Truth itself, and must always be ready to acknowledge its own providential ignorance. The search for Truth is never-ending, and the Protestant Episcopal Church must be eager to welcome information from any quarter and to learn from any source what she has never yet been able to discover for herself. At present it would seem, as you say so wisely, that Christian Science is a true light in the darkness, if one can judge (as one must in this modern world of ours) by the number of its adherents and the wealth that it possesses.

Your points concerning the "open pulpit" I most heartily indorse. The amendment was evidently intended to give the Bishops a free rein to do anything that might commend itself to their judgment. It was most certainly not "restrictive" for the episcopate.

As you say, the word "men" must be taken in its broader sense, and must refer to the human race in general. It would be exceedingly narrow to press the point that no women were to deliver addresses from our pulpits. We have outgrown St. Paul in these more enlightened days.

Your comment on the prophetic office is admirable also. There can be no question that under the old covenant women were allowed to prophesy. Deborah and Miriam are cases in point. As, therefore, the Church is anxious to recognize the prophetic office more generally, it would seem quite within the spirit of the canon to permit women to occupy our pulpits, and, in fact, would be unscriptural to forbid it.

May I take this ocasion to commend most heartily your work in your present parish. I am told that the other denominations in your vicinity, Methodists, Baptists, and even Unitarians, have come to feel that there is after all no definite principle for which our Church stands. This is a great triumph.

While I am not quite ready to indorse your suggestion that for a time you relinquish the exercise of the prophetic office, and open your pulpit regularly to the ministers of various denominations, I would go very far toward recommending it. It would do much to widen the Church's influence, and would give you time and opportunity for your more priestly ministrations. I congratulate you upon the growth of the Creedless Club for Men, and on the large amount you have raised for the diocesan fund.

I remain, my dear Jones,

Your friend and Bishop,

I. N. Dotage.

PARISH NOTES.

The Holy Cross monthly meeting will be held at 7.30 instead of 8 o'clock this month.

Altar vases should have been included in the list of articles needed for St. John's Chapel. A box for altar breads has been promised.

The December offering of the Sunday School for the Diocesan Mission Fund was $10; for the Washington Chapter, Valley Forge, $7.

Two new notice boards have been placed in the church corridor. They are on standards of wrought iron, and present a very neat appearance.

Persons coming to the church for their confessions are asked to kneel in front of the confessional they intend to use. This will avoid much confusion, especially before the great feasts.

We most heartily endorse the excellent editorial of The Church Standard under date of January 25, entitled "Why Churchmen Go to Rome," and recommend its perusal by our readers.

The Blessed Sacrament will be reserved permanently on St. Catherine's altar, excepting on Sundays.

Any who may be willing to sing at evensong during Lent are asked to send their names to the rector.

The choir boys, under the protection of Father Quin and Mr. Sears, enjoyed a theatre party on January 21. The annual dinner of choir men was held on the 23d, and St. Vincent's Guild dinner on the 22d.

Candles will be blessed as usual before the 7 o'clock Mass on the Feast of the Purification. As Candlemas falls upon Sunday this year, there will be a solemn procession before the High Mass and at evensong.

Two photographs have been presented to the parish by an interested friend, one of the former high altar and one of the old garden before the erection of the present clergy house. Both pictures will be hung in the parish hall.

THE CHRISTMAS SUPPER.

On Thursday, January 9, the mothers' Christmas supper was held in the parish hall. The various tables arranged about the hall presented a most inviting appearance, and at 8 o'clock a very goodly number sat down to enjoy the turkey and other good things which were bountifully provided.

After supper several friends kindly contributed a programme of music and recitations, which was greatly appreciated.

CATECHISM FETE

On Sunday in the octave of the Epiphany the Sunday School held the Epiphany fete in the church. Three of the girls of the Great Catechism recited the Gospel of the feast; then followed a recitation of the prophecies of the coming and work of Christ by the boys, and the fulfillments by the girls of the Little Catechism. Six members of the Great Catechism recited billets which explained the meaning of the feast. After the homily given by the rector, three boys, representing the wise men, went to the altar steps to receive light from a candle, which represented our Lord in Bethlehem, and then passed down the aisle, giving light to children, to whom candles had been distributed, and they in turn passed the light on to those inside the pews, thus showing how the knowledge of Christ and the good news of the Gospel are spread throughout the world. After all had their candles lighted there was a solemn procession about the church. Returning to their seats, the candles were extinguished and the school was dismissed with the benediction of the rector.

ST. KATHARINE'S GUILD

St. Katharine's Guild held their holiday party on New Year's night in the parish hall. Twenty-three of the members were present, beside the associates. The evening was spent in dancing, and during the intermission refreshments were served. In the cake Nelly Finney found the ring, Masie Bambach the thimble and Christine Boyle the dime. The associates had made chrysanthemums of paper, in which were pinned the names of saints and virtues. The chaplain was the favored one in this lottery in drawing the name of St. Katharine, thereby winning the picture of the saint.

THE GUILD OF THE HOLY CHILD.

At 2.30 on the Saturday in the octave of the Epiphany the Guild of the Holy Child had its Christmas celebration.

The tables were laid in the parish hall. The children assembled around the piano and marched to their places singing a carol. Father Hutchinson and Father Ward were guests of the guild. As usual, great commotion was caused by finding the ring, the thimble and the 10-cent piece in the cake.

At the table Father Hutchinson presented the usual silver crucifix for good attendance at Mass and Guild to Anna Louise Forrester, After we left the tables the children were presented with their guild gifts. The whole party was very pleasant indeed.

ST. NICHOLAS' GUILD.

St. Nicholas' Guild had its Christmas party Saturday in the octave at 3 in the afternoon. The associates had provided presents for all the boys, and ice cream and cake. Snapping bon-bons was a great feature of the occasion, and added much to the merriment. The boys all had a very good time, and the afternoon passed delightfully.

THE WOMAN'S AUXILIARY.

On the 8th of January a very interesting address was given in the parish hall by Miss Byerly, of St. Hilda's School, Wuchang, China. Miss Byerly brought with her a number of photographs to illustrate her subject, and also some specimens of Chinese art and two Buddhist idols, one of which she had obtained personally from a Chinese temple. Her account of a visit to a lady of rank in Wuchang was most entertaining, and the large number of ladies who were present thoroughly enjoyed the afternoon. Miss Byerly spoke a second time at the Christmas dinner, and interested every one. On the first Wednesday in February Miss Grace Lindley will address the auxiliary at 4 P. M. Miss Lindley is at present conducting a Thursday Bible class at the Church House. There should be greater interest manifested in the work of the Auxiliary by the women of the parish. The meetings are held the first and third Wednesdays of each month, in the parish building, at 3.30 in the afternoon. Will not those who have not attended the meetings endeavor to be present on February 5?

THE ANGELUS.

As several persons have asked for the correct form of the prayer called the Angelus, it is printed here:

At 6 o'clock, 12 and 6 is said as follows:

1. The angel of the Lord announced unto Mary, and she conceived of the Holy Ghost.

Hail, Mary, full of grace, the Lord is with thee; blessed art thou among women, and blessed is the fruit of thy womb, Jesus.

Holy Mary, Mother of God, pray for us sinners now and at the hour of our death.

2. Behold the handmaid of the Lord; be it unto me according to Thy word.

Hail, Mary, etc.

3. And the Word was made Flesh, and dwelt among us.

Hail, Mary, etc.

We beseech Thee, O Lord, pour Thy grace into our hearts; that, as we have known the Incarnation of Thy Son, Jesus Christ, by the message of an angel, so by His cross and passion we may be brought unto the glory of His resurrection through the same Jesus Christ, our Lord. Amen.

THE PURIFICATION.

FEBRUARY 2.

The Feast of the Purification is probably the first festival instituted in memory of our Lady. It is referred to by Cyril of Alexandria and by others of very early date. The epistle and gospel now in use is the same as that appointed for it in the lectionary of St. Jerome, and the germ of the present collect is found in the Sacramentary of Gelasius. It was at first observed on the 14th of January, until the reign of Justinian, A. D. 542, but in the Calendar of St. Jerome it precedes the feast of St. Agatha (February 5).

In the popular name, "Candlemas," is perpetuated the memory of a very ancient observance. It was formerly the custom of the faithful to walk in procession on this feast, bearing lighted tapers. Alcuin says (A. D. 790): "The whole multitude of the city, collecting together, devoutly celebrate the solemnity of the Mass, bearing a vast number of wax lights, and no one enters any public place in the city without a taper in his hand."

St. Bernard (A. D. 1153) gives the following description: "We go in procession, two by two, carrying candles in our hands which are lighted, not at a common fire, but at a fire first blessed in church by the Bishop. They that go out first return last, and in the way we sing, 'Great is the glory of the Lord.' We go two by two in commendation of charity and a social life, for so our Saviour sent out His disciples. We carry lights in our hands: first, to signify that our light should shine before men; secondly, this we do this day especially in memory of the Wise Virgins (of whom this blessed Virgin is the chief) that went to meet their Lord with their lamps lit and burning. And from this usage and the many lights set up in church this day, it is called Candelaria or Candlemas. Because our works should all be done in the holy fire of charity, therefore the candles are lit with holy fire. They that go out first return last, to teach humility, 'in honor preferring one another.' Because God loveth a cheerful giver, therefore we sing in the way. The procession itself is to teach us that we should not stand idle in the way of life, but 'go from strength to strength,' not looking back at that which is behind, but reaching forward to that which is before."

The festival is placed forty days after Christmas, this being the interval directed by the Jewish law. It was on this day St. Simeon uttered the Nunc Dimittis and the Blessed Virgin first learned that she was to share in the Passion of her Son.

The submission of the Blessed Virgin to the ceremony of purification, and of her Divine Son to that of presentation in the temple, were each an illustration of the perfect humiliation of our Lord to the likeness of sinful man.

In the price of redemption there was a typical meaning, finding now for the first time its true signification. The two turtle doves, or young pigeons, were expressive of lowliness at all times, as offerings of the poor, but in the offering of one by fire and the eating of the other by the priest, or those who offered it, are now to be seen types of Christ offering Himself for sin, and also giving Himself to be the spiritual food and sustenance of His people.

Although the English Church, at the time of the Reformation, was foolish enough to change nearly all the collects for Saints' Day, the original collects for the Purification and the Annunciation were retained. The first title of this feast as found in the Prayer Book was inserted by Bishop Cosin, in 1661.

PARISH NOTES.

A rug has been presented for the guild room in which St. Andrew's Brotherhood holds its meetings.

As has been our custom, the blessing of the ashes on Ash Wednesday will take place before the 6.30 Mass, and will be imposed before each succeeding Mass.

During Lent the Guild of the Holy Cross will hold its meetings on Wednesday evenings. The Guild office will be sung on the first Friday of the month, as usual, at 7.30 P. M.

The Rev. Ernest Breakwell, an English priest, under the Bishop of Stepney, is expected to preach on Good Friday. Father Breakwell was in charge of a parish in Poplar, in the East End of London, and is a warm friend of Father Waggett.

Altar vases have been promised for St. John's Chapel, and a new missal has been given as well. The book is handsomely bound in red morocco, and contains the proper collects, epistles and gospels for black-letter days.

The fiscal year of the parish will commence March 25th. All pew rents and pledges should be paid by March 24th, as the books of the accounting warden close on that day. The pledge envelopes will be ready for distribution on Sunday, March 22d.

The Parish Retreat will be held as usual on Ash Wednesday. Addresses will be made at 10, 12 and 3, and the retreat will close at Evensong. For those who for any reason are unable to keep the strict fast, coffee and rolls will be provided in the parish hall after the noon address.

The Bishop of the Diocese has appointed April 28th for his annual visitation. The confirmation classes will meet as follows: Men, Wednesday evenings, at 8 P. M., in the Clergy House; Boys, to be announced; Women, Thursdays, 7.30 P. M., at the Mission House; Girls, Thursdays, at 4 P. M., at the Mission House.

On Wednesday afternoons during Lent the rector purposes giving a series of conferences on missions. The meetings will be held in the parish hall at 4 o'clock, and the members of the parish are urged to attend them. The general subject will be "The Foundation Principles of Mission Work." The first conference will be given on Wednesday, March 11th.

Miss Grace Lindley, of Englewood, N. J., gave a helpful address before the Woman's Auxiliary on Wednesday, February 5th. At this meeting it was voted to send $50 a year to Bishop Osborne, to be applied by him to some special need in his diocese. A sufficient sum has been raised for the purchase of a sewing machine for St. Kelda's School, Wuchang, China.

The list of Lenten services will be ready by Quinquagesima. During Lent there will be an additional Mass at 6.30 A. M., Sundays excepted. There will be an address after the 9.30 mass on Tuesdays and Thursdays, and also at Evensong on Mondays and Wednesdays. A short address will be made at the Intercession on Friday noon, and a sermon, followed by the Stations of the Cross, on Friday evening.

The annual collection for missions will be taken on Quinquagesima Sunday, March 1st. The congregation are asked to make special offerings for Bishop Osborne's work, Father Wood's work in Wuchang, and St. Andrew's Mission, Sewanee, Tenn. Offerings should be placed in envelopes and marked as desired. The unassigned collection will be sent to some Catholic work at the rector's discretion. It is hoped that the offering will be a generous one.

LENTEN PREPARATION.

The holy season of Lent is now at hand. With what dispositions and with what resolutions of self-denial are we to enter into it?

Before we make out our rule, let as first consider the state of the Church at large. Do we not find in it much disturbance? Not only is there great laxity of life, but we see that people are losing their grasp on the great fundamentals of the faith. Laxity of life and error in belief go hand in hand; where you find the one, you find the other also.

Who is responsible for this sad state of affairs? You will say, and rightly too, the fault lies with the priests. But that is only partly true; for though the priests are the pastors and are to show the people the pattern life, yet the people have their share of the responsibility and exert an influence upon the priests. We are all members of the same body, the Church; and what affects one affects all.

Do we wish these party strifes to end, peace to be restored and the pure doctrine to be preached from our pulpits? Then we all must do our part to bring about this greatly desired result.

Lent is the most opportune season to accomplish this purpose. If we desire purity of doctrine and teaching, it is requisite that there be strictness of living. When we are willing to deny ourselves many things which at first seem harmless, for the purpose of strengthening the will and building up character, then may we expect true religion to flourish.

Let us then not be afraid to lead a strict life during Lent. Let us be willing to put a curb upon our pleasures and selfish indulgences. Let us be glad to endure some suffering for our Lord.

Whatever our rule may be, whether it demands little or much, let it be with the intention that it is to bring us into a closer and more vital relation to our Lord; that what we do is done for His glory alone. If our rule is irksome, and we are longing for the coming of Easter Day, that we may once more become thoughtless and self-indulgent, we may be sure that our intention to keep the Lenten fast is not pure and our labor will be without fruit. Let us repress immediately this wrong desire when it arises and renew our intention to abstain for Jesus Christ's sake.

Let each one consider the important part we are to take in the battle against sin and the great responsibility that rests upon us, by making this Lent the best we have ever kept.

THE ASHES.

The ashes blessed on the first day of Lent are from the palms which have been blessed for the procession on the previous Palm Sunday. There should be no palms left up during Lent. If they are not needed for the ashes on Ash Wednesday, they should be reverently burned before Lent begins. Sometimes one sees palms which have been kept for years to grow old and dusty. This is absolutely unnecessary and lacking in the reverent spirit with which the blessed palms should be regarded.

The ashes of the palms especially burnt for use in the Church are carefully collected in a small dish and blessed before the first Mass on Ash Wednesday.

The service of blessing is simple. After the customary versicles before any blessing the priest, calling upon God to bless and sanctify these ashes, prays that those who bear these ashes on their heads, after the manner of the ancient Ninivites, in token of repentance may receive the pardon of all their sins, and so begin this holy Fast, that with pure minds they may be admitted to the Paschal Feast, and at length obtain everlasting life. Then the ashes are sprinkled with Holy Water, and another collect is said. The priest prays God to vouchsafe to bless and sanctify these ashes in token of humility and contrition, that, since we know we are but dust and ashes, we may receive forgiveness of sins through unfeigned repentance.

Then all, the priests and acolytes first, are signed with the blest ashes on the forehead, and the words, "Remember, O man, that thou art dust, and unto dust shalt thou return," are said.

Then each person is blessed with the words: "In the Name of the Father, and of the Son and of the Holy Ghost."

The ashes are imposed at each Mass, but, of course, they are only blessed once.

The blessing and imposition of the ashes is the first of numerous ceremonies of Lent by which the Holy Church teaches her children that only by the merits of Jesus Christ can they be saved from their sins.

LENTEN READING.

"What shall I read during Lent?" This is a question usually asked by many when the holy season draws near. And how often do many in anticipation picture to themselves the great amount of reading they expect to achieve before the forty days are over! Yet, how often does it happen that when the end of Lent is reached there are numbers of people found who are regretfully confessing that they have done almost no reading which amounted to anything or which, they really feel helped them in their spiritual life! If such persons are honest with themselves they will seek the reason for this failure with regard to spiritual reading.

For, as writers on the spiritual life tell us, there can be no question as to the immense benefit to be derived from spiritual reading. By this means we can occupy and garrison the mind with thoughts directly or indirectly bearing upon God; and, as Faber happily says, "By this occupation of your thoughts reading hinders castle-building, which is an inward disease wholly incompatible with devotion. It is also of great help in temptations by furnishing an actual distraction against their assaults and giving us light in our warfare with them. Spiritual reading also delivers us from listlessness, so dangerous an enemy to devotion, especially to those who live in the world. To sit down in a chair without an object is to jump into a thicket of temptations. A vacant hour is the devil's hour. When time hangs heavy, then it is that a book is a strong tower—nay, a very church, with angels hovering about us.

Reading will also tend to lessen the ignorant narrow-mindedness which so often makes people uncharitable, censorious and even irreverent. We find in our reading the companionship of great and holy minds. Their judgments give the law to ours. They introduce us into another world, where right measures and true standards prevail. Hence, the judgments of that little, inefficient circle immediately around ourselves, which we surname the world, are less important in our eyes than they used to be. We have got accustomed to higher things, to wider prospects, to greater worlds."

Like other good things, however, spiritual reading needs certain safeguards and rules.

We should be regular. No day should be allowed to pass without its portion of reading, whether large or small. Often one sentence of Holy Scripture will be sufficient to fill the mind and uphold and strengthen it through the day.

And, again, spiritual reading should be slow and deliberate. We should pause on what is read and lift up the heart to God, often forming our thoughts into some special prayer to Him. So it is that one book, after being thoughtfully gone through, will help more than a great many hastily read.

The following list of books is offered in the hope that it may prove helpful to many in arranging for their reading during Lent:

Waggett—"The Holy Eucharist." Besides the paper which gives its title to the volume, there are excellent ones on Bible reading, worship and the manifold unity of Christian life.

Waggett—"Hope and Strength."

Waggett—"The Age of Decision; Five Sermons to Young Men."

Congreve—"The Parable of the Ten Virgins," "The Spiritual Order."

Maturin—"Some Principles and Practices of the Spiritual Life," "Self-Knowledge and Discipline," "Laws of the Spiritual Life" (new, 1907), "Studies on the Beatitudes."

Brett, Jesse—"The Altar and the Life," "Humility: A Devotional Treatise," "Anima Christi," "The Blessed Life."

Newbolt—"Penitence and Peace," "The Fruit of the Spirit."

De Lehen—"The Way of Interior Peace."

Robinson, Forbes—"Letters to His Friends" (full of helpful spiritual thoughts).

De Sales—"Spiritual Letters."

Fenelon—"Spiritual Letters."

Lacordaire—"Conferences."

Sidney Lear—"Various Spiritual Biographies."

Russell, G. W.—"The Household of Faith" (short essays upon English Churchmen.

"The Soul's Escape" (most beautiful and devotional).

Among books newly published are:

Holden, G. F. (vicar of All Saints, Margaret street)—"The Holy Ghost, the Comforter," 1908.

Heibitz, J. H.—"Gloria Crucis," 1908. (Holy Week and Good Friday addresses in Lichfield Cathedral.)

"Those men are truly great who place their ambition rather in acquiring to themselves the conscience of worthy enterprises than in the prospect of glory which attends them. These exalted spirits would rather be secretly the authors of events which are serviceable to mankind than, without being such, to have the public fame of it. Where, therefore, an eminent merit is robbed by artifice or detraction, it does but increase by such endeavors of its enemies. The impotent pains which are taken to sully it or diffuse it among a crowd, to the injury of a single person, will naturally produce the contrary effect; the fire will blaze out and burn up all that attempt to smother what they cannot extinguish."

"There is but one thing necessary to keep the possession of true glory, which is to hear the opposers of it with patience and preserve the virtue by which it was acquired. When a man is thoroughly persuaded that he ought neither to admire, wish for or pursue anything but what is exactly his duty, it is not in the power of seasons, persons or accidents to diminish his value. He only is a great man who can neglect the applause of the multitude and enjoy himself independent of its favor. This is, indeed, an arduous task, but it should comfort a glorious spirit that it is the highest step to which human nature can arrive. Triumph, applause, acclamation, are dear to the mind of man; but it is still a more exquisite delight to say to yourself, you have done well, than to hear the whole human race pronounce you glorious, except you yourself can join with them in your own reflections. A mind thus equal and uniform may be deserted by little fashionable admirers and followers, but will ever be held in reverence by souls like itself. The branches of the oak endure all the seasons of the year, though its leaves fall off in autumn; and these, too, will be restored with the returning spring.—Extract from The Spectator.

THE MORNING WALK OF M. LE CURE.

M. le Curé lives in Bois Gerome, a little Norman town tucked away in a fo'd of the great plateau that forms the eastern wall of the Seine valley; just a narrow street, with the village cross at one end and the Curé's church at the other, and a straggling line of thatched cottages between them. There are but few sheep in the Curé's flock, and the little church is far too large for the pious souls who kneel before the altar for the Sunday Mass. It is old and no longer beautiful, although here and there a sculptured vine or an angelic face calls up a vision of past loveliness. However the Curé and his people are quite content with the plastered walls and paper flowers and the red lamp that struggles bravely to burn. They have no ambition for a restoration of former glories, and they have no money with which to accomplish it.

M. le Curé dwells quite snugly beside the House of God. A lattice gate gives entrance from the churchyard to his garden, where madame, his sister, plants her roses and her cabbages side by side. It is a cool and quiet spot, screened from the road by a high stuccoed wall that supports the grape trellis and provides a convenient ledge where the gray cat suns himself.

When we pay our occasional visit to his parish the father meets us at a door in this same wall, and, with a restraining gesture, silences the barking of the ever-watchful "Toto," and leads us to the presbytery at the end of the garden. It is a house like all the others, thatched and old, with plastered walls and clambering rose vines.

In the dim twilight of the low rooms the red tiling of the floors gives just the needed touch of comfort and cheer. We sit in the simple study while madame brings the wine flask and the plate of cakes (not too large a flask and not too many cakes, for every one is poor in Bois Gerome. The Curé asks us of the news from Paris, where he has not been for many months, or shows us the treasures of his herbarium, preserved in presses built along the wall for he is a botanist, M. le Curé. Perhaps he plays a little on his violin, or bids us try the organ that has been given him quite recently. Then, as we take our leave, he guides us once more past "Toto.'s" threatening jaws and stands in the garden door, watching us as we go along the road to Giverny, where we lodge, two miles away.

It is a walk well known to M. le Curé, for the people in the valley are in his care also and every Lord's Day he goes down the hill to say a second Mass. Mass is at 7 at Bois Gerome on a Sunday morning, and the father has no scruples as to being expeditious in the saying of it; so in half an hour he takes his breviary and his broad hat and shuts the garden door behind him.

If it be a fine summer day, he stands a moment, drinking deep of the fresh, cool air, and then opening his book, he commences both his office and his walk. One can say many prayers when one knows the way so well that there is no need to lift the eyes.

The road he follows is hard and white. It dips into a hollow after passing the church, and then ascends to the level plain, where the golden wheat fields stretch for miles on either hand, and the larks fly up in the clear air, adding their music to the office hymns. All is blue and gold and radiant just before the reaping of the fields.

Soon the Curé leaves the high road, and a grass-grown track leads him through "the forest." There are no great trees here, only a maze of birch and poplar growing in an impenetrable thicket, pierced at intervals by long green aisles over arched by slender boughs. Here, if the Curé lifts his eyes, he sees sunlight sprinkled through leaves of varied green, while perhaps at the end of a bosky vista a gorgeous pheasant reconnoitres or a rabbit scampers into the coppice. It is very sweet and cool among the leaves. The echo of a lark's song sounds from the wheat field, and less ambitious songsters twitter among the branches. Now he hears the baying of the hounds safely kenneled at the gamekeeper's lodge, and all the air is filled with the murmur of joyous life.

As he emerges from the wood the bell of the church below the hill calls his people to the Holy Sacrifice, and yet a moment he pauses—always here, for he stands just on the brow of the hill and far below him stretches the lovely valley of the Seine. He sees the gentle river winding through yellow fields and green meadows, bordered by the silvery plumes of the soaring poplar trees. On the further side the land rises again abruptly, misty in the purple haze of the distance and near the sky line shines a cliff like a red gash in the purple. He knows this marks the site of the ancient Roman camp. To the right, far down the valley Vernon glitters in the sun and he can discern, rising above the roofs the fair lines of its lovely church, "the jewel of Normandy."

A little path runs down the hill to the inn garden. It is a steep descent and it is easier to climb than to go down. The Curés' breath comes quickly and his heart beats fast when he reaches the garden gate. Maman Claire, who peels potatoes by the kitchen door, nods amiably and Gaston smiles good morning as the father hurries by. They do not go to Mass. Giverny, though Catholic, is not pious, and there will be an opportunity to go to church once and for all when one is dead.

However, he finds Mère Oudinet, bent and old in her place and the schoolmaster, wearing his best clothes; and the grandchildren of the great French artist who has his habitation among them, and old Pierre, in his peasant's frock, cutting the morsels for the "blessed bread" from the great loaf before him.

Throughout the Mass the stuffy organ wheezes and groans. There are none to sing, but one may, at least hear music, and the young artist who spends his summers at the inn is kind enough to play. Three small acolytes, in red cassocks that hardly reach their knees and do not pretend to cover the bare legs between knee and short stocking, kneel behind M. le Curé as he says Mass, and lend a touch of splendor to the occasion. At the Sanctus all three clutch the great bell rope that hangs in the midst of the choir and tug manfully until one is lifted from the ground and his heels clatter noisily on the stone floor.

There is no sermon, and Mass is soon over, as the faithful make their Communions only twice a year; so M. le Curé locks the door of the sacristy, wipes his forehead and seeks his breakfast at the inn, where he jokes with Gaston and hears the news of the week. And then to the road again, the hill to climb, the fields to cross, and a pipe in his own garden under his single pear tree, with "Toto's" head resting against his knees.

The Holy Cross Fathers have been holding a general mission in the several churches in New Haven, and the following notes are taken from the Christ Church Chronicle, of that city:

"The innocence of childhood and the ignorance of the ubiquitous reporter brought their delicious unconscious touches of humor into successful combination during our recent mission. Our noonday service at Trinity Church was described as a "service of Intermission. Father Schlueter, preaching from the text, "Behold, now is the accepted time; behold, now is the day of salvation," was said to have chosen for his subject, "Now is the Day of Privation.' A Sunday school instruction given by Father Sill at St. Paul's upon prayer is thus graphically described: "Father Sill said: "Children, knees on the ground." Father Anderson knelt. "Eyes on the Cross." Father Anderson fixed his eyes on the Cross. "Hearts in heaven." Father Anderson sat down. But the extent of innocent merriment caused by a little girl at Trinity Church compels even the reporter to take a back seat. Father Huntington had been speaking of sin as resulting in pain and sorrow, sickness and death. "Now," said he (having reference to the City Hospital), 'children, I have this day been in a place where I have seen the results of sin. Where do you suppose it was?' 'I know, I know!' eagerly exclaimed a little girl, 'Where was it?' asked the Father, eager to find that the deep spiritual lesson he would impart had sunk into this little girl's mind. 'The Young Men's Christian Association,' was the reply."

The following dispensation has been granted by Bishop Whitaker:

"I am very glad to accede to your suggestion in your note of the 12th, and shall heartily approve the relaxation of the strict Lenten rule regarding fasting in Lent. There is surely abundant reason for giving much consideration to the physical health of those committed to our spiritual charge. I will make no specification, but will leave the matter to your own judgment.

"Faithfully yours,

"O. W. WHITAKER."

In accordance with the Bishop's letter, the strict fast on Ash Wednesday and Good Friday may be relaxed and needed nourishment may be taken through the Lenten season. The dispensation from fasting, however, should not make us less careful in things spiritual. If we are unable to keep the days of fasting strictly, we should be all the more rigorous as to our worldly pleasures. It is, of course, needless to remind our parishioners that the theatre, bridge whist, dinners and such entertainments are never suitable diversions during Lent.

THE REBUILT SANCTUARY AND NEW ALTAR

PARISH NOTES.

The number of communions made during the year was 7,521. On St. Clement's day the communions numbered 188, which is a slight gain over last year.

The Guild of St. Vincent will have its annual dinner at the Clergy House on Tuesday, January 26. The Guild of the Holy Child will have its Christmas party on January 9.

There is an average attendance of ten persons at the service of intercession on Friday noons. The communicant list of the parish numbers about seven hundred. Comment is unnecessary.

Persons who reach the church after the gospel has been said should not make their communions at that mass unless they have been delayed by some reasonable cause. Late rising is not a reasonable cause. It has been noticed that a number leave the church before the mass is finished. This is irreverent and a dishonor to Almighty God, and should never occur except for weighty reasons.

We publish below part of a subscriber's response to an appeal for funds to defray the extra expense of making ST. CLEMENT'S MAGAZINE stand for something. There are at least three hundred copies of the magazine distributed each month in the corridor, and if these were paid for no deficit would exist.

"I have a suggestion to make, however, which may or may not appeal to you as worth consideration. It it this: That present subscribers be asked to subscribe for one or more additional copies, these extra copies to be either placed in the corridor of the church for free distribution or be sent to the subscribers to do with what they please. Personally, I am willing to subscribe for two additional copies, making three in all for my subscription, the two extra ones to be placed in the corridor. The excellence of the magazine is beyond question, and it has been a great pleasure to me to find each number so replete with interesting matter. I do not know how large the subscription list is, but I imagine if each subscriber would take at least one additional copy (and there must be quite a number who would take more) your deficit would be covered.

"A notice in the magazine, or a slip accompanying it, with an envelope addressed to yourself for a response, would be apt to bring the matter to a head, or if possible personal solicitation, where it would be advisable, might accomplish much in the way of financial results.

"I should be sorry to see the magazine take any backward step as to tone, for the possibilities of such a periodical are great. There are, as you quite well know, many people who simply take for granted that the magazine will come out at the proper date, without considering the expense and time involved in having it do so.

"If my sugestion should strike you favorably, and you will let me know, I will at once make my subscription for three copies and will remit the equivalent.

"Should these extra subscriptions come in you would have a more reliable financial backing than if you depended merely upon chance contributions to make up the amount necessary."

ST. NICHOLAS GUILD.

The Guild has become very interesting this year. As the restriction that only boys of the parish could belong has been removed, the number of names on the list has increased to forty.

We have introduced industrial work, such as hammock making, raphia, brasswork and wood carving, the instruction being divided among the associates. The boys are allowed to choose what work they like to do, and having chosen it, must persevere until they have finished the work they have once begun. The very little boys who are too small to do any of this work can amuse themselves with games.

At present we have not enough associates to direct all these boys in their work and amusements. But in spite of this lack of teachers we find the boys very orderly and obedient.

After an hour spent on this work, the gymnasium class, under the direction of Mr. Carr begins, in which all the boys are expected to take part, and then follows play time, when they can do what their fancy dictates.

Our aim is to bring as many boys as possible under the influence of the Church, and so a very simple rule of life is given them, with a monthly service in the chapel. Gradually we hope to persuade to come to the Sunday school boys who have no church home, or are wandering aimlessly to different schools.

NEWS FROM WUCHANG.

We are certain that our readers will be interested in this account of the starting of a community of priests in Wuchang. Father Wood, the writer, is a devoted friend of the clergy and the parish of St. Clement's. It is encouraging to learn of really Catholic work in the mission field:

"Our community has really started. We drew up our tentative rule based on that of the Oxford Mission at Calcutta, where the conditions are similar to ours. Everything in the Oblates Rule is included, and in addition to these obligations there are certain others. Those added are certain ones on Poverty, Chastity and Obedience, a house-rule, etc. We submitted our Rule to the Bishop, kept a brief retreat and received each other to the year's "novitiate" or probation, provided by the Rule, at the close of the retreat, when I celebrated, and Father Cooper made his communion. This was on the visit of All Saints. We are "the Community of St. Saviour," and we are under the invocation of St. Mary, St. Joseph, and All Saints.

"On All Saints' Day we had early masses in our three Wuchang chapels, and a Solemn Mass at St. Saviour's later. I was celebrant, and Father Cooper deacon. It was for us a solemn thanksgiving for our long wished-for plans. During the octave we blessed our house. Each room is named after a saint, and as we went to each we used the collect for that saint's day from the breviary. With the exception of St. Mary, St. Joseph, and St. Michael, the saints chosen are missionaries and monks. Our refectory is St. Vincent de Paul, the Patron Saint of the Oblates.

During the octave also Miss Byerly opened her new Industrial School for Chinese women and girls at St. Saviour's, in the house which a number of kind friends helped to purchase. We are building on this property at present "The House of the Visitation." It is to be our old ladies' home down stairs (St. Mary's and St. Elizabeth's) and upstairs the Industrial girls are to have a new dormitory when they reopen after Chinese New Year. The school opened with twenty-two scholars.

THE LORD'S PRAYER.

The Lord's Prayer, as its name implies, was composed by our Lord Jesus Christ; it is the best of all prayers, and that which the Christian should most frequently use. It comes to us hallowed by great associations. It was first uttered by the lips of our incarnate Lord, as He gave it to his Church; it is written in the Gospels; it has been used by apostles, martyrs, and saints, in all languages; it is the prayer of kings and peasants, of old men and little children; it is the prayer of the whole Church of God in all countries, and in all ages. And so the Church has specially honoured the Lord's Prayer, giving it a place in every office of the Prayer Book, and causing it to be repeated twice in the three chief services,—the Holy Eucharist, Matins, and Evensong. The Lord's Prayer contains God's own statement of the needs of man; and, in using it, we have divine authority for believing that all we ask is according to the mind of God. Nine hundred years ago, the bishops under King Canute beautifully said, —'It contains a message to God regarding every need a man may have, either for this life or for that to come.'

The 'Our Father' consists of seven petitions, which fall into one of two divisions, marked by the use of the words Thy, and us and our. The Prayer places God's glory first, and our needs in the second place. The seven petitions may be summarized thus:—

God's glory.	Man's Needs.
We pray for,	We pray for,
1. Reverence.	4. Food.
2. Loyalty.	5. Forgiveness.
3. Obedience.	6. Guidance.
	7. Deliverance.

"Our Father, which art in heaven."

The Lord's Prayer is the prayer of the baptized. It addresses God as Father, and thus can only be used by those who have been made His children in Holy Baptism, and so adopted into His family,—the Church. In the early days of the Church, no unbaptized person was permitted to say the 'Our Father.' Persons under preparation for Holy Baptism were instructed in its meaning, as part of such preparation, and learnt it by heart the week preceding baptism; but they were not allowed to use it is a prayer, until they had received that Sacrament. Thus, we find St. Augustine, in his sermon to candidates for baptism, saying, "For how can they say the 'Our Father' who are not yet born?" He is referring to the new birth in baptism.

St. Augustine speaks of the Lord's Prayer as 'the fraternal prayer.' We do not address God as 'my Father,' but as 'our Father.' If He is our Father, then we are brethren. The Lord's Prayer is a great bond of unity, for we never say it without praying for the whole Church, thus making a great act of intercession.

i. "Hallowed be thy Name."

The word hallow, means 'to account sacred,' or 'to reverence.' By God's name, we are to understand God himself, as revealed to man. His name is so used frequently in the Holy Scriptures. Our Lord said to his apostles,—"I have manifested thy name unto the men which thou gavest me;" by which He meant that He had revealed God to them.

By the name of God, we are also to understand the things which concern him, such as his house, his day, his word, his sacraments, his ministers; all of which are to be treated with reverence because they belong to him. In praying "hallowed be thy name," we ask for grace to keep the third Commandment, which forbids the taking of God's name in vain. Christians are to sanctify everything upon which God has placed his name. The way of the world is to scoff at all sanctifying, and to treat all things as common. It is the duty of the children of God, who pray the Lord's Prayer, to redeem common things, and to restore their relation to him.

ii. "Thy kingdom come."

In this petition we chiefly pray that God's rule may be everywhere accepted. That this happy result may be effected, we are first of all to be careful that the kingdom of God may come to our own souls. Of the true servants of God, Jesus Christ has said, —"the kingdom of God is within you." St. Paul writes,—"Let not sin therefore reign in your mortal body." Within the soul of every man is a throne, upon which either

The Sanctuary as it appeared forty years ago.

God or sin sits as a king. We pray that God alone may occupy the throne of the heart. When this is so, we shall be able to influence others for good, and so God's kingdom will spread in the world.

He who prays this petition should take a real interest in the Church's missions to the heathen. If we can not give alms, we can offer our prayers that God will bless and prosper the missionary work of his Church.

In this petition we pray for Christ's second coming to judgment, when all remaining enemies shall be put under his feet. Unless the kingdom has come to our hearts, we are not ready for Christ's coming at the end of the world. As we can not alter the Prayer, we must alter our lives, and thus be getting ready for the second coming of our Lord.

iii. "THY WILL BE DONE ON EARTH, AS IT IN HEAVEN."

This is the most sacred of all the seven petitions of the Lord's Prayer, for it was the prayer of Jesus Christ. In the Garden of Gethsemane, on the eve of his sacrifice, Jesus thrice prayed this prayer. God's will is a wise and good will, and nothing can really go well with us until we are yielding to, and fulfilling it. Our blessed Lord said,—"My meat is to do the will of him that sent me, and to finish his work." God's will represents the highest good that can happen to us, for even the evils we suffer, work together for good to them that love God, and keep his commandments. Anything which is not according to his will is under a curse.

By "Thy will be done," we not only mean that all God's appointments of trial, or suffering are to be patiently borne, but also that his will may be actively carried out by us. The will of God is not only to be accepted, but it is also to be fulfilled. God has given us a free will, and we pray that in all things, great and small, our wills may follow his, choosing that which He chooses, and rejecting that which He rejects. The rule of life is the same under all circumstances,—to do God's will as we see it.

We pray that his will may be done in earth as it is in heaven. In heaven it is done by the holy angels, consciously and completely, cheerfully and continually.

iv. "GIVE US THIS DAY OUR DAILY BREAD."

This petition speaks of our dependence upon God; for, in it, we pray for all things needful for the welfare of soul and body.

We ask him for our food, and this day by day. We are apt to take our food as a matter of course, forgetting from whose hand it comes. We must remember too that our food would not nourish us apart from God's blessing. It is a holy practice never to take our food without first asking God to bless it to our use, and to return thanks to him after meals.

But in this petition we pray also for the food of our souls. Our Lord taught that the food of the soul is of more importance that that of the body, when He said,—"Labour not for the meat which perisheth, but for that meat which endureth unto everlasting life." He is referring to the Sacrament of his body and blood, which He spoke of as the Bread of Life. They who do not go to Communion, are not living as they pray in this fourth petition.

v. "FORGIVE US OUR TRESPASSES, AS WE FORGIVE THEM THAT TRESPASS AGAINST US."

Our Lord meant us to use the 'Our Father' daily: we learn this from the last petition, which asks for daily bread. We are to pray too for daily forgiveness; for, however good we are, we never pass a day without falling into some sin, however small. "A just man" saith Solomon, "falleth seven times." It was the great Augustine who taught his hearers that the earnest use of this petition obtains pardon for such daily imperfections. We do not in this petition pray for first forgiveness, but to cover the daily sins which, even in a state of grace, by our frailty we commit. St. Augustine's words are,—"Baptism is provided on account of all sins; prayer is provided on account of little sins, without which no one is able to live. What does the Prayer say? 'Forgive us our trespasses, as we forgive them that trespass against us.' We are cleaned once for all in baptism, we are cleansed daily by prayer."

We pray that God will so forgive us, as we forgive others. This is the only petition in the 'Our Father' conditional upon our doing something. "As we forgive," means in like manner as we forgive. The reason why Christ has thus taught us to pray is, because we are not fit to receive mercy from God until we have shown it to others. "Blessed are the merciful; for they shall obtain mercy." It has been said, "He that can not forgive others, breaks down the bridge over which he must pass himself."

vi. "AND LEAD US NOT INTO TEMPTATION."

The last petition teaches that, as sinful creatures, we need pardon: this petition teaches that, as helpless and weak, we need guidance and succor. The petition may mean either,—Do not permit us to fall into temptation, or in other words, Suffer us not to be placed in positions dangerous to our spiritual safety; in accordance with our Lord's words, "Watch ye and pray, lest ye enter into temptation:" or it may mean,—Suffer us not to be overwhelmed when tempted. It is no sin to be tempted: the sin begins when we consent to the temptation. As we use this petition, we ought to be careful not to put ourselves in the way of danger; and if danger comes, to be earnest and prompt in prayer for help.

vii. "BUT DELIVER US FROM EVIL."

In this petition we ask God to save us from all manner of harm both to soul and body. It is probable that our Lord meant, Deliver us from the Evil One, i. e., our great enemy; and, if so, the words include all moral evil, which is the work of the Evil One. We are quite sure that it is God's will to save us from moral evil, or sin; for sin does the soul infinite harm. The Christian is daily subject to evils of all kinds, let him therefore pray this prayer very earnestly. It has been well said,—'When prayer leads the van, deliverance brings up the rear.' Although it is not wrong to ask God to save us from physical evil, such as pain or disease, yet it may not please him always to answer our prayer; for He often turns physical evils into real blessings, and then we should be patient, trusting that He will order all for our highest good.

"FOR THINE IS THE KINGDOM, THE POWER, AND THE GLORY, FOR EVER AND EVER. AMEN."

These words form what is known as the doxology. They are sometimes omitted from the Lord's Prayer in the Prayer Book. Some doubt has been expressed as to whether they form part of the Prayer as given by our Lord. They are found in the Prayer as printed in St. Matthew's Gospel, but they are wanting in that given in St. Luke's Gospel. But as the Lord's Prayer was given by Christ on two occasions, He may possibly have omitted the doxology in the one case, and added it in the other.

The Catholic Religion.

THE LONELY ONE.

The Lonely One understood not one word of the sibilant English speech. He was of an alien race and an alien faith, and had lived too short a time among these people to have learned their language and their curious modes of life. Hardly had he set foot on the strange shores when the fever had seized him, and now for days he had lain in the colorless room of the hospital, his dark eyes roving wearily to find some respite from the monotony of the inoxorable white walls, but even the windows permitted him to see only a gray expanse of December sky. At first he had been very ill, and then it had not mattered, for always his dreams were of his old home, and dearly loved faces floated before his vision, but of late the loneliness had become intolerable.

Christians were for him a despised race, and their religion a hateful thing, and yet they had been kind to him. So kind that he found himself wondering whether the tales of his childhood could be true. The hands of the nurse were soft and cool and gentle, and there were tender modulations of sympathy in the physician's voice, although his words were unintelligible.

Yesterday a new interest had developed. The stiff white bed against the opposite wall, that had always seemed as lonely as he felt, received an occupant—a young lad who lay very still with closed eyes, and a brow so white under the fair hair that the Lonely One marveled as he looked. Once the eyes had opened and looked straight into his own. Such a clear direct gaze that it seemed to penetrate his very heart, and a smile had quivered on the pale lips; but only for a moment. After that he had watched breathlessly for a repetition of the miracle.

He had not seen the eyes again, however, for that was yesterday, and this morning when he woke in the chill light a screen was drawn around the other bed. As he glanced at it, surprised, disappointed, questioning, the nurse smiled and pointed to the table near his head. There was a flower, a tender bud, full of soft color, and with a fragrance that touched mysteriously some hidden depth of his being, for the dark eyes filled with tears. This was his new friend's gift, so he lay quietly and watched the rose.

Then, as he waited for the feeble sun, steps sounded in the corridor, and the door opened without a sound. The nurse entered softly, bearing a lighted taper. She disappeared behind the screen and he saw the glow of the flame through the thin muslin. Behind her came a white robed man, old and gray, with bowed head and lips moving noiselessly, bearing something in his hands. A Presence filled the room. Whence it came he did not know, but It seemed focused near the candle flame. He heard low-murmured words, and felt an unseen Hand resting upon his brow, upon his heart. Rest, peace, comfort filled him. A wave of perfume swept across his face. The rose had opened wide.

THE LEGEND BEAUTIFUL.

"Hadst thou stayed, I must have fled!"
That is what the Vision said.

In his chamber, all alone,
Kneeling on the floor of stone,
Prayed the monk in deep contrition
For his sins of indecision;
Prayed for greater self-denial
In temptation and in trial.
It was noonday by the dial
And the monk was all alone.

Suddenly, as if it lightened,
An unwonted splendor brightened
All within him and without him
In that narrow cell of stone,
And he saw the Blessed Vision
Of our Lord, with light Elysian,
Like a vesture wrapped about him;
Like a garment round him thrown.

Not as crucified and slain,
Not in agonies of pain,
Not with bleeding hands and feet
Did the monk his Master see;
But as in the village street,
In the house or harvest field,
Halt and lame and blind He healed
When He walked in Galilee.

In an attitude imploring,
Hands upon his bosom crossed,
Wondering, worshiping, adoring,
Knelt the monk, in rapture lost.
Lord, he thought, in heaven that reignest,
Who am I, that thus Thou deignest
To reveal Thyself to me?
Who am I, that from the center
Of Thy glory Thou should'st enter
This poor cell my guest to be?

Then, amid his exaltation,
Loud the convent bell appalling,
From its belfry calling, calling,
Rang through court and corridor
With persistent iteration
He had never heard before.
It was now the appointed hour,
When alike in shine or shower,
Winter's cold or summer's heat,
To the convent portals came
All the blind and halt and lame,
All the beggars of the street
For their daily dole of food
Dealt them by the brotherhood;
And their almoner was he,
Who upon his bended knee,
Wrapt in silent ecstasy
Of divinest self-surrender,
Saw the Vision and the Splendor.

Deep distress and hesitation
Mingled with his adoration.
Should he go or should he stay?
Should he leave the poor to wait
Hungry at the convent gate
Till the Vision passed away?
Should he slight his radiant guest,
Slight this visitant celestial,
For a crowd of ragged, bestial
Beggars at the convent gate?
Would the Vision there remain?
Would the Vision come again?

Then a voice within his breast
Whispered, audible and clear,
As if to the outward ear:
"Do thy duty; that is best;
Leave unto thy Lord the rest!"

Straightway to his feet he started,
And a longing look intent
On the Blessed Vision bent,
Slowly from his cell departed;
Slowly on his errand went.

At the gate the poor were waiting,
Looking through the iron grating
With that terror in the eye
That is only seen in those
Who amid their wants and woes
Hear the sound of doors that close,
And of feet that pass them by;
Grown familiar with disfavor,
Grown familiar with the savor
Of the bread by which men die!
But today, they know not why,
Like the gate of Paradise
Seemed the convent gate to rise
Like a sacrament divine;
Seemed to them the bread and wine.
In his heart the monk was praying,
Thinking of the homeless poor,
What they suffer and endure;
What we see not, what we see;
And the inward voice was saying:
"Whatsoever thing thou doest
To the least of Mine and lowest,
That thou doest unto Me!"

Unto Me! but had the Vision
Come to him in beggar's clothing,
Come a mendicant imploring,
Would he then have knelt adoring,
Or have listened with derision
And have turned away with loathing?

Thus his conscience put the question,
Full of troublesome suggestion,
As at length, with hurried pace,
Towards his cell he turned his face
And beheld the convent bright
With a supernatural light,
Like a luminous cloud expanding
Over floor and wall and ceiling.

But he paused with awe-struck feeling
At the threshold of his door,
For the Vision still was standing
As he left it there before,
When the convent bell appalling,
From its belfry calling, calling,
Summoned him to feed the poor.
Through the long hour intervening
It had waited his return,
And he felt his bosom burn,
Comprehending all the meaning
When the Blessed Vision said:
"Hadst thou stayed, I must have fled!"

PARISH NOTES.

Candles will be blessed as usual on the Feast of the Purification, at the 7 o'clock mass.

A very handsome piece of lace has been given for the high altar, and a missal bound in dark leather for use in Advent and Lent.

The blessing of the ashes on Ash Wednesday will take place at 5.45, and the imposition will take place before and after each succeeding mass.

The Bishop Coadjutor will visit the parish on April twentieth. Any who may be considering Coadjutor will please give their names to the Rector.

At the meeting of the vestry on Tuesday evening, January 12, Messrs. Edward F. Casey and J. Lawrence Wetherill were elected to fill the vacancies on the board.

With the publication of this number, Mr. Rommel retires as publisher of the Magazine. Until further notice, all communications may be addressed to the Rector.

Sunday, February 14, will be set apart for the annual offering for missions. Dr. Lloyd, the general secretary of the Board of Missions, will preach at the 11 o'clock mass.

A very beautiful sanctuary lamp has been given for St. John's Chapel. It is in memory of Mrs. Mary Lex and Miss Mary Fredericka Lex. The design, which is in harmony with the other chapel ornaments, was made by Mr. Sellers.

The parish retreat will be held as usual on Ash Wednesday; addresses at 10 a. m., 12 m. and 3 p. m. The retreat will close with Evensong. The Penitential office will be said at 8 o'clock in the evening. During Lent there will be addresses every Monday after Evensong, on Wednesdays in the parish hall at 4 o'clock and before the Stations of the Cross on Friday evenings.

Contributions are asked for the following objects:

Fund for rebuilding San Francisco churches (requested by the Bishop of Pennsylvania).

For the work of Bishop Weller, of the Diocese of Fond du Lac, and Bishop Osborne, of the Diocese of Springfield.

The parishioners are also asked for special offerings toward the assessment made by the Convocation of North Philadelphia, which has under its care the missions in the northern section of the city. The amount asked of St. Clement's is $150.

The January meeting of St. Clement's Branch of the Woman's Auxiliary was held on the Feast of the Epiphany in the parish hall. It was voted to aid the following objects:

The endowment of St. Clement's Day in the Japanese Leper Hospital.

The salary of a nurse in the hospital at Shanghai.

The Oneida Indian Mission.

Candlesticks for Fr. Sweet, of Tokio.

Any desiring to contribute toward these objects are asked to send their offerings to Miss Laura Hutchinson, 2413 Spruce street.

The following item from the Churchman of January 9 will be of interest to every member of this parish:

"The high altar presented to the Bishop of Southern Florida by St. Clement's Church, Philadelphia, was used for the first time in the Orlando Cathedral at the midnight service on Christmas Eve. The memorial window which occupied the east end of the chancel has been moved to the north side to make room for the carved altar and reredos. Dean Spencer read the service and Bishop Gray preached a forceful sermon, dwelling upon the gift of St. Clement's to the church in far-away Southern Florida, and speaking at length of all for which the holy altar stands. A large congregation filled the church."

CHRISTMASTIDE.

We had a joyous Christmastide at St. Clement's. Thanks to many willing hearts and hands the preparations for the festival were made more quickly and easily than has been the case for many years. The acolytes trimmed the screen as usual, and it was in place Tuesday night. The central arch has been widened so that an unobstructed view is given of the high altar, which is a great improvement. The crèche stood in the corridor as usual, and every Sunday the children have gathered about the manger to sing hymns to the Infant Christ.

The communions on Christmas Day numbered the same as last year. This was the one disappointment. There ought to be a continual increase. At the 11 o'clock mass the choir rendered St. Cecilia by Gounod, and the officiant was Father Quin, with Father Schneeweis and the rector as deacon and sub-deacon.

The various Christmas parties were all thoroughly enjoyed.

The Christmas festival of the Sunday school was held on the Feast of the Holy Innocents. After a brief service was held in the church, the school adjourned to the parish hall, where a gorgeous Christmas tree was divested of its mysterious fruits to gladden small hearts.

On New Year's Eve a goodly number sat down at a feast of good things at the annual turkey supper, and St. Mary's Guild held its service and festival on the following Monday, while St. Nicholas' Guild and the Guild of the Holy Child had their merrymaking on Saturday, January 9. May McLauchlan was given the silver cross and chain in the Holy Child Guild, which each year is awarded for excellence in attendance. She had missed only one mass, two sessions of Sunday school and three meetings of the guild throughout the entire year.

Throughout all the festival there were evidences of the true joy of the Christmastide, and we believe that our Lord sent us many blessings on the feast of His Nativity.

LENT.

The great temptation of the Christian soul to-day is worldliness. Everywhere we see evidences of the lowering of moral standards and an increasing tendency toward ease and luxury. The religion of the Cross, never popular, is now something to be forgotten or avoided. We do not want to be unselfish or true or pure if these things militate in any way against our enjoying worldly pleasure, or prevent our full enjoyment of the lusts of the flesh.

The exceeding carelessness of people nowadays in the observance of the holy season of Lent is one of the strongest indications of this modern temper. One is distressed every year by the notices that appear in so-called "social columns" of dinners, receptions, teas and "box parties" that are given by church people or in which they participate without any thought of the Church's law. One feels relieved to know that up to this time Good Friday is held sacred by these lukewarm Christians, but one hardly dares expect that this will long be the case. It would require only the giving of some specially popular opera with a fine cast to overthrow even the slight barrier that remains, and if the world runs on much longer in present channels we shall have the remarkable exhibition of some great social function given on the Great Fast Day of the Church, when our people will hurry from the three hours' service to prepare for an entertainment from which they dare not absent themselves lest their names be omitted from a desirable list.

May we people of St. Clement's endeavor to do something toward correcting this tendency? Is it too much to ask that no communicant of this parish may be seen at any social function for forty days? That the opera boxes may be empty and the theaters closed so far as the people of this parish are concerned. That we may all spend our time in withdrawing from the feverish world, with all its silly glitter and unreality, and try to do something for our souls—an occupation much too long neglected by the majority of us?

Let the coming Lent be a real thing, not a sentimental playing with special services while the deep matters of the spirit are forgotten and the old worldly life goes on unchecked.

In any rule we may be making for our Lenten discipline, let us rule out all the "pomps and vanities of this wicked world" and all "the sinful lusts of the flesh." Let us scar Calvary in our hearts, not Babylon.

REQUIEM SERVICES.

As several persons have asked for the special collects, epistles and gospels in use at St. Clement's for the regular masses, we print them below:

At Burials.

Collect—O God, whose nature and property is ever to have mercy and to forgive, receive our humble petitions for the soul of Thy servant,

N., which Thou hast commanded to pass out of this world, deliver it not into the hands of the enemy, neither forget it at the last, but command it to be received by Thy holy angels, and to be carried into the land of the living; and, forasmuch as he hoped, and believed in Thee, let him be counted worthy to rejoice in the fellowship of Thy saints. Through our Lord Jesus Christ Thy Son, who liveth and reigneth with Thee in the unity of the Holy Ghost, God, forever and ever. Amen.

The Epistles: 1 Thess. iv:13.—I would not have you to be ignorant brethren concerning them which are asleep, that ye sorrow not even as others which have no hope. For if we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so then also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him. For this we say unto you by the word of the Lord that we which are alive and remain unto the coming of the Lord shall not prevent them which are asleep. For the Lord Himself shall descend from Heaven with a shout, with the voice of the Archangel and with the trump of God, and the dead in Christ shall rise first; then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds to meet the Lord in the air and so shall we ever be with the Lord. Wherefore comfort one another with these words.

The Gospel: St. John, xi:21.—At that time Martha said unto Jesus, Lord, if Thou hadst been here my brother had not died. But I know that even now, whatsoever Thou wilt ask of God, God will will it Thee. Jesus saith unto her, Thy brother shall rise again. Martha said unto Him, I know that he shall rise again at the last day. Jesus saith unto her, I am the Resurrection and the Life: he that believeth in Me, though he were dead yet shall he live, and he that liveth and believeth in Me shall never die. Believeth Thou this? She saith unto Him, Yea, Lord, I believe that Thou are the Christ, the Son of God, which should come unto the world.

Collects: On all Souls Day and for All the Faithful Departed—O God, the Creator and Redeemer of all them that believe, grant unto the souls of all the faithful departed, remission of all their sins: that through devout supplications they may obtain the pardon they have always desired. Who lovest and request, world without end. Amen.

For Bishops.—O God, who hast caused Thy servants to be reckoned among those of Episcopal dignity in the apostolic ministry, grant we beseech Thee, that they may rejoice in the everlasting fellowship in Heaven of those whose office they love while on earth. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

For Brethren, Relatives and Benefactors—O God, the Giver of Pardon and Author of Man's Salvation: we beseech Thee, of Thy mercy to grant that the brethren and sisters of our congregation, with our relations and benefactors, who have passed away from this world (Blessed Mary, ever virgin, and all Thy saints praying for them) may come to the fellowship of eternal blessedness. Through Jesus Christ, our Lord. Amen.

These three collects are said ordinarily, but on anniversaries the following alone is used:

O God, the Lord of Forgiveness, grant unto the soul of Thy servant, N.; the anniversary of whose burial we have in remembrance, a place of refreshment, the blessedness of rest, and the brightness of Thy divine light. Through Jesus Christ, our Lord. Amen.

Epistles: On All Souls' Day.—1 Cor. xv:51.—Behold, I shew you a mystery: We shall not all sleep, but we shall be changed, in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump: for the trumpet shall sound and the dead shall be raised incorruptible and we shall be changed. For this corruptible must put on incorruption, and this mortal must put on immortality. So when this corruptible shall have put on incorruption and this mortal shall have put on immortality, then shall be brought to pass the saying that is written, Death is swallowed up in victory. O death, where is thy sting? O grave where is thy victory? The sting of death is sin and the strength of sin is the law. But thanks be to God which giveth us the victory through our Lord, Jesus Christ.

At other times: Rev. xiv.:13.—And I heard a Voice from Heaven, saying unto me, Write, Blessed are the dead, who died in the Lord, from henceforth: Yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors and their works do follow them.

Gospels: On All Souls' Day: St. John v:25.—Verily, Verily, I say unto you, The hour is coming and now is, when the dead shall hear the Voice of the Son of God: and they that hear shall live. For as the Father hath life in himself; so hath He given to the Son to have life in Himself; and hath given Him authority to execute judgment also because He is the Son of Man. Marvel not at this: for the hour is coming in which all that are in the graves shall hear His voice and shall come forth; they that have done good unto the resurrection of life; and they that have done evil unto the resurrection of damnation.

At other times: St. John, vi:51.—I am the living Bread which came down from Heaven: if any man eat of this Bread he shall live forever: and the Bread that I will give is My Flesh, which I will give for the life of the world. The Jews, therefore, strove among themselves, saying: How can this Man give us His Flesh to eat? Then Jesus said unto them, Verily, verily, I say unto you, except ye eat the Flesh of the Son of Man and drink His Blood ye have no life in you. Whoso eateth My Flesh and drinketh My Blood hath eternal life and I will raise him up at the last day.

In connection with this subject a few words of instruction on the subject of the proper conduct of Catholic Christians in the presence of serious illness and of death may not be untimely.

For any serious illness the priest should be summoned with as great speed as the physician. The parish clergy should invariably be notified and the name of the sick person entered upon the list of intercessions. The priest should find no difficulty in entering the sick room when he calls. The notion seems to be deep-seated in the minds of many people that the ministrations of the Church must of necessity inspire terror, and the note of anxious warning that appears in the admonition, "The doctor says he must not be excited," would be ludicrous were it not so pitiable. The priest's one object in the sick room is to soothe and comfort the soul, and one who knows the solace that the Church can bring to the sufferer will be anxious only that the priest may be unhindered in the performances of his sacred offices.

When the priest enters the sick room he should be left alone with the patient. His call is not a social one, and it may be necessary to hear the sick patient's confession and prepare him for death. This can not be done with friends and neighbors sitting about in rocking chairs and vying each with the other in giving a graphic description of the sufferings of the invalid.

Due inquiry should be made as to whether or not the priest needs anything for the due performance of his duties. The reception of the Blessed Sacrament should be as immediate as possible. A confession might be made the day before, or it can be made immediately before communion.

Where notice is given that Christ is to be brought to the sick room, a small table should be prepared near the bedside, covered with a fresh napkin or towel. On the table should be placed a small bowl of water, and, if possible, a crucifix and two candles, which should be lighted before the priest enters the room. If the invalid is a woman a cap or scarf should be placed upon her head, and any female attendant should wear a cap or hat.

When the priest rings the bell he should be met by a person bearing a lighted candle, and, if a woman, with covered head. As he enters the house the person meeting him should genuflect before the Sacramental Presence, and without any conversation should precede the priest to the sick chamber, genuflect as he enters, and remain in the room, kneeling, unless a confession is to be made before communion.

If the sick person is to be anointed, which is always desirable if the illness be serious, this may be done immediately after the confession.

As the person approaches death, the priest should be summoned to say the commendatory prayers.

Immediately after death the clergy should be consulted as to the day and hour of the funeral, which should never take place in a dwelling house. The Church provides no service for such a place. She contemplates the use of the church always. The funeral should take place in the morning, and there should be a requiem mass. The burial service without the mass is protestant and meaningless. Under no consideration should the clergy be asked to conduct a funeral service in the evening, and under no circumstances will the clergy of St. Clement's consent to do so.

In the matter of the funeral, there should be no needless and foolish expense. There should be no expensive coffin, nor should there be any profusion of flowers. No floral display should be made in the church. The coffin should be placed on a bier and covered by a pall.

Under no circumstances should the coffin be opened after it leaves the house, and St. Clement's clergy will not be present when this rule is infringed upon.

If the cemetery is at a distance from the church the funeral procession should be as small as possible, and the group about the grave should consist only of the immediate family and very near friends.

Those who may be called upon to bury any who may be dear to them should remember always that the funeral services are for the benefit of the dead, not for the living, and that the right of the dead person to all that the Church can give is to be paramount. Too often protestant or irreligious friends and neighbors are allowed to determine matters over which they should have no control. We shall all need many masses after our death; let us see to it that we do not deny this blessing to those who go before us.

A PRAYER FOR LENT.

Forgive me my sins, O Lord, forgive me; the sins of my youth and the sins of mine age; the sins of my soul and the sins of my body; my secret and my whispering sins, my presumptuous and my crying sins; the sins I have done to please myself, and the sins I have done to please others. Forgive me those sins which I know, and those sins which I know not; the good I have omitted to do, as well as the evil I have done; forgive me, O Lord forgive me all, of thy great goodness, through Jesus Christ thy Son. Amen.

THE PURIFICATION.

"Dear Joseph says
We are not able to present a lamb,
My little Son;
But art not Thou the promised Lamb of God,
My Holy One?

"Then let him take the pretty turtle-doves
For sacrifice,
But I will carry Thee, my spotless Lamb
Beyond all price.
"My Son, my first-born Son! And not yet mine
Till with Thyself
In Thine own Temple Courts I do redeem
Thee to myself.

"Dear Joseph waits;
Then come, my Holy Lamb, with dew of heaven
In Thy white fleece.
My Wonderful, my Counsellor, my God,
My Prince of Peace."

THE USE AND VALUE OF EUCHARISTIC VESTMENTS AND CEREMONIAL.

What are the reasons why the wearing of the Eucharistic vestments, that is the Chasuble, and the other vestments which go with it, in the Church of England is desired?

What are the reasons why there is a wish for the type of ceremonial which often accompanies the use of the vestments?

In the first place, the use of the vestments and ceremonial is an outward mark of the true history and real position of the Church of England. The Church of England of to-day is the living heir of the Catholic Church in this country of the fourth century or the sixth or eleventh or the fifteenth. It is no new body freshly formed in the days of the Reformation. The aim of the Anglican Reformers, plainly set out in their own words in the Preface of "The form and manner of making, ordaining, and consecrating Bishops, Priests and Deacons," was to continue the same ministry of Bishops, Priests and Deacons which had been in the Church since the days of the Apostles; and in continuing the same ministry, to preserve the life of the same Church. Whatever was accomplished or destroyed by the storms or by the constructive movements of the period of the Reformation, there was no break or interruption in the life of the Church of England. The Church here was the same Church in the year 1662 as it had been in the year 1509. Now, no vestments, no ceremonial, could make this continuity if it did not already exist. But, supposing that it does exist, an outward sign of it may have its value, as supplying what is easily seen and known of men. Such a sign there is in the use of vestments and ceremonial which bear some general resemblance to those of an earlier time.

It is a momentous fact of the Church of England that its life can be traced back beyond the peroid of the Reformation, and to the days of the Apostles themselves. With this fact must be linked another. Whatever the outward division may be, the Church of England at this moment is in real living union with the Churches of the East and the Church of Rome. These all, however externally sundered, are but different parts of the one Church of Christ. Alike they trace their ministries back through the course of ages to Apostolic hands. Alike they have preserved the orders of Bishops, Priests, and Deacons. Alike they claim and own the Divine revelation of the Holy Scriptures as the foundation of their beliefs and life. Alike they proclaim the doctrine of the historic creeds as their rule of faith—the Church of England and the Church of Rome, the three identical creeds; the Churches of the East, with the exception of the Filioque clause, the creed of our Communion Office. Alike they possess the same sacramental life, imparted in the sacraments of Holy Baptism and Holy Communion, and thereby share in the same sacramental union with our Lord and Saviour, the Head of the Church. Here, perhaps, you may trace excess, and there defect; here, perhaps, you may put your finger on abuse of one kind, and there on an abuse of a different kind. Easterns, Roman Catholics, Anglicans—we all have the treasure of divine truth and grace in earthen vessels. But, whatever exess or defect or differing abuses there may be, these make up one Church, and hold one religion. As part of the practice and life of that religion, they have the same great Sacrament of the Eucharist. In St. Petersburg and Constantinople, in Rome and in Paris, in St. Paul's Cathedral, in the churches of the country districts of Spain and of the villages of England, there is the same Eucharist as the center of sacramental life. Here, again, no vestments, no ceremonial, could create this real union if it did not already exist. But, since it exists and is too little recognized, it may well be marked by an outward sign which may plainly be seen. Such an external mark may be found in vestments and ceremonial having some sufficient general resemblance. I say, general resemblance. East and West have their own characteristic ways of thought and habit. North and South of necessity do not view all things alike. The Church has occasions of stately functions of most solemn worship, and occasions also of the greatest simplicity. Different minds will be most attracted, or most repelled, by the distinctive features of the gorgeous Liturgies of the East, or of the elaborate pomp of the Roman Catholic High Mass, or of the quiet and unassuming prayer of the Roman Catholic Low Mass, or of the structure of the rite in the Book of Common Prayer. In each and all of these there is the same Sacrament, the Eucharist ordained by our Lord and Saviour and preserved throughout the Church; and a needed sign of this identity may be shown in our English churches by the use of the Eucharistic vestments and of such harmonious ceremonial as may be appropriate in any particular case.

The use of Eucharistic vestments and ceremonial is also a witness to doctrine. It is, of course, the case that the vestments were originally a form of the dress of ordinary life, and that they were retained by the Church when no longer otherwise used. It is no less true that very much in Eucharistic ceremonial was an adaptation of ceremonies in use in courts of the state. But the meaning of an act or thing is not always to be wholly known from its origin. Eucharistic vestments and ceremonial, whatever their history, have, as a matter of fact, come to mark a doctrine. As the use of them in the Church of England illustrates the continuity between the existing Church and the Church of past ages, and the living sacramental union between the Church of England and the Churches of the East and the Church of Rome at the present time, so it marks a common doctrine in regard to the Eucharist in the past and the present and in different parts of the Church to-day. When I speak of common doctrine some may think that I am idealizing. I do not plead guilty to the charge. The most serious and sustained study of my life has been the study of the history of Christian doctrine. That study has left me with the knowledge of plenty of facts which are awkward for any theory on this subject, which any one may choose to propound. But when I have considered what I am saying in the light of the facts that are awkward, as well as those that are harmonious, I repeat, with the fullest sense of responsibility, a common doctrine; a common doctrine, that is, lawfully held now in the Church of England by those who wish to adopt Eucharistic vestments and ceremonial, held in the Church of England before the Reformation, and held in the Churches of the East and the Church of Rome. In regard to the doctrine of the Eucharist there have not been wanting distortions and misconceptions at many different times of the Church's history. You can find them in the Church of the first six centuries. You can find them in the Church of the Middle Ages, both in the East and in the West. I do not suppose that they are wholly lacking to-day in Russia, or in Greece, or in Italy, or among English Church people. Moreover, both in the early Church and in the Middle Ages there were widely divergent ways of expressing and explaining what was believed. Further, the Church of England by the methods in which its formularies are phrased has left room within its borders for very different types of opinions on this subject. When the due allowance is made for distortions and misconceptions and divergent ways of thought and expression, there remains what I call a common doctrine between those who now wish for the use of Eucharistic vestments and ceremonial in the Church of England, the Church of England in the Middle Ages, and the Churches of the East. It is the doctrine that in Holy Communion Christians receive the life of their Lord and Saviour; that the consecrated Sacrament is His spiritual and risen and ascended Body and Blood; that the Eucharist is the presentation before God of His merits and life—of His human life taken for us in the Incarnation, surrendered unto death for us on the Cross, shown as His eternal possession for our sakes as well as for Himself in the Resurrection and Ascension—and of His abiding pleading in Heaven. The witness to this doctrine is not impaired by such a survival as that of the use of the vestments among the Lutherans in Scandinavia. If the common doctrine did not already exist, no vestments and no ceremonial could bring it about. Seeing that it does exist, they may afford a valuable outward testimony to this fact.

At this time the air is full of ideas and projects of reunion. Many such ideas and projects concern the relation of Protestants to ourselves. Far be it from me to say one word in discouragement of so holy a cause as any which may plan such a reuniting on principles which are consistent with the constitution and history of the Church. In our mindfulness of these projects, do not let us forget the great historic Churches of the East and of the West. Certainly, to have realized only a little of their life and power is to be filled with hope that we may not always be outwardly sundered from them. Eucharistic vestments and ceremonial may have some part to play in bearing witness to facts, the acknowledgment of which tends toward reunion. They, indeed, have value, as they give dignity to worship, or as they may aid devotion and prayer; but this is not all. I would not share for a moment in any defence of them which claims that they are but of little meaning. Rather, I would insist on their value, not because they mean little, but because they mean much; not because they are unimportant, but because they add emphasis to important truths. REV. D. STONE.

PARISH NOTES.

The Bible Class of the Guild of the Holy Cross will be discontinued during Lent.

The parishioners are reminded that the fiscal year of the parish begins on the 25th of March. All pew rents should be sent to the accounting warden before that date that he may close his books on March 24.

The following Retreats will be held during Lent:

Holy Cross Guild, second Sunday in Lent.
St. Katherine's, third Sunday in Lent.
Men of the parish, Mid-Lent Sunday.
St. Mary's, Thursdays in Passion Week.

The Rector desires to recommend to those of the congregation who desire a Church paper on Catholic lines, The American Catholic, which is published in the West. Subscriptions may be sent to Henry B. Ely, Colorado Springs, Colo. The price is $1.00 per year.

The Rector requests the members of the congregation to refrain from conversation in the church. If it is necessary to talk with one's friends, this may be done in subdued tones in the corridor before entering the church, or after leaving it. Conversation in the pews at any time is unseemly and very disturbing to those who worship.

The Rector wishes to announce, through the columns of the magazine, that the use of his name as a member of a "Committee of Publicity" for the "Home Missions Council of the so-called Federation of Churches," was entirely without his authorization or consent. He has no connection with the organization and has had his name withdrawn.

On the evening of January 27 a very interesting lecture was delivered by Dr. Grenfell in the parish hall. Dr. Grenfell is a medical missionary for the Church of England, who is carrying on a most splendid work among the fishermen on the coast of Labrador. He is a man of magnetic personality, and his lecture and illustrations were very fine. The hall was filled to its utmost capacity, so that very many of our own people were unable to gain entrance. A collection was taken up to the amount of $160.

An undisputed authority on ecclesiastical architecture, whose own work has made a strong appeal for the revival of true Christian art, refers to the photograph of the new reredos and sanctuary of St. Clement's, as follows:

"I have the utmost difficulty in expressing my admiration for this singularly beautiful piece of work. It appeals to me in every particular, and if it is as fine in color as it is in design, it must be one of the most notable examples of sound ecclesiastical art in America."

The Order of the Holy Cross has been the recipient of a beautiful gift in the shape of a high altar for the chapel of the monastery at West Park. The altar, designed by Ralph Adams Crane, of Boston, is of Caen stone, and the treatment is very beautiful in its dignified simplicity. The service of consecration took place on Candlemas Day, when many friends of the Order were present. The Bishop of Salina was the consecrator, and the service used was the same as at the consecration of St. Clement's altar. The gift is from the Rev. Elliot White, of Newark, and is a memorial to his parents.

A Missionary Rally, under the auspices of the Pennsylvania Branch of the Woman's Auxiliary and a committee of the Church Club, will be held in Witherspoon Hall, Walnut and Juniper streets, on Tuesday evening, March 23, at 8 o'clock.

Mr. George C. Thomas will preside. Mr. George Wharton Pepper will speak of Diocesan Missions, and Mr. W. R. Butler, of Mauch Chunk, will speak of the missions of our country, including work among the colored people and Indians.

The offering will be for missions.

It is with real regret that we note the retirement of Mr. Rommel as publisher of this magazine. During the year that it has been under his management, it has been excellently conducted and much improved.

In this connection it may be as well to say a word as to the support of the magazine. In all its history it has never paid for itself. The cost of publishing varies from $350 to $400 a year. Of this amount about $131 is furnished by subscriptions, and $160 by advertising. The sale of the magazine last year brought in only $19. We trust that the people of the parish will manifest enough interest in the continuance of the magazine to pay for its support. If not, it may be discontinued after another year.

The following reports have been received:

Through Miss Fryer—The report of the Prayer Book Society, St. Clement's Church, has given $65 and, as heretofore, is the largest contributor.

Through Mrs. Brock—The report of the Bishop White Parish Library Association. This society supplies books to the number of twenty-five to clergy who are unable to purchase large libraries. St. Clement has contributed $77.

Through Miss Adelaide Howell—The Church Periodical Club. This club distributes books and magazine to missions and clergy in distant fields. Eleven persons in St. Clement's parish have sent literature. Five hundred and sixty-three magazines have been received.

PARISH FINANCES.

For many years St. Clement's Parish has been endeavoring to raise large sums of money for special objects. Since the advent of Father Moffett as Rector, and under his incomparable leadership, the debt which was a heavy burden has been removed, the new clergy house erected, an endowment fund of generous proportions has been accumulated, and the new altar and sanctuary completed. That these things have been possible betokens a devotion on the part of the congregation that is beyond praise. To have raised in fifteen years a sum aggregating roughly $90,000 shows a large generosity of spirit and real self-denial for the glory of God.

But as we look back upon the past with gratitude and satisfaction, we must not forget that we are to provide for the future. The parish resources have been drained to their fullest extent up to the present time, and while we have been generous in contributing to special funds, the current expense account has suffered.

During the last twenty years the expenses of the parish have been steadily increasing for one cause or another. The new parish house has meant greater activity in certain lines of work. The building is in use every night of the week excepting Saturday, and the cost of heating and lighting is a considerable item. Other expenses have increased in proportion, and we find that at the present writing our people are not supporting the church. There is a deficit every month in the current expense account.

This is not an unusual condition in the life of any parish, but it is a condition that ought not to exist. That it does exist is an evidence that while many are doing all that they are able to do, others are doing far less than they are able, or nothing at all. We have reached a period in our parish history where we must consider this subject seriously, and we surely could have no better time than the present.

We have reached the end of our "special funds." It will be a long time before we can think of any further outlay upon the church edifice, excepting such repairs as are necessary for the preservation of the fabric. We must, for the next few years, concentrate all our efforts on putting the parish on an honest financial basis. The obligation to pay debts rests upon a church as well as upon an individual.

The vestry have considered the subject seriously, and ask the co-operation of every member in the task of providing adequate parish support.

One realizes that this is not a popular subject. Persons who come to church on Sundays only, and ask for occasional ministrations from the clergy, are not often concerned with, or do not reflect upon the fact that the existence of the parish church, and the possibility of priestly ministrations are both dependent upon a financial income—and if any person accepts the benefits of the church, and does nothing or next to nothing for its support, he is as dishonorable as a man who contracts bills which he can not pay.

For example, many persons realize the importance of keeping the buildings clean and in good repair. One is never liable to forget this, as complaints are often made upon the slightest pretext. But those who complain are oftentimes not inclined to contribute generously toward the support of a competent sexton, who may employ needed assistance; still less are they inclined to pay for needed repairs. It is, of course, necessary that the sick should be visited, the dead buried, marriages solemnized, and the consolations of religion brought to human souls; but this necessity does not often inspire a man to contribute generously to the parish funds. Yet, if such a one were asked for a donation toward altar flowers, or a memorial window, the response would probably be immediate and generous. In the one case he has visible evidences of his generosity, in the other he has not. If one compares the amounts contributed for "current expenses" and those taken for "special funds," we may easily discern which object is the more popular.

At this present juncture in our parochial history the members of the congregation are asked to remedy this condition, and turn their liberality in the direction of church support, where offerings are really needed.

Toward the furtherance of this object the Rector and vestry would state that, until furher notice, no special funds will be created, and that the only special object at present for which contributions will be received is the endowment fund. This, of course, does not exclude offerings for special memorials of a personal nature.

In order that every member of the parish may have an opportunity to contribute something toward its support, a package of envelopes for the weekly offering will be sent to each communicant. Every person in the parish should take these envelopes, and no one need feel that his offering is too insignificant, even if he can afford only a cent a week. The envelope system secures a regular income to the church and also is a continual reminder of one's obligation. We trust that no one will refuse to do his part.

We are confronted by a condition which demands the interest and attention of every member of St. Clement's. The church can not exist without funds. This message is sent to every member of the congregation.

"What are you doing for the church?" "Is it the very best that you can do?"

The attitude of the future Archbishop of York with regard to Catholics may be gathered from the following statement made by him as Bishop of Stepney not long ago:

Bishops must recognize a wide zone of toleration, and within that zone must now be included the Eastward position, vestments, lights at the celebraton of the Holy Communion, unleavened bread, the mixed chalice either before or at the offertory, and incense, in the sense that it is a scriptural and historical adjunct to the services of the Church.

It is also necessary for a Bishop to permit reservation of the Sacrament, simply for the purpose of communicating the sick, because many of the clergy have a conscientious objection to consecrate, and therefore communicate, after they have broken their fast.—American Catholic.

THE MISSIONARY OFFERING.

On Sexigesima Sunday, Dr. Lloyd, the General Secretary of the Board of Missions, preached at the 11 o'clock mass, and the offerings at all masses were devoted to the mission work of the church. The total amount given amounted to $276, apportioned as follows:

Special, Bishop Weller	$50
Special, Bishop Osborne	30
Special, Dr. Grenfell	5
Special, Bishop Spalding Estate	3
Special, Bishop Rowe	5
Special, Archdeacon Stuck	2
Special, Rev. Edward Newton	3
Special, Bishop Restarich, St. Andrew's School	3
Special, Archdeacon Russell, St. Paul's School	2
Special, Rev. Robert E. Wood, Wuchang	50
Diocesan	2
San Francisco Building Fund	12
St. Agnes' Hospital, Raleigh, N. C.	25
General	34
Convocation North Philadelphia	50
	$276

In addition to this amount $100 was sent direct to Fr. Lobdell, and $100 to Bishop Griswold.

THE WORK AMONG DELINQUENT CHILDREN.

Every week, in a court room on the sixth floor of the City Hall, is held a session of the Juvenile Court. Boys and girls under the age of sixteen, dependent and delinquent, are there heard, and great pains are taken to start the wayward little feet in the right track again. Dependent children—homeless, neglected or abused—are consigned to proper care. Very delinquent children are committed to reformatories. Those who show a wish to be better, and whose parents are capable of restraining them, are returned to their homes, in the care of the probation officer.

It is this part of the work that the writer has been asked to describe, as few know how actively our own church is helping it.

The probation officer is appointed to assist the court in getting such information about each child as may help to decide what is best for him; if he is placed on probation, she must watch him, reporting to the court if he does not make good probation. She is sworn in and works under the court's direction. But this department of the city's work was started as an experiment and has not yet been placed on the city pay roll. It is carried on chiefly through the efforts of the Juvenile Court Association, which has asked various churches and organizations to pledge enough for the salaries and expenses of suitable women. "Suitable" means experienced and old enough to use mature judgment and common sense in emergencies, and above all devoted to the holy cause of saving helpless, ignorant children from the temptations placed in their way. "Whoever shall offend one of these little ones . . . it were better that a millstone were hanged about his neck, and he were drowned in the depths of the sea!" What will Divine mercy have left for the man who teaches eleven-year-old boys the cocaine habit, at 10 cents apiece; for the man who waits at the doors of the nickel theaters to seduce fourteen-year-old girls; for the woman who teaches little girls shop-lifting ("Put on my big shawl, and you kin swipe a hat"); for the junk-dealers who buy miscellaneous articles from children on the sly?

There are at present thirteen probation officers working under the auspices of the Association, besides some appointed by the court and doing special work. One of the thirteen is colored, and has the work among colored delinquent children. She is very efficient, and needs to be.

Two have the Jewish children, one north and one south of Market street. The city is divided into sections, and the rest of the probation officers have each a section. Their work generally is about the same, and so it may be as well to take up the work of the trained worker whom the Bishop appointed to represent our church in this undertaking.

She is in care of all Juvenile Court cases in the section extending from Broad and Chestnut streets south to League Island and west to the Schuylkill River, investigating those held for the court, and looking after the probationers. There is the routine work of calling at each child's home once a month, or once a week, as his parents may need more or less help. There are the regular office hours, held at a house on South Twenty-third, in the very heart of the district; Saturday mornings for schoolboys, Monday evenings for working boys. There are the long consultations with those who are minded to help wayward or discouraged children. There are heart-to-heart talks with young offenders facing the unknown terrors of "court." There are last hurried interviews with anxious parents at the very door of the court room. There is the very bad quarter-of-an-hour at the bar of the court, while Johnny wonders if "the lady what gits 'em off" will speak for him. The ordinary monthly report shows about three hundred visits made and fifteen cases in court.

Here comes in the interesting part. A great deal of "preventive" work can be done among the children of a neighborhood, if the probation officer comes to be recognized by the children as their friend. And in this particular section the "social" place is used as the basis and lots of good volunteer work has grown out of it. You know little about a child till you know his playmates. Rev. Dr. Richardson has cordially endorsed the plan, and given the use of the assembly hall at St. James' Guild House, for the second and fourth Tuesday evenings of the month. Each probationer receives a printed postal card, addressed to himself. He writes on the space left on the reverse side the name and address of any boy he brings with him. He is met at the door and on the stairs by members of the "committee," chiefly big fellows who have outgrown probation and been honorably discharged, coming back with their friends "to give the kids a good time." Coming into the hall, the floor manager meets him and gives him the number of the group with which he is to play. Miss Julia N. Sinkler, who with Miss Henry represents the church in the Juvenile Court Association, comes in and furnishes delicious cakes for the further enjoyment of the company. (A boy may be ever so bad; his appetite is invariably good.) The committee's part of the plan may interest those who have heard of the "Big Brother" movement. The older boys—ex-probationers—held a meeting at the office, talked over the situation, and decided (fifteen of them) to be "big brothers." They are efficient, courteous, and always ready to do "one more thing." At Christmas time two of them worked all day, marking and tying up the gifts for the seventy-five boys then on probation. At the City Mission Christmas Tree five of them volunteered to help, and handled a very rude set of ragamuffins in a masterly way. They are the probation officer's chief dependence now, in getting at those wild little boys—and they themselves? Too big to be treated as children, few realize that they can be treated as men. Oh, they do need help so! They are too old for a woman to help very much, but if any man wants to do a little "big brothering" now, there is one particular young fellow, motherless, out of work, in rather poor health, and needing a good, strong friend.

Which reminds me. I recently saw two of my boys cruelly wronged for the lack of competent legal advice. One offer to help in that way would be warmly appreciated.

This article must not close without a reference to the warm-hearted women among whom the probation officers find many helpers. Poor themselves, they nevertheless supported a homeless boy for two months. They had a small rummage sale in the office one month. The next month they carried a subscription paper; the names made a lonely record of neighborly kindness—amounts were from 2 cents up, and many of them so poor they hardly could spare that. They came to the socials, and are a blessing generally.

Just now the preventive work is about as follows:

(a) During office hours a large table in the middle of the room is used for playing games. Under cover of that cheerful sound, quiet talks go on at the desk in the corner. Many of the company are merely friends of the probationers, some of "de gang"—Schuyler Rangers, Ramcats, Flatters, or Chow-Chow gangs—from ten to twenty boys at a time.

(b) Social order, forty to ninety boys.

(c) Ladies' Aid. Lots of quiet personal missionary work among the mothers; there are saints among these poor, tired women.

(d) Summer outings. From ten to a hundred at a time.

(e) The little girls on Gray's Ferry road. A little meeting is held in the parish house at Twenty-seventh and Wharton, Saturdays at 3 p. m. Help is urgently needed here. A sort of dolls' sewing meeting is intended to attract some of those lawless little girls and give them one innocent pleasure. They are very wild. They want a cooking-class, and the kitchen is available, if we had $2 a week to spend on materials, etc. This would provide for a class of ten, part to sew and part to cook, each week, and it would be a tremendous help.

During the past year about $125 was spent in the above ways. Most of it was given by the City Mission, in addition to paying the salary and expenses of the probation officer. The people themselves help in every way they can.

Sometimes the effort to win these children from their evil companions, to keep them steady at school or work, to train them to faithfulness in church duties and love of God and country—yes, it does seem like "trying to bail out the ocean with a dipper." But even after three years of it, one finds encouragement. Three years ago you were asked by the Magistrate to talk to a sullen-looking boy whom the police consider "a bad 'un." Now he is your right hand almost, a polite, manly, splendid fellow. You meet a big chap on the street who is eager to tell you where he is working. He is the one for whom you begged "one more chance" at the bar, when he suddenly reformed and was a comfort during his mother's last illness. She prayed God to bless you and you feel you are blessed.

Yes, it is worth while.

This is missionary work to the little strangers at your gates.

Would you like to help?

A BALLAD OF TREES AND THE MASTER.

Into the woods my Master went,
Clean forspent, forspent.
Into the woods my Master came
Forspent with love and shame.
But the olives they were not blind to Him,
And the little gray leaves were kind to Him;
The thorn tree had a mind to Him
When into the woods He came.

Out of the woods my Master went,
And he was well content.
Out of the woods my Master came
Content with death and shame.
When Death and Shame would woo Him last
From under the trees they drew Him last:
'Twas on a tree they slew him—last
When out of the woods He came.

SIDNEY LANIER.

CATHOLICISM AND RATIONALISM.

By the Rev. Harvey Officer, O. H. C.

(Reprinted from the American Catholic.)

Some time ago I heard of a man who propounded what seemed to me a most paradoxical and absurd doctrine, the doctrine that nobody had any business with opinions. It had seemed to me previously, as probably it seems to most men, that my opinions, at least, were my own. They might be wrong, I would admit; might be quite untenable, but still they were mine. And I should have said, surely I have a right to my own opinions.

Yet it is just this last statement which the paradox which I have quoted is concerned with denying; yet and denying very strenuously. We have, it seems, not only no right to our own opinions, but we have strictly no business to have opinions at all.

If, for example, I say, "It's my opinion that, in view of certain circumstances, it will be right for me to steal the double-eagle from the cashier at the bank while he is not looking," people do not trouble much about the sanctity of my personal opinion in the matter, but they take good care to see that I am put in a place where my opinions as to gold pieces will not be put into practice. Again, if I am convinced that the people about me are in a conspiracy to deprive me of my right to the throne of Portugal I shall find that they will care very little about showing me the fallacy underlying my views, but will simply be concerned about seeing that I am housed in such a manner as befits my claim. And the world in general will approve their action, and will not repeat its accustomed formulas about "liberty of thought," but will treat me as sensible people must treat lunatics and criminals.

It appears, then, that in certain directions it is quite generally recognized that a man has no business having opinions. Yet here we may notice a difference. If I can carefully conceal my undoubted right to the Portuguese throne, keep it as a secret in the depths of my own soul, and however much I may feel the blood of kings stirring in my veins, am resolutely determined that no one shall pierce my identity, it is altogether probable that I shall be let go scot free. Nobody objects to an opinion that is carefully bottled up. If Mr. Dick could only have kept his interesting opinions on Charles the First from getting in the open he might really have become the model of wisdom which Miss Trotwood considered him to be. And in the case of the double-eagle, it is plain that a man who resists the inner feeling that urges him to regard the piece of gold as his own, is really only doing that still quite common and glorious thing—resisting temptation.

But people who will not give the criminal and the lunatic the sacred right to their opinions are still ready to declare that in the mere matter of his creed a man must have a right to believe whatever he likes. If a man holds queer and individualistic views about himself we put him in the asylum; if he is is inclined to confuse the lines of property rights we shut him up in jail; but if he holds a peculiar faith about God, which no one believes but himself, he must be treated with great consideration. Maybe, we say, he is a prophet of a new faith; or maybe he has a special revelation. At any rate, he must be allowed to hold his own views. For a man who is crazy as to what he is himself, we build a sanitarium; but for a man who is crazy as to what God is, we like enough build an auditorium.

It has come to pass that we have given a name to men who thus have what is called the courage of their convictions; who give free rein to their own individual opinions. We call them rationalists. It is a good name for them, for it means that they know the reason for everything. There are a good many rationalistic people about us; people that is, who have adopted a certain opinion about the meaning and issues of life, and have founded their creed upon that opinion. In general, the opinions that lie beneath their elaborate and complicated systems resolve themselves into two. There is the opinion that matter alone is real: a view which we call materialism; and there is the opinion that soul or mind alone is real: a view which we call spiritualism.

Now, both these opinions are, at first glance, very easy to hold; for, in the first place, neither is mysterious. Our inheritance from the nineteenth century includes the idea that it is difficult to believe in mysteries; and so when a man tells us that his spiritualistic doctrine, whatever form it may take, is a perfectly logical one; and then proceeds to show that God is all, and all is God; that God is mind, and therefore mind is God; that nothing else but God exists, and seeming mortal existence is merely a dream; we say this is all perfectly logical and consistent. There is not a flaw in the argument. In like manner the materialist, arguing from his scientific knowledge, assumes that matter and force alone have existence; that their laws are immutable, and that there is no evidence of any free will in the universe; we say this system of thought is complete and convincing. Nothing is left for me to believe in but the changeless law by which my life is bound. As a matter of fact, it appears to be almost a toss-up, whether a man will be materialist or spiritualist in these days. It seems to depend on which side gets at him first. We note, merely as a trend of the time, that just as, thirty years ago, the materialists had it mostly their way, so now, in our own day, the spiritualists are drawing the crowds. Exeter Hall was the temple in 1880—but in 1908 the Greek columns of the Christian Scientists symbolize the fashion.

But in the meantime, having put all mystery from their convincing creeds, the men who believe in them are obliged to face mystery in their daily lives. The "Scientist" who goes to the Greek Temple and listens to Mrs. Eddy's mystical formulae, comes home to Sunday dinner and faces the mystery, for which his creed makes no provision, that he is hungry. The "Scientist" who all her life has given herself to the doctrine that disease is the result of "mortal mind," whatever that may mean, must perhaps some day face the fact that she is dying of cancer of the liver, and in that slow and painful death her creed again fails her. It coldly says that pain and death do not exist. She must draw near to that non-existent agony with the belief that her pain might not be if only she could believe.

Or again, the materialist, confident of his godless and law-ordained universe, must come to the moment when his child disobeys him; when he, forgetting his creed, appeals to the child's love, to his willingness to sacrifice himself for others, to his desire to do something for others; and for all such persuasion he can find no reason in his reasonable creed. When men eliminate all mystery from their creeds they must face mystery all the more in the ordinary practical life of every day. If I deny the mystery of the creation of the world, I can not understand how the last society novel came into existence; if I deny the marvel of the love of God for man, I am at loss to explain the love of a mother for her child.

Now, there is only one faith in the world, one view of what God is and of what man is, which is not the result of man's opinions, but is the result of God's revelations. That faith is called the Catholic Faith. Its doctrines are all mysterious, but in the light of these mysteries we understand what our life is meant to be. It is not a series of opinions, thought out by this or that man, and based upon an ultimate denial. It is a consistent body of doctrine based upon the eternal and historical fact that God has entered this human life of ours—that the Word was made Flesh.

To the Catholic, then, there is a certain folly about what men call rationalism. He sees people about him taking up with one fad of thought after another, with one creed after another. And his verdict of it all can only be: "These people do not really believe what they profess to believe; they do not yet know what it is to have a creed." For a creed is not an opinion, but is the statement of that truth by which a man may live. There is only one such creed that comes to us with the authority of all times back of it—with the authority, that is, of being a creed that all men may live by, that all men may believe. That is the Creed of the Catholic Church into which we were baptized, in the faith of which we live.

I am not concerned to-day with the proof of this creed of ours, nor with the disproof of the varying opinions which the men around us strive to uphold. I wish merely to emphasize the great difference between the Catholic and the Rationalist point of view. There are times when the clash of opinions around him seems to the Catholic almost ludicrous. It is as if he saw men who possessed no notion of the true meaning and sanctity of the marriage relation; who had been born, let us say, into a society where moral life was founded upon the principles of the divorce court, painfully striving by argument and bitter experience to get at the true doctrine of the marriage relation. The Catholic knows the truth about God and about his own duty to God. Such questions are to him no longer open questions, to be reconsidered in the light of every fresh magazine article. They are, as some one said, no longer issues. As issues they are dead; but as truths they are, like the Lord Christ Himself, "alive for evermore." This is why the Catholic sometimes seems to the ordinary serious rationalist too "cocksure" about truth. Doubtless Columbus seemed too cocksure to the rationalists and dilettantes of the Court of Ferdinand. The man who is sure of his creed can go ahead and act on it, can make day by day the venture of faith, can put to the proof of his inheritance of sonship. Of course, he may not do so. But he is far more likely to do so than is the man who is still trying to find out how much or how little he can believe—or whose creed, logically perfect, is found to be practically worthless.

For us, as Catholics, the great words of the Epistles become true. It is the faith that is our strength. We are bidden to resist the onslaught of Satan, the devouring lion, "steadfast in the Faith." We are to built up our lives, day by day, "on our most holy Faith." Our whole moral conflict is to be waged in the power of this fact, that we are "rooted and built up in him and established in the Faith."

ENGLISH NOTES

From the "Canadian Churchman"

In 909, when King Edward the Elder had been eight years upon the throne, Archbishop Plegmund consecrated in one day the seven Bishops of Winchester, Selsey, Sherborne, Dorchester, Ramsbury, Wells, and Crediton, and the three last were newly-founded sees. Ramsbury was some 830 years ago united with Sherborne, and the bishop of Salisbury now rules the two former dioceses. Winchester and Wells still have the cathedrals of their respective bishops. Dorchester, after belonging to the Diocese of Lincoln, is now represented by Oxford, and Crediton has since 1050 been transferred to Exeter, but provides a title for the popular Suffragan-Bishop, Dr. Terfusis. A commemoration service, at which the Bishop of Bristol will preach, is to be held early in June at Holy Cross Church, Crediton, which has been in turn monastic, cathedral, collegiate, and now parochial. The bishops of Exeter, Crediton and Marlborough intend to be present, and Archbishop Plegmund's successor at Canterbury will be there if his engagements permit. The successors of the other bishops consecrated in 909 have also been invited. Wells also intends to celebrate its millenary this year Bishopthorpe Palace, near York, will be the richer by two interesting features when Dr. Lang comes into possession than it was when Dr. Maclagan succeeded to the Primacy of York. The palace, which was built by Archbishop Walter Gray In the reign of Henry III., contains a beautiful Early English Chapel, which was allowed to fall into great disrepair. Dr. Maclagan has, however, restored it to its ancient beauty. He has also erected a memorial here to Archbishop Scroope, who met with so tragic and summary a fate in a field near Clementthorpe.

We feel and see with different hearts and eyes:
Ah, Christ, if all our hearts could meet in Thee
How well it were for them and well for me,
Our hearts Thy dear accepted sacrifice.
Thou, only life of hearts and light of eyes,
Our life, our light, if once we turn to Thee,
So be it, O Lord, to them and so to me;
Be all alike Thine own dear sacrifice.
Thou who by death hast ransomed us from death,
Thyself God's sole well-pleasing sacrifice,
Thine only Sacred Self I plead with Thee:
Make Thou it well for them and well for me
That Thou hast given us souls, and wills and breath;
And hearts to love Thee; and to see Thee, eyes.

A Holy, Happy Easter

"But thanks be to God, which giveth us the victory. Through our Lord, Jesus Christ."

Jesus lebt! mit ihm auch ich

Jesus lives! Thy terrors now
Can, O Death, no more appal me:
Jesus lives! By this I know
From the grave he can recall me:
Brighter scenes at death commence
This shall be my confidence.

Jesus lives! To him the throne
High o'er heav'n and earth is given;
I may go where he is gone,
Live and reign with him in heaven:
God, through Christ, forgives offence;
This shall be my confidence.

Jesus lives! Who now despairs,
Spurns the word which God hath spoken:
Grace to all that word declares,
Grace, whereby sin's yoke is broken:
Christ rejects not penitence;
This shall be my confidence.

Jesus lives! For me he died
Hence will I, to Jesus living,
Pure in heart and act abide,
Praise to him and glory giving:
Freely God doth aid despense;
This shall be my confidence.

Jesus lives! My heart knows well
Nought from me his love shall sever;
Life, nor death, nor powers of hell
Part me now from Chrfst for ever:
God will be a sure defence;
This shall be my confidence.

Jesus lives! Henceforth is death
Entrace-gate of life immortal:
This shall calm my trembling breath
When I pass its gloomy portal:
Faith shall cry, as fails each sense,
'Lord, thou art my confiidence.

PARISH NOTES.

The parish election will be held on Easter Monday in the vestry room of the parish building. Pools open from 12 m. to 2 p. m.

The Rev. Father Fiske, of Norristown, will preach in St. Clement's on Sunday evening, May 2, in behalf of the Christian Social Union.

The communicants are reminded that they should fill out an Easter communion card, to insure the preservation of their names on the parish list.

On Sunday, March 14, Father Schneeweiss conducted the retreat for Saint Katharine's Guild, and the retreat for men was conducted by the Rector on March 21.

As in former years, the parishioners are asked to lighten the burden of the clergy during Holy Week by making their confessions as early in the week as possible.

The offering on Easter Day will be devoted to current expenses. If an amount approximating $3,000 was raised, the expenses for the summer would be provided for.

The retreat for the Guild of the Holy Cross was held on Sunday, March 7, at the Mission House. The conductor was the Rev. Father Huntington, O. H. C. A large number made the retreat.

Contributions are asked for the flowers for the altar of the Blessed Sacrament on Maunday Thursday, and for the high altar at Easter. Money may be sent to Miss Arnold, 3803 Spruce Street.

Father Schneeweiss—Thursday, 4 to 5 p. m. Good Friday, 3 to 5, 7 to 8 p. m. Easter Even, 3 to 5, 7 to 10 p. m.

A PRAYER FOR GOOD FRIDAY—SUNSET.

Blessed Lord with whom I have striven to abide this day; abide Thou with me in all the great and agonizing days of my life. I have stood by Thy Cross while Thou hast suffered; stand Thou O Lord by me when I am suffering! Forget that I have been wearied and listless, and have in vain striven to keep my soul altogether faithful. Forget that I have counted the hours long that I have spent by Thee. Remember only that I have striven, and that I have truly loved and that I have earnestly believed. Strengthen Thou the weak places of my soul; keep out the tempter now and ever. O my Lord do not listen to his accusations of me. Love me, love me for whom Thou wast willing to die. Bind my heart in the strongest bands of love for Thee, and make me willing to die for Thee. When I come to die be Thou to me a friend and comforter: do not leave my side for weariness—for the call of others who may say they need Thee. Do not count the hours long that Thou mayest watch me dying—shorten them in Thy good mercy, but do not leave me till I die. Give me visions of Thyself: O do not leave me nor forsake me. The dread of that day weighs upon my soul. O make that day Thine as this day has been Thine. I have tried not to think my own thoughts this day, O do Thou in that day give me thoughts to think. I have fasted this day for Thee: O do Thou on that day give me of Thyself to eat and drink. The sun has gone and the Fast is over. When my last sun goes down may my fast be over forever, and refreshment and perpetual life begin. Amen.

PRAYER TO OUR LORD CRUCIFIED.

O Lord Jesus Christ, who for our sakes wast lifted up on the cross, lifted up from the grave, lifted up into glory; draw me unto Thee, good Lord, that in heart and mind I may ascend to Thee: may set my affections on Thee and things above; and with Thee continually dwell where Thou sittest, at the right hand of God.

Thou who wast lifted up upon the cross, draw me unto Thee, good Lord.

Thou who wast lifted up from the grave, make me to know the power of Thy resurrection.

Thou who wast lifted up into glory, make me set my affections on things above, not on things on the earth.

O Thou whose hands for my sake were pierced with sharp nails! whatsoever evil I have by my hands committed, whatsoever good I have left unwrought: forgive me, good Lord.

O Thou whose feet for my sake were fastened to the accursed tree, whereinsoever my feet have been swift to do evil, or have been slow on errands of love and mercy; forgive me, good Lord.

O Thou Whose side for my sake was pierced with a spear, in whatsoever my mind has been vain and foolish, and my heart evil and corrupt; forgive me, good Lord.

O Thou Who didst bear my sins in Thine own Body on the tree, forgive me that I have yielded my body an instrument of unrighteousness unto sin, and grant me grace to present it a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God, which is my reasonable service.

NEWS FROM WUCHANG.

(LETTER FROM FATHER COOPER.)

"JANUARY 15.

"We are now just about to begin one grand round of days in Hankow, in attendance at, first, on Sunday, the ordination to the diaconate, of six new graduates from our Divinity School, and then on Monday till Wednesday, inclusive, a conference of Shanghai and Hankow (the two districts) workers. It promises to be very interesting. Father Wood is to have a paper on evangelical work, that is as distinct from other branches of the work as educational, literary or medical.

"A telegram came the other day, telling us to buy a certain bit of land much needed by Boone College. It is a piece that juts into our property, and is necessary in order to complete harmoniously the building plans that were formed when Ingle Hall was built. This telegram also enabled the Bishop indirectly to go ahead on the purchase of a site for the Women's Hospital, and that, in turn, leaves the old quarters (rented) of the Women's Hospital for Miss Byerly's school for high-class girls, the daughters of mandarins, rich merchants, etc. These two latter are both on the other side of the city (hill intervening), and so we get a foothold in the midst of new neighbors, and where missionaries are scarcer than on this side of the hill. I think I have told you that for some reason all the missions at work in Wuchang, with but one exception, are huddled together in this part of the city—the Swedish, our St. Saviour's, the Roman Catholic, the London, and our Boone School are in an almost continuous line. The Alliance Mission is not far away. Of course, we have two churches, one outside the North and one outside the South Gates. But the large tract on the south side of the hill is vacant except for the Wesleyan Mission. Now we are to establish our Women's Hospital and a girls' school out there. After the Chinese New Year, a Chinese priest is to go to St. Mark's (outside the South Gate), and a catechist is to be stationed within the wall in a rented house; the beginning of a new parish in what we might call South Wuchang. The Chinese say 'Hill Back' and 'Hill Front' for North and South Wuchang, respectively.

"One wonders to see the work grow with such rapid strides, and now, today, January 17, we have had another decided advance in the ordination to the diaconate of six young men, graduate of the Div. School, whose instruction has been mostly in English. It is a remarkable advance, for they are the best trained Chinese clergy that have, as yet, been possible. The advantage of their training in English is that they have a larger and freer access to books. It was a real pleasure to send them such of our duplicates as we thought would be useful to them."

THE BISHOP OF LONDON AND HENRY VIII.

Some of you, says the Rector of the Church of the Advent, Boston, in his "Weekly Message" to his flock, may have read a famous Unitarian's words before the recent "Liberal Religion Congress" in Boston, about the English Government's "robbery of the Roman Catholic Church in the sixteenth century to endow a new Church of its own creating." It was in answer to that unpardonable falsehood that the Bishop of London spoke so plainly in Richmond, as here below:

"The religion that was at the very back of all was the religion of the old Church of England. Now I find one or two people even in this up-to-date America a little ignorant about ancient Church history, and I find some so absolutely in the depths of ignorance as to imagine that the Church of England began in the reign of Henry VIII. I want to say to you that the Bishops of London have sat in Fulham Palace without a single break for 1,300 years. The very frogs in the moat at Fulham know better than this, and all the jackdaws in the tower of Fulham Church are astonished that up-to-date America can make such an extraordinary mistake."

Apropos of this utterance, the witty Bishop of Marquette wrote the following lines:

DROP THE TAIL.

A thousand tadpoles dive and float
In quiet, mossy Fulham moat,
Who recently were much confounded
To hear that Henry VIII had founded
That Church, with jurisdiction wide,
Where Fulham Bishops still preside.
Alarmed, they ask the frogs and daws,
If they can show sufficient cause,
Such gloomy tidings for believing.
The answer comes, and is relieving.
The daws and all their kindred rooks
Find nothing like it in the books.
They join in clamor, all assuring,
That XIII centuries enduring
An Anglo-Saxon or a Latin
London's historic see has set in.
And thus, with common croaks and cries,
These callow tadpoles they advise,
That lest their growth in Knowledge fail,
'Twere best that they should "drop the tail."

NEWS FROM WUCHANG.

THE WOMEN'S HOSPITAL.

Just a year ago, in a fit of desperation, we broke loose from the compound, and gave the Elizabeth Bunn, the Women's Hospital, a new start on the other side of the city. The year was not what might be called an easy one, it was one of experiment. Should the experiment fail, on our own heads be it; should it succeed, the immediate future spread out in a rosy hue, but all conveniences and comforts in work and in living must needs retire into the shade, and a very deep shade at that. But American enterprise rarely cries quit, and so it was with us. We more than doubled our work of the preceding year in most branches, and as things are going now we are afraid to predict how many times the work of the preceding year will go into this.

For the first time in the history of the hospital we were able to keep it open in its time of greatest need—the hot, weary, sick summer months. There were two unavoidable weeks without foreign supervision, and only one of those with no foreign doctor within call, and the history of the cases who owe their lives to the intelligent care of those hot, sick summer weeks have more than repaid us for the prickly heat and washed-out appearance that in ourselves were the only marks of the summer work. Next summer we hope to arrange it so that one of us will be on the ground all the time.

Of course, there were cases that could not be saved, such as Asiatic cholera (it was a cholera summer) and two or three of Noma, that dreadful gangrene of the cheek that attacks poorly nourished infants, and one or two newly born who came into the world without even a fighting chance. But many were relieved and helped, and the chorus of howling babies that may be heard at each session of the dispensary shows that we are still popular, and the loudness of the howls that there is still some strength left.

Three out of five little cribs are occupied, one by an old friend, Lieo Chen Sen, who has outgrown his hip splint to such a degree that it was necessary to have a larger one made by the brass smith. Chen Sen had three months in Kuling, and he has changed so from the little scrap that used to spend all his days in bed, dreading our approach, to a round-faced, romping, happy boy, that we wonder how in the world his brace ever holds together—such is the usage he gives it.

We have four tubercular cases in at present, one of them a schoolgirl, the senior two of these have come up wonderfully under those fine physicians' samples that have come to us recently from New York and Philadelphia. Another has, in addition to her lung disease, an enormous abscess which projects just above the hip as large as a cocoanut, we are waiting for her husband's consent to open and drain; we want him here in case of collapse and possible death. Later—Abscess opened and the patient is enjoying her first painless moments for many a day. Still later—She has been taken home to die.

We have, coming to the dispensary daily, a dear old lady, who came with a carbuncle at the back of her neck reaching almost from ear to ear, and from the hair line to the vertebra prominens. The odor was so bad at first that her son requested that no other patients be in the room while it was being dressed, as it would be embarrassing for her. She is sixty-seven. Where would she be now if there had been no one here in August when she came to us? The place has so filled up that in another few days it will be like an ordinary carbuncle, and she is ready and willing to cast in her lot with the rest, and have her dressing done when it is most convenient. Condition, excellent; attitude, overwhelmingly grateful. She is a superior old body, her son is a teacher in one of the government schools, his concern for and care of his mother in her days of feebleness were all that could be desired in any man.

We have one baby coming daily that is literally covered with abscesses, she takes as long to have her dressings changed as do five or six of the others, and, to add to the troubles of the poor little scrap, her mother has carried infection to her eye from one of her numerous abscesses, and she has a Purulent Opththalmia.

The summer at home is a time of rest and recreation for most of us, rather a hard time for the slum babies, but the various fresh air funds and seaside charities help these little ones, but here it is the same old story for the rich and poor, high and low, a time of abscesses and carbuncles, of fevers and pestilence, and they know no help but the little we can give—one or two foreigners among so many.

Our nurses have risen to the occasion nobly. We were obliged to drop one, but the others are ready and willing, and a great comfort to us.

We are much encouraged by the interest shown by our friends, standbys and mainstays, in the homeland.

Keep it up and we will keep you informed.

Remember us in that moment
"When none but God is near."

Sincerely and gratefully,

(Signed) MARY V. GLENTON.

THE VALLEY OF SILENCE.

In the hush of the Valley of Silence
I dream all the songs that I sing,
And the music floats down the dim valley
Till each finds a word for a wing,
That to hearts, like the dove of the deluge
A message of peace they may bring.

But far on the deep there are billows
That never shall break on the beach,
And I have heard songs in the silence
That never shall float into speech;
And I have had dreams in the valley,
Too lofty for language to reach.

And I have seen thoughts in the valley—
Ah, me! How my spirit was stirred!
And they wear holy veils on their faces—
Their footsteps can scarcely be heard;
They pass through the valley like virgins,
Too pure for the touch of a word.

Do you ask me the place of the valley,
Ye hearts that are harrowed with care?
It lieth afar between mountains,
And God and His angels are there;
One is the dark Mountain of Sorrow
And one the bright Mountain of Prayer.

FATHER A. J. RYAN.

THE CATHOLIC ADVANCE.

Time was, and not so long ago as to be outside the memory of all but octogenarians, when a weekly Eucharist was one of the marks of an extremely High Churchman and a daily celebration of the Divine Mysteries was unheard of except in a very few parishes in England and America.

The news now comes that Ash Wednesday will see the restoration of the daily Mass at Rochester Cathedral, bringing the number of English Cathedrals where the daily Oblation is offered to thirteen. The fact that this vital point, for which Catholics have labored since 1840, is becoming a commonplace in the routine of some of our greatest Cathedrals and parish Churches is an augury of good to the Anglician Communion, and earnest Catholics may well rejoice that the essentials of the Church's doctrines and practices are no longer confined to those Churches which were of old labelled ritualistic.—American Catholic.

ENVELOPE SYSTEM.

As empowered by the Rector and Vestry, the committee appointed to place in the hands of each parishioner a package of fifty-two envelopes for regular weekly contributions to the current expenses of the Church for the year 1909-10, have completed their work. To each member of the parish has been mailed a package of envelopes with a statement from the Finance Committee. (If any one received duplicates, please return to the Rector.) Each package of envelopes is numbered and a record kept to whom sent, to wit: No. 10, John Jones; No. 11, Mary Smith, etc. If by chance any names have been overlooked, it is earnestly asked that the Secretary of the Vestry be notified at once. The envelopes should have reached each parishioner not later than March 27. The Rector and Finance Committee have said all that need be said on the subject, but that our memories may be refreshed a little and as a further understanding of the envelope system to those of modest means—of whom the writer of this article is one—we print herewith an extract from the July (1908) issue of the Magazine:

"If one hundred of our boys and girls would each contribute through the envelopes five cents per week, it would give us the tidy sum of two hundred and sixty dollars ($260.00) per year. If one hundred parishioners would give ten cents per week, we should have another five hundred and twenty dollars ($520.00), and then if one hundred others gave twenty-five cents per week, we should have still another large amount—thirteen hundred dollars ($1,300.00)—these three groups of contributors aggregating two thousand and eighty dollars ($2,080.00) additional to the income, which would enable the Rector and Vestry to further the interests of the parish in innumerable directions. The above three hundred contributors would still leave nearly one hundred of our people to be heard from. Among these, of course, would be our sick and our poor. The Vestry do not expect those who can not afford to contribute to give anything. The clergy are ready to administer a loving service to all such gladly, and the resources of the church are at the command of the humblest parishioner, so far as it is in the power of the Rector and his curates to use them, and this is one of the strongest arguments for each member of the parish who can afford to contribute to do so in proportion to his or her blessings. It enables the corporation to care for those less fortunate than 'we ourselves.' Therefore, the support of the parish becomes a privilege, a matter of conscience, a matter of honor, a matter of duty."

Up until the present time only a small one-third of the members of the parish have used the envelopes for their weekly offerings. The Finance Committee are confident that not a single man or woman, boy or girl of St. Clement's parish will disappoint them, now that the proposition has been so clearly brought to their notice. Give what you can. Give as generously as you can, and give regularly.

CHURCH LIGHTS OF THE PAST.

Until comparatively recent times the means for the artificial lighting of churches were of a most inadequate kind, judged by modern standards and requirements.

During the Middle Ages two kinds of lights only were in use—lamps and candles. The lamps were of the primitive sort, in which a small wick floating on the surface of the oil is contained in a vessel of glass or metal. These might be permanently fixed on stone standards, or suspended from the roof by ornamental chains.

The amount of light afforded by this arrangement, which could be depended upon for purposes of illumination, can be gauged by any one who has observed the feeble rays given out by the seven Sanctuary lights when burning alone in the Chancel.

To supplement this meagre form of illuminant, the candle was naturally the only alternative, not only as being more reliable from a practical standpoint, but from a ritual one as well. For use in processions and to stand upon and about the various altars, and on each side of the great lectern in the choir, they have ever been regarded as especially appropriate and proper.

It must be remembered that anything approaching the brilliantly lighted modern church, in which the worshipers can follow the evening services in their books, was altogether unknown in mediaeval times, when responses, chants, and hymns had to be known by heart if they were to be sung at all.

The usual offices were arranged to be said by daylight, except the early masses, and these latter were in many cases endowed to provide for a sufficient number of candles to make bright at least the immediate surroundings of the altar where they were celebrated.

From the thirteenth century onward a perpetual lamp burned, at least in the larger churches, before the high altar, in honor of the reservation of the Blessed Sacrament. This was usually of the floating-wick variety, before mentioned, and was suspended from the chancel roof. Many references to these in wills, inventories, and church wardens' accounts testify to the widespread use of these aids to devotion.

Candlesticks for the altar also came into general use in the thirteenth century, although they had been customary in many churches for a long period before this. They were usually in pairs, and in the larger churches and cathedrals were almost invariably of silver. Practically all of these, with the other rich fittings to which the piety of the Middle Ages had given such beautiful expression, were removed by the self-constituted "reformers" of the sixteenth century, who, while they saw much danger to souls in the rich adornments of God's House, had no such scruples when the same articles which had beautified the altar were transferred to their own homes.

In this connection it is interesting to note how frequent are the cases in which the impulse of the Church revival of the early seventeenth century, and after the Restoration of 1660, had inspired various donors to enrich the churches once more, and among the numerous benefactions the mention of altar candlesticks often occurs. The cathedrals of York, Rochester, Salisbury, Norwich, Exeter, and Durham might be cited, and in these are fine examples still remaining, in most cases made of silver.

In the early part of the eighteenth century the custom became very general of lighting the churches with chandeliers of brass. These for the most part were composed of a large central ball, with graceful branching stems for the candles. Many of them are still found, and visitors to Stratford-on-Avon Church may have noted the particularly fine one hanging in the north transept. The ones in Christ Church, Philadelphia, belong to the same class, and will be remembered by most persons who have studied this, the finest of our Colonial churches.

With these examples the period of illumination by candles alone comes to a close, and as the era of gas and electricity is now with us, the use of the candle and the hanging lamp has become altogether a ritual one, and their beauty and fitness for this purpose being unquestioned, they will never be superseded, but will continue to be a help and a delight to future generations, as they have been in the past.

CROSSING THE BAR.

Sunset and evening star,
And one clear call for me!
And may there be no moaning of the bar
When I put out to sea;

But such a tide as, moving, seems asleep,
Too full for sound and foam,
When that which drew from out the boundless deep
Turns again home.

Twilight and evening bell,
And after that the dark!
And may there be no sadness of farewell
When I embark.

For though from out our bourne of Time and Place
The flood may bear me far,
I hope to see my Pilot face to face
When I have crossed the bar.

—Alfred Tennyson.

LITTLE THINGS WORTH REMEMBERING.

Human companionship counts for so much in this life—but, after all, the sharpest corners are to be turned alone.—Elizabeth Stuart Phelps.

The truth which another man has won from nature or from life is not our truth until we have lived it. Only that becomes real or helpful to any man which has cost the sweat of his brow, the effort of his brain, or the anguish of his soul. He who would be wise must daily earn his wisdom. —David Starr Jordan.

FORBEARANCE.

Hast thou named all the birds without a gun?
Loved the wood-rose and left it on its stalk?
At rich men's tables eaten bread and pulse?
Unarmed, faced danger with a heart of trust?
And loved so well a high behavior,
In man or maid, that thou from speech refrained,
Nobility more nobly to repay?
Oh, be my friend, and teach me to be thine!

—Emerson.

The truly religious soul needs no miraculous proof of the goodness of Christ. —Tyndall.

Remember the week-day to keep holy!

Those who try to do something and fail are infinitely better than those who try to do nothing and beautifully succeed. —Jenkin Lloyd Jones.

Happy is he who can find time and heart to stand on the edge of spring and listen for the coming of the birds and flowers.

ENGLISH NOTES

From the "Canadian Churchman"

The excavations now proceeding for underpinning purposes outside the north transept of Winchester Cathedral have brought to light, from a depth of 10 feet, what is believed by some to be a Druidical altar and by others a saxon font. It takes the shape of a block of stone, some 2 feet high, worked into a circle, with a shallow cavity in the top, and weighing about 6 cwt. The stone has been placed in the crypt to await expert opinion.

Eastertide

An Invocation

The Lord preserve thy going out,
  The Lord preserve thy coming in,
God send his angels round about
  To keep thy soul from every sin.
And when thy going out is done,
  And when thy coming in is o'er,
When in death's darkness all alone,
  Thy feet can come and go no more,
The Lord preserve thy going out
  From this dark world of grief and sin.
While angels standing round about Sing, "God preserve thy coming in."

PARISH NOTES.

EASTER ELECTION FOR VESTRYMEN AND MEETING FOR RE-ORGANIZATION

The annual election for twelve Vestrymen was held in the Parish House, Easter Monday, April 12, 1909. Polls being open from 12 to 2 P. M. The following communicants of the parish were elected to serve for the ensuing year.

Francis D. Wetherill, G. Theodore Roberts, Francis M. Berry, George H. Lea, S. McKean Bayard, Clinton Rogers Woodruff, Caleb F. Wright, G. Lewis Mayer, William Weaver Lukens, Stevenson Hockley Walsh, Edward A. Casey, J. Lawrence Wetherill.

At the meeting for re-organization Mr. Francis D. Wetherill was appointed Rector's Warden; Mr. Stevenson Hockley Walsh elected Accounting Warden; Mr. Caleb F. Wright elected Secretary of the Vestry.

Delegates elected to the General Convention, Mr. S. McKean Bayard; Mr. J. Lawrence Wetherill; Mr. Clinton Rogers Woodruff.

EASTER TIDE.

The day broke most gloriously. The air was cold and bracing, and as the sun was seen to rise—as we say—higher and higher in the heavens, the faithful were found in the streets in all parts of the city, making their way with joy in their hearts to their parish churches. The song on their lips was the grand old hymn of praise of which this world will never tire, "He is Risen!" The disappointments, the heartaches, the big, sad spots of the last year were for the moment forgotten in the great song of our holy religion—"He lives! Death is swallowed up in victory. . . . But thanks be to God who giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ!" All the services at dear old St. Clement's were well attended—the 7 o'clock Mass particularly so. Four hundred—more than two-thirds of the members of the parish—made their communions, and, of course, there were a number of our people, living at a distance, who made their communions at churches nearest their homes.

Oh, the joy, the sweetness of that celestial moment, as we knelt in adoration and peace before our own beautiful altar, and listened to the words of consecration which made the pure, the holy sacrifice just what our dear Lord meant it to be to each one of us. Definitions lost their meaning—they were not needed. After the heavenly, the spiritual manner, our Risen Lord was really and truly present in the great sacrament, and we had come early in the morning to meet Him.

The music at the late Mass was Gounod's "Sacred Heart of Jesus," first sung by St. Clement's Choir when Dr. Mortimer was with us in 1878. If memory serves, Dr. Mortimer, who was then Choirmaster, adapted Gounod's music to the English words, and the choir sang it from his manuscript. The choir on Easter Day used the full printed score gotten from England and presented to them by a parishioner, a mighty good friend of the choir and of us all.

At the night service Smart's B flat Magnificat and Nunc Dimitus and Jordan's Festival Te Deum in C were sung with a quartette of horns and tympani. At the late Mass and Evening Service every seat in the church was occupied. The highest mete of praise must justly be given our faithful Choirmaster, S. Wesley Sears, for the intelligent and masterful way the men and boys rendered the music. The attacks were fine, the concerted parts—especially The Benedictus of the Mass—and the fugues were most beautifully and accurately sung. The night service was exceedingly well done. The Te Deum went along like one triumphant shout of joy and gladness. Mr. Sears had a handicap in not having the services of our solo tenor, who was suffering from a bad throat, but, in spite of that fact, we heard praise on all sides, and most often was mentioned the devotional spirit of the work throughout. The Mass, as will be remembered, was rendered without the aid of instruments other than the king of instruments—the organ.

May thoughts of this holy, happy Easter be with us during the coming year, and go with us throughout the journey of life, and at the end may the bliss of Paradise be our portion.

The afternoon of Easter Day the Sunday School service was held, at which the money from the Lenten self denials was presented. This money will be sent to Father Lobdell for his work in Rutherfordton, N. C.

The Pascal candle was decorated this year by Miss Anna P. Prichett. The design, though not elaborate, was beautifully worked out, and the colors used were of bright festive hues. We are very grateful for this service.

A Pascal candle and standard were sent to Christ Church, Bordentown, N. J., by a member of the parish, in pious memory of Father Moffett. The candle was decorated by an old artist not a member of St. Clement's.

During Eastertide, it is the pleasant duty of the secretary of the vestry to write a line or two of appreciation to the various lay folk engaged in active parish work. This has been done this year as usual. The secretary makes special note in this issue of the magazine, of the conscientious and faithful efforts of our sexton, Thomas Williams. All winter long the Church has been scrupulously clean. This condition has called forth favorable mention by the rector and vestry. We thank the sexton heartily.

We all remember that the Queen of Festivals fell on April the eleventh of this year. It may be interesting to many of the readers of the Magazine to learn that Easter Day does not again fall on April the eleventh until 1971, sixty-two years.

The Altar Guild has just presented to the Rev. Nelson Kellogg, of St. John's Church, Poultney, Vt., a most beautiful set of white Eucharist vestments, chasuble, maniple, stole and burse and veil. The silk was a rich cream brocade, the design one of pomegranates worked in reds, with much gold thread. The sacred monogram in the center of the Cross. A letter received from him tells how much they have been appreciated and admired by his people. It was a great pleasure to the Guild to be able to work them for him.

The writer of this article has often thought, when looking at a congregation from the rear of a church, how very little attention was given to their attitudes when taking part in the service. Some bend languidly forward while praying, others kneel, but sprawl their elbows on the back of the front pew and bury their faces, and still others disappear almost entirely from view. So much for their attitudes in prayer. When then stand, they nonchalently fold their arms or strike some other equally irreverent and disrespectful pose. And then, how they crane their necks to be sure to not miss seeing any one around them, or how early or late they may be in arriving or departing. Should it ever be the lot of any of these individuals to be presented at some foreign court, how anxious and careful they would be not to make any mistakes while in the presence of royalty, and how earnestly they would pour over rules of court etiquette, etc., in order that they might go through the ceremony without any faux pas. Yet, when it is their privilege to worship before the King of kings and Lord of Lords, how indifferent and careless they are! It is very hard always to keep our minds and thoughts from wandering during our devotions, but it is possible to keep our bodies in an erect and reverent position, and by so doing the worship we offer Almighty God would surely be more acceptable.

It is with an ever increasing sense of obligation that the Secretary of the Vestry takes this opportunity to thank the good friends of the parish for the vestments presented to Christ Church, Bordentown, N. J. They were as follows:

A white set, including a cope, in memory of Alice Elizabeth Leigh.

Green set in memory of Father Moffet.

Red set in memory or Neill Wolff.

Violet set in memory of Annie Monroe.

Black set in memory of Laura Compton Wright Reukauff.

Three red cassocks in memory of Charles Tate Holl, sometimes Crucifer at St. Clement's Church.

A beautifully embroidered Amice in memory of Alida V. R. Throckmorten.

We feel sure St. Clement's parishioners will be glad to learn of the splendid work being done by the new Rector of Christ Church, Bordentown, the Rev. Harry St. Clair Hathaway, who was a choir boy at St. Clement's from 1878 on. Mr. Hathaway was called to Christ Church parish late last year. He found a spirit of apathy prevailing. He at once set to work visiting his people—marshalling his forces—and by the time the Bishop came for his yearly visitation, there was a confirmation class of thirty-three—the largest in the history of the parish. His little conferences on Catholic religion and ritual have awakened a sincere interest among his people and a new impetus has been given parish life. Mr. Hathaway asked his people for $500 to "put them on their feet." The Easter offering amounted to $533, Sunday School for missions, $41.63—total $574.63—a very large amount for a country parish, and stood for "giving until you felt it" for a great number of his people. We are often asked the question, "What becomes of the choir boys?" Here is one from whom we have heard. Mr. Hathaway has asked the Secretary of the Vestry to express to the friends of St. Clement's his gratitude for what we have done for him and his parish, and to tell them of the deep appreciation of his Vestry who will later formally acknowledge our gifts. No one can know, so well as the shepherd of the flock, of the perfect joy it is to a Catholic priest to stand before God's altar properly vested, and which at last, after years and years of waiting, the Rector of this old Catholic parish is now able to do. A word of special thanks is due Mrs. Connelly and the woman of our Altar Guide, also the all Saints Sisters, of Baltimore, for their beautiful embroidery, and the perfect way in which the colors of the Orphrys were blended and the vestments made. Just as our MSS. goes to the printer, word reaches us that one of Mr. Hathaway's choir boys, Winfield Carr, a faithful little lad, had been killed in a trolley accident. He sang on Low Sunday night for the last time. He lost his life the next morning. God's great love and pity be with those who mourn his loss and may he rest in peace, and pray for that portion of the vineyard he served so well.

TWO WONDERFULLY BEAUTIFUL MUSICAL SACRED COMPOSITIONS.

Gounod's greatest contributions to church music are the St. Cecelia Mass and the Mass of the Sacred Heart of Jesus. Both of these masses are intensely devotional and both are intensely dramatic, and they are likewise both so beautiful that one can hardly say which is the more so. As we listen to the St. Cecelia Kyrie, with its glorious trio soaring above the chorus, we might almost think it the music of the angels; and yet, is not the Kyrie from the Sacred Heart just as effective in its more quiet and less brilliant way?

Then, again, to quote from a recent number of St. Clement's Magazine, when we hear the Incarnatus sung pianissimo to the beautiful harmonies of the St. Cecelia Mass, what a wealth of devotion springs from the heart as we feel inwardly rather than realize intellectually the marvelous mystery of the Incarnation of our Blessed Lord. But is this any greater or even as great as the Crucifixus from the Sacred Heart, with its rhythmic, throbbing accompaniment, representative of the full loving pulsations of His Sacred Heart, which make our souls quiver with feelings too deep for any expression save tears—of anguish at the thought of His suffering; of contrition because that suffering was caused by our sins, and was endured "for us men and for our salvation."

In the Sanctus of the St. Cecelia, with its remarkable tenor solo and its magnificent crescendo of cumulative "Holy's," it would almost seem as though we had reached the greatest ecstatic height of praise; yet we turn to the Sacred Heart and find a Sanctus which is more satisfying, perhaps because more simple, and also because of being sung by the full choir throughout. The Prayer Book says: "Therefore with Angels and Archangels, and with all the company of heaven, we laud and magnify Thy glorious Name, etc." This would surely admit of no such thing as a solo for any voice, but should be one grand acclamation of praise from all the people.

The Benedictus from St. Cecelia, with its quiet, almost Gregorian spirit, is most impressive, but the effect is much more real and beautiful when the quartette sings "Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord," to the exquisite melodies of the Sacret Heart, with the responsive "Hosanna in the Highest" by the full choir. And we should all know that the Benedictus is really a song of triumph, and should therefore be set to music of a triumphant character.

The Agnus Dei from St. Cecelia is perhaps the most satisfying of any that have ever been written; and how splendidly Gounod has divided the three sections by placing a tenor solo between the first and second, and a soprano solo between the second and third, using the words, "Lord, I am not worthy that Thou shouldst come under my roof, but speak Thou the word only and my soul shall be healed."

Of the two Glorias, one really must say that the Sacred Heart is more beautiful, with its pianissimo "Glory be to God on High," first sung by the trebles alone, then by trebles and altos, next with tenors added, and finally by all the voices, followed by a glorious outburst on the words "We praise Thee, etc." working up brighter and brighter, and culminating in the fine short fugue "In the glory of God the Father," and the stirring Amen Chorus.

But we love both masses so much, and each one seems to touch our religious emotions so deeply, that we can really scarcely say that we like either one better than the other.

A friend who visited St. Paul's, London, a few years ago, was told that Gounod frequently went to Christopher Wren's magnificent cathedral to hear the famous choir sing the St. Cecelia Mass. This says much for the adaptiveness and the work of English men and boys.

ST. MARK'S, WHITECHAPEL.

"Some of you at a distance 'let your voice rise like a fountain for us day and night.' We want wisdom, grace, zeal, courage and tact."

The above message has lately come to us across the Atlantic from the vicar of St. Mark's, Whitechapel, London. Some few of us are familiar with the name, as the conversion of the Jews in that particular parish has been one of the petitions offered weekly in our noon-tide intercessions on Fridays, and it is with the hope of interesting others to join us in pleading for these people that these lines are written. St. Mark's Church stands in the very heart of one of the most characteristically Jewish neighborhoods in London, and the Rev. Lionel S. Lewis is vicar alike to the Christian and the Jew. He has a small but devoted band of workers, principally women, but he is the only priest. The work is formidable, but intensely interesting. Not only does the desire exist to make disciples of these people, but in many cases the natural hostility between the two races has first to be overcome—a more friendly feeling is showing itself. The method of teaching the children in the Sunday school is the laying of a foundation through the Old Testament Scriptures, according to the teaching of our blessed Lord: "They are they which testify of Me." The parables of the New Testament are also taught. One feels constrained to desire that St. Paul or Apollos might come back to prove to these souls that Jesus is the Christ.

There are social and football clubs for the Jewish lads, and a debating society is to be started which should be helpful, as interesting discussions on religion arise in the club.

Religion is not thrust upon them, but when they begin to speak, answers are fearlessly given. No discussion on the Divinity of our Lord or the Person of the Holy Ghost takes place as long as the child is at school, but when it ceases to be a member of the school and desires to build upon the foundation already laid, it comes back to its teacher to be instructed.

The work seems to be in an initial stage, as no information is forthcoming respecting the adult population, beyond the fact that they send their children to the Sunday school, and are visited systematically in their own homes by the lady workers.

In these days of religious activity in every department of church work we are apt to forget, or at least to minimize, that which should ever be the most important factor, viz., Intercessory prayer. Yet what says the Psalmist: "Except the Lord build the house, their labor is but lost that build it." It is surely the one activity with which no one can interfere, the fervent intercession does reach the throne of God if we will only cry mightily. Can there be a more interesting subject for intercession than the conversion of the Jew? Should we who are living in the stream forget the source? If so, let us read Romans xi until our hearts burn within us.

Alone in foreign lands, they wondered how
Their feeble word had power.
At home the Christians, two or three, had met
To pray an hour.

Let us pray earnestly "for the opening of the eyes of the synagogue officials," and may the light of God's Holy Spirit so penetrate the darkness of this once favored people that they may be enabled to see Him who came to be the glory of His people Israel as well as a light to lighten the Gentiles.

GEORGE CLIFFORD THOMAS.

MAY HE REST IN PEACE.

On April 21st, 1909, just at eventide, George C. Thomas, one of the most distinguished laymen of the Anglican communion, passed to his rest and reward. We, especially of the Diocese of Pennsylvania, know well of his splendid loyalty to our Holy Mother the Church—his devotion to her missions—his unostentatious and almost limitless charities. There is a record on the minutes of this parish, March 26th, 1897, of a most substantial and friendly action of this good and great man to us in a time of stress. We recall it today with gratitude and extend to our sister parish of the Holy Apostles, our sympathy deep and heartfelt, in their loss. In Philadelphia his name will always be one of our gentlest memories.

On the day of his burial, Saturday, April 24th, a choir of fifty, his colleagues of the vestry, his rector, one deacon, one hundred and twenty priests and six bishops formed in procession on the sidewalk and preceded the coffin into the parish church he loved with such signal devotion—his immediate family and servants following. Hundreds who could not be accommodated in the church, stood reverently in the street, the men with uncovered heads.

At St. Clement's altar we commended the soul of this faithful son to the Loving Father, with the prayer: "Rest eternal grant him, O Lord, and let light perpetual shine upon him. Amen."

Life! I know not what thou art,
But know that thou and I must part;
And when, or how, or where we met
I own to me's a secret yet.

Life! we've been long together
Through pleasant and through cloudy weather;
'Tis hard to part when friends are dear—
Perhaps 'twill cost a sigh, a tear;
Then steal away, give little warning,
Choose thin own time;
Say not Good night,—but in some brighter clime
Bid me Good morning.

A. L. Barrauld.

THE ROGATION FASTS.

There is much to endear Vienne to the hearts of all who loving the Mother of saints love her children also. It can not be amiss, therefore, that we pause to recall it as an ancient Roman colony in Gaul, where, about the same as in Lyons hard by, the Church had been planted by Christians of Asia Minor. It was here that near the close of the reign of Marcus Aurelius, as related in a letter from the churches in these places to the churches in Phyrgia and Asia Minor, some rising of the townspeople against Christians cost the torture and the especially heroic martyrdom of very many saints whose blood has made ever sacred the soil of Vienne.

Its name, more than three centuries later, we find historically united with that of St. Mamertus. On Easter night, A. D. 46, there was a great fire. Earthquakes and other calamities had preceded it, and St. Mamertus, Bishop of Vienne, now appointed fasting and special prayers for the three days which immediately precede the Ascension Festival. Already the religious propriety of entering upon this Holy Day through a somewhat protracted vigil had been recognized, but the ways and the time of its observance were various and uncertain, and were chiefly by prayers which regarded the fruits of the earth—its seed time and harvest. The great Litany sung in procession at this season was written by Gregory the Great, who commanded its first recitation to be upon St. Mark's Day, A. D. 590, that a pestilence at that time raging in Rome might be stayed through invocation. Afterwards it came into use upon the Rogation Days.

The Rogations met early acceptance in the English Church, for the holy keeping of these three days was appointed at the Council of Cloveshoo, A. D. 747. In the early Church the solemn supplications were alternate petition and response of priest and people in their walk from house to house—literally a walking prayer, and in England a parish use of these perambulations was long retained. In fact, at one time they were made to establish the bounds of parish territory, and a special homily was provided to emphasize the teachings of the season. The cross carried at the head of the processions marked them in a special way, and hence the name Cross Week. In the present Prayer Book, use of these three days before Holy Thursday is enjoined upon us in the table of fasts, and we may consider them a minor Lent.

Ever is it the way of Holy Church that we eat the feast "with bitter herbs"—keep vigil ere we feast, approach a festival through the lowly door of a fast. Indeed, the note of preparation runs through all our earthly life. Accept we it ever so joyously, life here is yet the season of bitter herbs, and it is through our eating now "with fear"—seeking to be purged, purified, enriched, in God's appointed ways for us, that we may hope to enjoy the Marriage Feast hereafter. Then do we not find it a special lesson of the days so close at hand that before joy comes penitence?—that we must be severe with ourselves would we be satisfied of God, must prepare for what we would receive of Him?

"The time of the singing of birds is come"—alike the planting time of nature's year, and if the year of grace, and the Church according to her bidding of the olden time, would have us now ask of God His blessings unto the increase of what is sown in soil that has been prepared for it. All the Christian year is the planting time of the Church, but she hath especially her Lenten sowing, and it is much to us that upon these blessed asking days she calls her children unto special discipline, bidding them seek God's further gifts of renewal and of perseverance upon whatever Lenten work has been done in the soul.

It is just here, ere the soul actually enters upon whatever mission journey of the year, that Holy Church cries a halt, and like Jacob when "the sun was set," we are to tarry as for a night. And when the day breaketh, going on our way, God's angels shall meet us at every turn. Of His infinite mercy may He give us the sight to see them, and grace to bear all the answer which they bring.

THE ASCENSION DAY.

Grant, we beseech Thee, Almighty God, that like as we do believe Thy only-begotten Son our Lord Jesus Christ to have ascended into the heavens; so we may also in heart and mind thither ascend, and with Him continually dwell, Who liveth and reigneth with Thee and the Holy Ghost, one God, world without end. Amen.

Concede, quasumus, omnipotens Deus, ut qui hodierna die Unigenetum tuum redempturem nostrum ad coelos ascendisse credimus, ipsi quoque mente in coelestibus trabitemus. Per eundem—Greg Sac—Miss. Sar.

In its germ form our Ascension Day collect is due to St. Gelasious. A century later St. Gregory clothed anew the old thoughts, and so passing into the Sarum Missal, the whole came under translation and revision of Archbishop Cranmer.

Looking into the text we may think gratefully of Cranmer, since it was he who inserted the word "heart," and who thus reminds us that not only are we to think of the place whither our Lord ascended, but that it is upon things above we are to set our affections. "Ascend" is new in the translation, and as we see, the Latin has no words asking that we may dwell "with Him continually."

It is supposed that our Lord Jesus ascended at Nones, and hence, according to to some old rituals, there was a specially solemn observance of this hour of the Holy Day. Many and beautiful and helpful, are this day's teachings. The Blessed Human Soul, and the Glorified Human Body of our Lord Jesus Christ with all the marks of the passion upon Him, are now at God's Right Hand. There He forever maketh intercession for us whom yet He wills ever to feed with His own Precious Body and Blood that so we too, at His call, shall rise again, and one day be with Him where He is gone to prepare a place for us.

If really we come so to love our Blessed Lord that now whilst on earth we seek alway to be with Him in heart and mind, it shall pass into a continual dwelling with Him forever. This is submitted as but a homely way of putting it, yet as we carefully read our collect words, and thoughtfully dwell upon them, perhaps we have one of the most comforting thoughts they hold for us.

But the Ascension Day, above all other days, should call us out and away from ourselves, that so we may rejoice with our Saviour Himself in His glory and great joy. A doctor of the Church has written: "It is the crown of all creation, the wonder of the blessed angels, the union of all being, the finishing of the earthly course of the Son of God, His entrance into glory."

THE THIRD COLLECT AT THE END OF THE COMMUNION OFFICE.

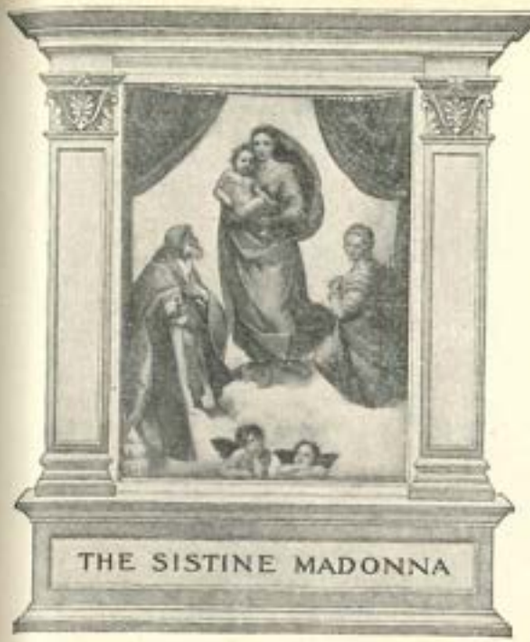
Direct us, O Lord, in all our doings with Thy most gracious favor, and further us with Thy continual help; that in all our works begun, continued, and ended in Thee, we may glorify Thy holy Name, and finally by Thy mercy obtain everlasting life; through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

Actiones nostras, quaesumus, Dom ne, et aspirando praeveni, et adjuvando prosequere: ut cuncta nostra operatio a te semper incipiat, et per te coepta finiatur. Per Dominum.—Sac. Greg.—Miss. Sar.

This Collect we find also in our Institution Office. In the Sarum Missal it is the prayer appointed for the priest's private use after taking off his Eucharistic vestments, and in the same Missal it is an Ember Day prayer preparatory to the ordination appointed for Lent. This also is the place assigned to it in the sacramentary of St. Gregory, and to him the Latin original is due.

In the Prayer Book of present use in England, the collect translation still is faithful to the Latin text, giving "prevent" in the old time sense of going before, whereas in our American Offices the word is "direct." "That we may glorify Thy Holy Name" is an addition which first appears in 1549.

The petition that God's "gracious favor" go before us does but embody the words of our Easter Day collect: "By Thy special grace preventing us," and this favor is the "special grace" of our Mother's catechism injunction unto "diligent prayer." But her seal is set upon the entire teaching of our present collect, in the Tenth Article.



As a prayer for the work unto which priests are ordained, the meanings are beautifully emphasized, but just here it has the wider application which embraces all our daily life. It is much, if in whatever deeps of suffering we are called, the sorrows are accepted as "the blessings of goodness" with which as the Psalmist has written, our Heavenly Father "prevents" us. We ask God to direct us with His gracious favor, yet so constantly forget that as members of Him Who suffered for us, suffering is the very sign of His favor. We are slow in learning that it is by the sweet drawings of the Cross, Christ leads His own.

Though it be darkness where one had expected light, it is the shield of God's favor. Difficulties? "This is God's host"—it is only that human eyes may not see the shining of their garments. So weary in following, doing, suffering? The mystic ladder ever is set beside thee, and the holy angels ascending and descending for ministering unto thee. Doing thy work in the path where God hath set thee, do the prejudice and misunderstanding of others make all thy doings seem as naught? Are others' jealousy and mistrust ever sowing as it were dragon's teeth to come up against thee? Then be very sure it is thy Lord Himself Who laying upon thee this honor, by His own personal touch is giving the continued help which shall further thee unto the desired Heaven.

Nor has he aught to fear from it, who asking God's direction finds the leading is apart from busy ways and common haunts of men. Though his heart ache under the mysteriousness of this, God's special grace to him, there is always one work of love by which he may glorify God's holy Name, for between mountains lieth the valley of Silence:—

"One is the dark mountain of Sorrow,
And one the bright mountain of Prayer."

Ended in Thee. Who does not long that all our work be thus ended? Therefore is the seeking of the altar help which continually Christ wills to give—"that He may dwell in them and they in Him." For our encouragement it has been written. "Christ carrieth us on as our leader, carrieth us in Him as the way, carrieth us up to Him as our home."

THE SISTINE MADONNA

THE STORY OF THE SISTINE MADONNA.

By Professor John C. Van Dyke.

This is a story that will bear repeating because it has never been more than half told, and because people never weary of seeing and hearing about the wondrous picture. It is perhaps the most popular picture in the world; and that is a little singular, too, when we consider that not one person in a hundred fully understands its meaning. It is a church picture and originally belonged to the Church of San Sisto at Piacenza. In that sanctuary it was a part of worship and meant more to the kneeling Lombardy peasants than the chanted prayers of the clergy or the open leaves of the Bible. To-day the picture is in a separate room in the Dresden Gallery, where it has little meaning aside from its art, and where it is almost as much out of place as a statue of Buddha might be in the House of Lords. It has been taken from its original home, set up anew at Dresden, and misunderstood by the world ever since. But all that is a part of the story.

The Figures Are Life-Size.

Raphael was about 36 years of age when he painted the Sistine Madonna. Though still young he had passed through all the pupilage stages. Perugino and the Umbrian sentiment were left far behind. He had absorbed from the work of Fra Bartolommeo, Leonardo, Michael Angelo, all that appealed to him; and he was now adding to his learning the stamp of his own inimitable individuality. The great works, by which he is known to-day, had been painted and applauded to the echo. His name was on every one's lips. Noblemen were glad to count him as a friend, the Pope was his constant patron and admirer, the writers wrote of him as one inspired, and the painters followed him in schools. He was in the zenith of his power. It was at this time (about 1518) that the Black Monks of San Sisto at Piacenza asked him to paint for their church a Madonna attended by San Sisto and Santa Barbara. This was the order that produced the Madonna di San Sisto, or, as it is usually called, the Sistine Madonna.

It is said that the idea of the picture came to Raphael in a dream, as the vision of Kubla Khan to Coleridge, and that he painted the Madonna as he saw her in his sleep. The story may be true, but the construction of the picture does not show the dreamer. Raphael was a practical workman and considered material conditions very closely. This picture was to be an altar-piece; and for those who have never been in Italy it is perhaps necessary to say that an altar-piece was a picture placed directly back of the altar and forming a part of it, much as a mirror forms part of a dressing-table. It was the one object that the worshipers looked at as they said their prayers or heard the mass. During the service the curtains that protected the picture from dust and smoke were looped at the sides, and the picture was thus revealed.

Raphael's picture was painted for the high altar—the chief altar at the extreme end of the building—and it had to be of large proportions. It measured something like ten feet in height by seven feet in width. The figures in it were life-size, well-rounded, realistic, moving. They could be seen the whole length of the church. And the painter meant that the worshipers in looking at them should believe they saw the real Madonna and Child rather than a painted likeness. Illusions in art are not considered the best of motives, but Raphael certainly planned one here; and, as we shall see, he was justified in doing so. His altar-piece taught art, but he saw to it that it should also fulfill its religious purpose and teach the Faith.

The Madonna Appears as if in the Clouds.

Look now at the reproduction of the picture given herewith. The ledge or shelf at the bottom, where the tiara of San Sisto stands and where the two cherubs are poised, is intended to represent a part of the altar-top. That portion of the picture was to fit close up against the back of the altar and give the impression that the tiara and the cherubs are resting on the altar itself. The green curtains at the top, looped up on each side and originally hung from a pole with rings, are again intended to be the real altar-curtains used to screen the altar-piece. These features, all of them in the foreground, are the only objects that are supposed to belong to the church building. The rest of the picture is back of the altar, back of the curtains, on the clouds, in the air. The foreground is terrestrial and material; the background is to be regarded as celestial and spiritual.

We should understand the intention better, perhaps, were we back in the sixteenth century and in this church at Piacenza during service. We should then see the darkened recesses of the church, the kneeling body of worshipers, the moving priests; and we should hear the chanted prayers, the voices of the choir sounding from the nave, and the low tones of the responding believers. We should see the high altar lighted by candles; mass is being said, the curtains of the picture are drawn, and, as in response to prayer, the glorious Madonna with the Christ-Child in her arms appears walking down upon the clouds to meet the congregation. The two cherubs, part of the heavenly host about the Madonna, have already arrived and are leaning on the altar-edge; Santa Barbara at the left is kneeling and turning her face away, dazzled and blinded, perhaps afraid to look up at the celestial visitors; and at the right kneels the patron of the church, San Sisto the martyr, who, all unmindful of himself, is pointing with his finger out toward his people in the church and beseeching the Madonna to intercede for them—to save them. And finally, beyond the Madonna, beyond the saints and the clouds, there is given a glimpse of whence the visitors came. A great aureole made up of the faces of innumerable following cherubs is back of the Madonna. These are rarely discernible in any reproduction. They are clear in the original painting. The throng of these angels seems unending, reaching in waves of radiance from Heaven to earth, and all of them glowing with a strange light never seen before on land or sea—the dawning light of the Eternal Day.

The Painting Was Sold for About $40,000.

Such in brief was the liturgical significance of this noble altar-piece in its original church-setting at Piacenza. For two centuries it fulfilled its maker's design and answered its purpose well. Then in the eighteenth century came emissaries of Augustus III, Elector of Saxony and King of Poland, who sought to buy the picture. The Black Monks were afraid to sell it and yet were sorely tempted by the money. After years of haggling and bargaining they finally let it go for forty thousand Roman crowns (about forty thousand dollars). The picture was taken down secretly and a prepared copy put in its place. The original was then covered with some design in sepia (which could be washed off) to hide its true character and was smuggled across the frontier into Germany. When it arrived in Dresden it was received with enthusiasm, and Augustus even placed it in his throne-room, making at the time some theatrical speech about "Room for the great Raphael." At last it was put in the cabinet of the Dresden Gallery, where it is to be seen at this day.

In its present home, of course, its religious meaning is no longer apparent. The church with its dim-lighted nave, the altar, the acolytes, the swinging censer and the kneeling worshipers have disappeared; and there is no sound of chanting priest and answering choir echoing down the columned aisles. In their place there is a bare room lighted by side windows and a boxlike structure upon which the picture stands. And now the beautiful Madonna walks down upon the clouds not to meet a kneeling host, but perhaps a group of alleged critics who are wrangling about whether she is an intellectual or a spiritual creation; and now the good San Sisto no longer points out to his beloved people, but possibly to an unbelieving mob of oversea tourists who are standing about making ridiculous remarks and wondering what people can see that is interesting in "those old church pictures of the Madonna."

Probably there never was a greater desecration of a noble picture than when the Sistine Madonna was taken down from the altar-niche where it served religion, and set up in the Dresden Gallery where it serves chiefly civic vanity.

It Has Lost Its Religious Import.

Still the picture is well preserved in its present resting place, and though its religious import and much of its decorative charm are gone it is still a work of art. People may read into the faces of the characters what fancies they choose, but Raphael's meaning is not far to seek. The Madonna is of the "Donna Velata" type, and no doubt the young woman with whom he was in love, and who is known to romance as "the Fornarina," was the model for it. It is her features that we see, only they are softened and varied somewhat. The contours are rounded and the eyes are painted very large and wide apart to give the effect of wonder—something that Raphael learned from old Byzantine art. The figure is perhaps not so willowy, not so sinuous, as a Greek would have painted it. It is a little square, a trifle robust, but beautifully drawn and superb in motion. The position of the feet shows that the Madonna is stepping forward, and the flutter of the headdress and the lines of the robe indicate that she is moving against a breeze. The great beauty of the figure lies in its graceful lines and its fine sense of form and movement. But it also has a charm of color. The undervest is a delicate crimson edged with gold; the long flowing robe is blue; the scarf across the throat is of transparent material, and the headdress is an indescribable drab. All the colors are kept in the one key of light and harmonize very well.

The Child Seems Conscious of His Destiny.

The Child is perhaps conceived as the Hope of the World, and the Madonna is holding Him up in her arms—half in awe and half in pride—that the congregation may see Him, may look upon Him, and believing in Him be saved. The look of the face is preternaturally solemn for a Child, as though some glimmering of His mission upon earth had already made the brow thoughtful. The large round eyes placed wide apart are there again as with the mother, and the look of mystery and wonder are there also. Both mother and Child seem conscious of their destiny and yet tremble and are afraid. The modeling of the child's figure is unusually fine. He rests easily and gracefully in His mother's arms with a gentle dignity and yet not unchildlike in the action of the bent knee and the little hand clasping the ankle. Truly a superb mother and child whether of Heaven or of earth!

Santa Barbara, who kneels at the Madonna's left, was a Christian martyr under Maximin. The story of her martyrdom can be read in almost any encyclopædia. The tower in which she was imprisoned, shown here symbolically, is seen directly back of her. The Black Monks at Piacenza had chosen her as one of their patron saints, and that is why she appears in this picture. She kneels gracefully with the head turned to one side and the face averted. There are those, somewhat wiser than their generation, who think they see something coquettish in this action; but Raphael probably intended that the averted face should indicate timidity in looking up at the Madonna and Child. She looks down toward the altar and is possibly praying for those beyond it who are under her protection. She is of fair complexion and wears a dull green, tunic with yellow sleeves, and a red Italian scarf.

The figure again is substantial but graceful, convincing as to its reality, and effective as a balance to the saint on the opposite side—San Sisto (Sixtus II), who was Bishop of Rome for only a year and then suffered martyrdom in the cemetery of Calixtus, A. D. 258. It was for him that the church of the Black Monks at Piacenza was named and he was their chief patron. Raphael has painted him in his ecclesiastical robe—an alba of white linen, a silk handkerchief, a cope of gold brocade lined with red. His whole attitude is beseeching. The left hand placed across the breast and the right hand pointing out seem to say: "Not for me, but for these poor souls that are in my charge."

The cherubs resting below and looking up are so well known that they need no description. They are the vanguard of the angel throng that served the painter by emphasizing the altar-top and connecting the heavenly visitors with the church and its people.

About the Last of Raphael's Great Work.

The whole picture is a pyramidal composition—the apex of the pyramid being the head of the Madonna, and the base being formed by the altar-top. The kneeling saints balance each other, and the figure of the Madonna acts somewhat like a keystone in holding them together. The relief of the figures is emphasized by placing them against the great halo of light at the back and against the white clouds upon which they rest. The curtains at the top, the figures at the sides, and the altar below close out the light somewhat and center attention on the Madonna and Child. And this is as the painter intended it should be.

The Sistine Madonna was about the last of Raphael's great altar-pieces—for it was not long after the painting of it that the famous painter was seized with a violent fever, which, as Vasari tells us, the physicians mistook for a cold and caused him to be bled, "whereupon he found himself exhausted when he rather required to be strengthened. Thereupon he made his will, and as a good Christian he sent the object of his attachment from the house, but left her a sufficient provision whereby she might live in decency; having done so much he divided his property among his disciples. . . . He then confessed, and in much contrition completed the course of his life on the day whereon it had commenced, which was Good Friday." This was in 1520 and Raphael was in his thirty-seventh year. The "object of his attachment," whom he sent away, was none other than "the Fornarina"—the model for the Sistine Madonna. No one knows who she was, and the name of "Fornarina" was not invented until the eighteenth century. Her portrait, attributed to Raphael, is still in the Barberini palace—a beautiful portrait with a circlet of gold garnished with jewels about the head—and on the bare left arm is a bracelet upon which the painter has inscribed "Raphael Urbinus."

LITTLE GEMS OF SERIOUS THINKERS.

THE COMIC SPIRIT.

How low men were, and how they rise,
How high they were, and how they tumble;
O vanity of vanities!
O laughable, pathetic jumble;
O vanity of vanities!
How wayward the decrees of Fate are,
How very weak the very wise,
How very small the very great are.

—Thackeray.

"What does it take to make a rose, Mother mine?"
"The God that died to make it knows:
It takes the world's eternal wars,
It takes the moon and all the stars,
It takes the might of Heaven and Hell,
And the everlasting Love as well,
Little child."

—Quoted in Harper's Weekly.

DUTY.

The sweetest lives are those to duty wed,
Whose deeds, both great and small,
Are close-knit strands of an unbroken thread,
Where love ennobles all.
The world may sound no trumpet, ring no bells;
The Book of Life the shining record tells.

Thy love shall chant its own beautitudes
After its own life working. A child's kiss
Set on thy singing lips shall make thee glad;
A poor man served by thee shall make thee rich;
A sick man helped by thee shall make thee strong;
Thou shalt be served thyself by every sense
Of service which thou renderest.

—Browning.

A PRAYER.

Let me do my work each day; and if the Darkening hours of despair overcome me,
May I not forget the strength that comforted me
In the desolation of other times. May I Still remember the bright hours that found me
Walking over the silent hills of my childhood,
Or dreaming on the margin of the quiet river,
When a light glowed within me
And I promised my early God to have Courage amid the temptations of the changing years.
Spare me from the bitterness and the sharp passion
Of unguarded moments. May I not forget
That poverty and riches are of the spirit.
Though the world knows me not,
May my thoughts and actions be such
As shall keep me friendly with myself.
Lift my eyes from the earth and let me
Not forget the uses of the stars.
Forbid that I should judge others, lest
I condemn myself.
Let me not feel the glamour of the world,
But walk calmly in my path. Give me
A few friends that will love me for what I am;
And keep ever burning before my vagrant steps
The kindly light of hope, and though
Age and infirmity overtake me, and I
Come not within sight of the castle of my dreams,
Teach me still to be thankful for life,
And for time's olden memories that are Good and sweet: and may the evening twilight Find me gentle still.

—Max Ehrman.

But if I plan a little sin,
So small no eye can enter in?

Thou fool! If thy own soul can see,
What need for God to look at thee?

—Evelyn Phinney.

PARISH NOTES.

The Summer School will open on July 12. Contributions for the maintenance of this work are urgently requested, and may be sent to Father Schneeweiss.

The half-past seven mass on weekdays will be discontinued after June 13; also the 8 o'clock mass on Sunday. The 9.15 mass will be a low mass with hymns and without a sermon.

The amount contributed by St. Clement's Branch of the Woman's Auxiliary to the united offering, reached $114. The entire amount raised for missions this winter by the Auxiliary was $216 in excess of last year.

The annual spring meeting of the Philadelphia Social Assembly of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew will be held in St. Peter's Church, Wayne and Harvey streets, Germantown, on the afternoon and evening of Thursday, June 3.

This year the annual meeting of the confraternity of the Blessed Sacrament will be held on the Sunday in the octave of Corpus Christi. Vespers will be sung at 4 o'clock in St. John's Chapel, followed by the business meeting in the choir room.

Again we urge upon those who are leaving the city for the summer to make provision for the support of the parish during their absence. Each year the Accounting Warden is perplexed by the lack of funds during July, August and September. May it not be possible this year to relieve him of anxiety in this matter?

On the first of October, God willing, the Rev. J. Gilbert Underhill will come to St. Clement's as one of our clerical staff. Father Underhill is a warm friend of the clergy, and for the past fourteen years has been Rector of St. John's Church, Camden, N. J. He will have charge of the mission work. Father Venables will remain with us until October first.

It is the hope of the Rector that it may be found possible to hold a mission in the parish next November during the weeks immediately preceding our parish festival. If the plan proves feasible, a more detailed account of the subject will be given in the next issue of the magazine. In the meantime the prayers of the congregation are ask for this object.

ALL SAINTS' MISSION HOUSE AND THE SEASHORE HOME.

By the next issue of the Magazine the Mission House of All Saints will be located on the southwest corner of Race and Woodstock streets. There will be regret, doubtless, in the minds of some that the old building, endeared by many associations, has been abandoned, but the step has been taken only after very deliberate and careful consideration on the part of the corporation, and was a question both of expediency and common sense.

The Lambert Street House was acquired in the year 1900, when the first mass was said in the chapel on June 25. The amount paid for the building was $8,500. Of this amount $2,500 was paid in cash, $2,000 being borrowed from the Community in Baltimore and $6,000 was raised by mortgage. Something over $5,000 was contributed by the outer sisters and friends of the Community, but this amount was used for necessary alterations. The debt upon the house was not paid until October, 1906, when, through the Community in Baltimore, a gift of $6,000 canceled the mortgage, and in 1908 a legacy was used to pay the $2,000 loan.

It has been increasingly evident for the past few years that the Mission House was much larger than the work demanded, and the expense of keeping it up was greater than its usefulness warranted. Formerly, the women's guilds met in the rooms on the lower floors, and many of the parish activities were carried on there. When our new parish building was completed, the meetings of all the societies were transferred to the Parish Hall, and the entire lower floor of the Mission House was useless.

Repairs and heating became a serious problem also. The sisters have never been adequately supported by the parish, and it became a question as to how ordinary expenses were to be met. An enormous amount of repairing had already been done, but when the north wall of the house reached such a condition that torrents of water poured down the inside of the building during a heavy rain, and the kitchen floor gave way, it became evident that the difficulty must be met in some way. The cost of continued repairing was out of the question, owing to the very slender resources of the corporation, and as the building became increasingly damp and unwholesome for a residence, the obvious course was followed. The corporation voted unanimously to sell the present property and to purchase a smaller house, better adapted to changed conditions.

The desirable house on Race street, which is now undergoing needful alteration, was purchased at the low figure of $6,000, and the old property sold for $9,200. When the new house is finished the sisters will have a home much better suited to their needs, with a modern heating plant and proper plumbing. There will still be a chapel large enough to accommodate retreatants and it is hoped that all will be ready for occupancy by the first of July.

The Seashore Home at Sea Isle City was opened in July, 1902. Since that date our people have enjoyed the hospitality of the sisters during the warm summer days; the stay of each person being limited to two weeks. While at first the location seemed to have many advantages, the character of the place has been gradually changing and has become undesirable. Last year a large camp of the State militia was established in the lots adjoining the sisters' property, and brought with it an element which rendered the place most unsuitable for young women and girls. The corporation decided therefore to look for property elsewhere, and the house has been offered for sale.

At the same time, providentially as it seems, St. Margaret's Community relinquished their House of Rest at Cape May, and the sisters of All Saints were asked to undertake its management. The same advantages will be secured for our own people, as heretofore, with the wise exception that a nominal board of $2.50 per week will be asked of those who are able to pay this amount. The railway fare will be free, as formerly.

This arrangement is not permanent, and it is hoped that in a short time another home may be erected. In the meanwhile the sisters still ask for contributions to their summer work.

THE WORK FOR ALASKA.

The week before Lent the Rector appointed a committee to organize a Sewing Society to work for a missionary box to be sent to Miss Woods at Fort Yukon, Alaska, where she is carrying on a good work on Catholic lines. Notices were sent out to the women of the parish asking them to meet in the Parish House on Friday afternoons during Lent to make articles of clothing, etc. The appeal from the committee met with a most generous response both in regard to work and money, the amount contributed being $97.50, $76.42 of which was used for material.

Miss Woods came from the parish of St. John the Evangelist, in Boston, and received her training as a nurse at the Massachusetts General Hospital. Her first work, after receiving her appointment by the Board of Missions was at Circle City, Alaska. After three years, Bishop Rowe transferred her to Fort Yukon, which was at that time a new mission station and where she has done splendid work for five years. Miss Woods is now at home on furlough until September, and being in Philadelphia at the beginning of Lent, stayed over the first Friday to tell the ladies something of her work.

The contents of the box is valued at about $300, and is as follows:

6 women's shirtwaists.
6 large children's dresses.
11 small children's dresses.
3 large girls' dresses.
19 girls' gingham aprons.
18 women's gingham aprons.

IN MEMORIAM.

Many times during the last four years have we written these words! God has seen fit to take from us very many familiar faces and many staunch friends and supporters of the parish have entered upon their eternal reward. Last month, within a period of two weeks, the clergy laid to rest three members of St. Clement's congregation:

Josephine Chamberlain Thomson.
Mary Ann Powell.
Elizabeth Philipson Morgan Willcox.

We write their names only. The sweetness and simplicity of their Christian lives need no praise, nor would those whom we lovingly remember desire it. Enough for us and them that in the communion of saints our prayers unite before the Throne of God.

May they rest in peace.

The following lines were written by the late Lord Mount-Temple on the Crucifix that can still be seen on the outer wall of Romsey Abbey Church, Hampshire.

There are fifteen stanzas in all, but those omitted do not contain anything that would in the least qualify the sentiments expressed in the five selected:

It stands in a quiet corner
Which care'ess eyes might miss,
That Image of the Sorrow,
And fountain of our bliss.

Low within reach it standeth,
Close to the old church door,
And by the common pathway,
Appealing evermore.

Low on the wall, that never
The dimmest eyes may miss,
And the lips of little children
May reach the feet to kiss.

Lord, are Thou call'st our spirits
Within Thy Hands to be Leave us some such dear likeness
To leave behind—of Thee.

Give us to see that Image
By the common paths, like this;
Low, where the dimmest vision
The Features need not miss;
Low, where the lips of children
May reach to cling, and kiss.

THE SOCIETY FOR THE PROMOTION OF CHURCH WORK AMONG THE BLIND.

Some years ago the School for the Blind was located at the northwest corner of Twentieth and Race streets, in the building now occupied by St. Vincent's Asylum. Then, as now, on Sundays the pupils were sent to the neighboring churches, parties being made up to suit the various religious preferences. There were many who really did not belong anywhere, and these were most often sent to one of our Sunday schools, gradually became attached to the Church's ways, were baptized and confirmed. This was a blessed state of things for them, but even so there were a great many who went through their religious duties with the gentle docility of the average blind child, asking no questions, not at all realizing what they were about. The writer, suspecting this, started a class for young communicants and those preparing for the sacraments. One day, after a long, quiet talk, one of the little girls gave a deep sigh:

"I wish now I could be confirmed over again; I'd enjoy it so, now I know what it means." Poor little Annie; she dearly loved her new-found faith; but when she left school, she was with relatives who did not care for "Piscopal ways," and at last went over to their denomination, from sheer loneliness.

Real missionary work is needed among the blind who nominally belong to our Church. Many of them are, like little Annie, taught to love it during their school days, and then when they leave the neighborhood, lose the connection. They can not attend without guides. They should be looked up, and the necessary help given. Or, if too infirm or too far from a church, they should have the help of the Church's books of worship.

They very especially need the Church's ministrations. Blindness always causes a certain lowering of the nervous system and a tendency to emotional excitement—and a deep, intense loneliness. We know saintly blind people, models of cheerful industry, beloved by all who know them, who are often, under it all, so sad that they dread each new day as it comes. It is a condition which calls for patience with difficulties in doing the simplest every-day things; patience in constant dependence on the pleasure of others; patience with the recurrence of subtle temptations assailing these lonely, introspective people.

The work of embossing for them in Braille the most-needed selections from our services, was begun by Miss Mary Lex, of blessed memory, who with infinite pains learned to emboss the devotional readings which she gave out to those under her care. This idea was carried along for a while by one of the teachers, who used a Braille machine to get out a little weekly pamphlet collects, hymns, Epistle and Gospel for the Sundays and Holy Days of each week, in their season. At last this was taken up by the Rev. S. P. Kelly and Mr. John Cadwalader, the latter generously heading a subscription which paid for the first volume from the prayer book. Later, this Society was organized. Father Moffett was one of the first members, and with his help a manual of devotions and instructions was prepared to go with the communion service, St. Clement's paying for this volume. With the Bishop's approval, the manual was put into use at once, as meeting a need. But, as a rule, we confined ourselves at first to embossing with the utmost exactness from the prayer book and hymnal so that the blind should have exactly the same books of worship as the seeing. We are, therefore, the Church's authorized workers; our selections from the prayer book being certified to, volume by volume, by the custodian (cf., page ii of the Prayer Book, next to the title page). We have embossed the hymnal entire, and it is certified by the Hymnal Commission; the first complete Church Hymnal ever embossed for the blind.

But when the books were ready, it was difficult to get at the people by whom they were most needed. Copies were sent to free libraries and schools, but the blind in their homes were hardly touched at all. So a missionary visitor was appointed, Miss Lillie Rendall. She is a young blind girl, a graduate of the Overbrook Institution, widely known and loved among the blind of this locality, and working untiringly for their good. She is studying the needs of blind church members in this city, and has already made it possible to bring quite a number into touch with the nearest parishes.

A practical plan seems to be for the Society to employ a number of suitable persons as guides, securing the privilege of regular attendance at public worship. To some of our "blind brothers" Sunday will then cease to be a homesick, much-dreaded day. There are many ways, not so very difficult or expensive, of helping individuals. We suggest that those interested write directly to Miss Lillie Rendall, 4904 Walton avenue. They are sure of receiving a neatly typewritten reply, interesting and to the point.

A circular describing the plans and work of this Society will soon be ready for distribution. A card index of the blind church members of this diocese is now accessible at 1217 Chestnut street, and we hope a real personal share of the life and work of the Church may ere long become theirs to a greater degree.

Mr. John Cadwalader.
Mr. Edward Brooks.
Mr. John Thomson.

We ask that those who read this article will remember this work definitely in their prayers. The following hymn was at one time a great favorite with the pupils of the Overbrook Institution at evening prayers. It almost seemed as if it must have been written especially for them:

I do not ask, oh Lord, that life may be a pleasant road;
I do not ask that Thou shouldst take from me aught of its load;
For one thing only, Lord, dear Lord, I plead—lead me aright,
Though strength should falter and though heart should bleed, through peace to light.

I do not ask my cross to understand, my way to see.
Better in darkness just to feel Try Hand,
and follow Thee.
Joy is like restless day; but peace divine
like quiet night;
Lead me, oh Lord, till perfect day shall shine through peace to light.

LETTER FROM WUCHANG.

St. Saviour's, Easter Tuesday.

So much has happened since my last letter that I want to tell you of now. We had a full church for the Three Hours on Good Friday, and some people were seated on benches in the aisles. It was a very reverent and attentive congregation all through, and I never enjoyed preaching more in my life. We had Stations of the Cross in the evening and the Chinese deacon preached. Next morning after Mass we rehearsed music and the ceremonies of the Solemn Mass; one of the divinity students came down to act as sub-deacon. In the afternoon I had some confessions of former pupils of mine now in Boone College to hear. They were excused for the afternoon and after preparing themselves in our quite oratory made their confessions in the church and stayed to Evensong at 3. At this service we had twenty-five baptisms and a number were admitted as catechumens. The jailer whom I wrote about was one of those baptized, and you never saw a happier man. In the evening I was kept busy hearing confessions until about 10 o'clock (my total number since Advent reached 140). Then, as the last thing in preparation for the great feast, I went and made my own confession.

Easter Day was glorious. Just the one early Mass at St. Saviour's preceded by a brief devotional address, after which we had the Solemn Procession with cope and incense. This Mass was solemn, with deacon and sub-deacon, and there were many Communions made. Miss Byerly and another friend came in to breakfast.

At the midday service there were numbers of non-Christians present and the place was crowded to overflowing. There were almost no Christians present who had not previously heard Mass. The girls of St. Mary and All Saints attended all the services of the day in fine, new blue cotton uniforms, with collars of crochet, which they had made themselves, and they certainly were a fine sight. The boys of St. Joseph's School also had white cotton uniforms ornamented with Chinese Imperial yellow. They spent most of the time between the services marching round and round the little playground or out in the streets adjacent. There was no one anywhere near us who did not know that the "Holy Catholic Church was keeping a festival."

At Evensong (time, 3 o'clock), we formed our procession in the playground and marched into church singing "The Strife is O'er." It was a solemn procession, with incense, Cross, processional lights, choir, priest in cope and school boys in uniform, and was really a great joy. The people, the big, yellow Chinese flag of the dragon swallowing the sun, and the flashing red flags of St. Joseph's School accompanied the procession to the church door, but were too big to carry into the small, crowded church.

I took off my cope to read and expound the sacred lesson (St. Luke's account of the Resurrection), and illustrated it by a large picture of the Marys at the Tomb, which was hung up for the occasion on the reed screen back of the lectern.

After Evensong, I went up to the compound for a farewell tea which was being given for the Rev. Fr. Jackson, Rec. of Boone College, and his wife, who are just leaving on furlough. Later, I ran off to make my apologies to a young man who should have made his confession on the preceding day, but whom I overlooked and forgot to notify along with the others. Think of apologizing to one for not inviting him to come to Confession! We had our usual Sunday Evensong in English at Holy Nativity, and my sister, Doctor Glenton and Miss Higgins came to St. Saviour's house for dinner.

On Easter Monday there was a Chinese wedding and a baptism of a Manchu woman, now a teacher at Miss Byerly's school, at Holy Nativity, which I attended, and in the afternoon I went out to look at a piece of property which has been offered us at a very reasonable price in a part of the city where we have been wanting to open work for years, and where there is absolutely no Christian work of any name being done. We really must spread out into this unoccupied part of our great city, and St. Saviour is already crowded to its last limit. We never can have one central parish church here because it isn't large enough, is too near Boone and the other stations, and is not really central; the Hill divides our city practically into two. We must be nearer the tunnel which runs through the hill if we want to minister to people on both sides. So far as I know we have not a single Christian at St. Saviours, from the other side of the Hill. St. Saviour's is an admirable location for a Chapel and for Parochial Schools, etc., but not for the great central parochial church which is to minister to the whole city.

The place I looked at is a large one facing on one of the principal streets, and extending back to another street. The street on which it faces is one large thoroughfare leading to one of the city gates and the river front. This property has two shops on the street side, a number of Chinese houses, a garden, and a well; the whole thing is quite large enough for our big Parish Church, school buildings and residences of workers. It is a chance we seldom get. It is very, very difficult to get property large enough for such uses without paying exorbitant prices. The government has bought up nearly all desirable large pieces for its new schools, which are springing up everywhere. This is a golden opportunity to provide for the future for all time, and to lay foundations for the work for years to come. I am going to write at once to the Spirit of Missions to beg for the entire amount which is needed for the property, about $4,200, and I feel sure that it will come in time. I am so full of this matter that I can hardly think of anything else, as, if we once get the property secured, we can afford to wait for years before we put up our church and other buildings. Land is the first thing, and we must get it when we can.

Father Cooper reached home yesterday, after ten days in the country stations. It was fine to have him back again. I ran over to Hankow in the afternoon to say goodbye to Mr. and Mrs. Sherman, who are going home with their little girl who is to undergo an operation.

Father Cooper and I went to Boone College to attend a concert given by the band and glee club in honor of Mr. and Mrs. Jackson. It is really wonderful what good musicians Chinese boys can make.

P. S. I forgot to tell you about the Repository I made for the Blessed Sacrament in our Lady Chapel on Maundy Thursday. The Cross was veiled in white and the Altar decked with green leaves and violets, which my sister and I gathered in the compound. At night, when the day's duties were over, I lighted all the lights and went to "watch" with my Lord "for one hour." It was very peaceful and sweet and quiet.

Yours in Christ,

ROBERT E. WOODS.

DESTRUCTION OF ST. MARY'S-ON-THE-MOUNTAIN BY FIRE.

On the night of May 3 our most dear and beautiful home was burned to the ground.

The fire began in the shingle roof and was caused probably by a coal of fire from the hand-furnace of a tinner who had been mending the tin flashing around the chimney on that day; or it may have been caused by some defect in the chimney flue.

We were awakened at 2 o'clock in the night by a rushing, roaring sound above and around us. We thought it was the wind. The moonlight was too bright for us to notice any glare of the fire through the windows, but in a minute we were aware that the roof and the whole of the linen room on the third floor were in flames. The first thought was to save life. There were twenty-eight girls sleeping in the dormitories on the third floor and thirty-five persons in all in the house. The first direction was—"Get the children out of the house, take them to the cottage and keep them there." They all escaped unhurt, in their gowns, with bare feet. The next thought was to save the sacred vessels and other most precious things in the Chapel. At the same time we were telephoning to the central office notice of the fire. There is no fire engine on the mountain and we knew that it would be impossible to extinguish the fire, and the thought was to save some of the contents of the house if men could reach us in time. In a little while three men were here and they saved the beautiful Altar, other chapel furnishings and the furniture from the front hall and parlor; at the same time five of the older girls helped us remove the best pictures from the walls on the first floor, some of the table linen and silver, some books, crosses, etc. The fire had now reached the first floor, and was falling from the ceiling above our heads. In a half hour after the alarm of fire was given there were some fifty men and boys here to render help, but it was too late to enter the main house. The men, however, rescued from a store room a quantity of groceries, china and kitchen utensils; also some clothing from the mission rooms which were in the basement of the house, having doors opening out on the grounds. We were eager to get this clothing for the children who were cold and shivering at the cottage.

The great heat from the burning house, which was now one mass of flames, put the cottage in danger and the men poured water constantly upon the roof for a half hour, then all was safe and we could calmly realize the wonderful protection of God and His angels through the night. The strongest emotion of our hearts was that of thankfulness that all had escaped unhurt. At four o'clock the Rev. Haskel DuBose, standing before the Altar, which had been placed in the recreation room at the cottage, offered thanksgiving and praises to our Heavenly Father for our deliverance from the flames. During the prayers the children sobbed aloud, giving way to their feelings for the first time in those two long hours. The obedience of the children saved their lives. The girls have behaved beautifully during the whole trouble.

We have gone thus into the full particulars of the fire for the satisfaction of the many absent ones who love us and this work at St. Mary's-on-the-Mountain. We have not the time to write individual letters.

THE PRESENT CONDITIONS.

It is now Saturday morning, four days after the fire. One half of the school have been allowed to go to their relations till more room is provided here. We are living in the weaving cottage—two Sisters, two helpers and fourteen pupils. This two-room cottage was built many years ago and was on the place when we purchased the property twenty-one years ago. Last summer, through the kindness of many of you, our dear friends, we added to it a large recreation room, in which to entertain the poor and for school uses. This house has proven a great blessing to us in this emergency.

FINANCIAL CONDITION.

The house and furniture which were burned had cost us about $13,500. There was a fire insurance on this for $3,000.

Our purpose is to rebuild. If sufficient help is given us we will build as good a house as we have lost, perhaps a better house, one more perfectly appointed for a training school and the Mountain Mission.

We believe that funds for rebuilding will be obtained, for St. Mary's-on-the-Mountain is not only a work that interests, but it is one that holds its place in the hearts and prayers of many loving friends.

PRESENT NEEDS.

As we are sure that many friends will desire to help us supply the pressing needs of the work, occasioned by our loss, we give here a list of things needed:

Summer outfits for fourteen girls (measurements will be sent on application). Winter outfits for thirty girls.

Blankets (white), sheets, pillow cases, pillows, and white spreads for single beds.

Table linen, china and plated silver spoons, knives and forks.

Sewing material, tablets, pencils and other writing materials.

Ten Bibles, ten Prayer Books and Hymnals.

A poor carpenter, who had been working here, lost his box of tools. We would be glad to replace them.

PARISH NOTES.

Commencing July 1 evensong on Sunday will be read at 5 o'clock, and there will be no later service.

The Endowment Fund has recently been increased by the gift of a bond of the Reading Railroad Company for $1,000.

During the summer the clergy in residence will be found in Church for confessions on Saturday afternoon and evening.

As noted in the June number, the summer school will open July 13 and contributions are asked for the support of this important work.

On June 30 Mr. Sears sailed for a three-months rest in Europe. He will return for the third Sunday in September. During his absence Mr. Gaff will have charge of the choir.

The clergy have commenced their holiday. Father Quin has been away for three weeks this past month and will take the month of September. Father Schneeweiss goes on his vacation from the middle of July to September 1, and the rector will be absent from July 6 until the middle of September.

On Sunday evening, June 13, St. Barnabas' Guild for Nurses, which was founded in this country many years ago by Father Osborne, S.S.J.E., attended service at St. Clement's. After evensong a service of admission was held in St. John's Chapel, conducted by the Chaplain of the Guild, the Rev. G. Woolsey Hodge.

Whitsunday proved a very joyous festival at St. Clement's. In spite of the great inconvenience caused by the trolley strike the communions were equal in number to those of last year and the congregations were large at all the services. Every one seemed to realize the meaning of the festival and the spirit of joy and peace was very manifest.

On Wednesday, June 2, the Guild of the Holy Child held its annual outing. An attractive invitation had been extended to the Guild by Mrs. Dentzel, to spend the afternoon at Willow Grove. As the trolley strike prevented the carrying out of this plan the members were taken in busses to Bartram's Gardens, where some very happy hours were spent, and ice cream was served under the trees. Mrs. Johnson and Mrs. Hoffman, and Father Schneeweiss and Father Hutchinson were guests for the occasion.

On the afternoon of Trinity Sunday, the Bible Classes, Great and Little Catechisms, closed the year's work by holding a fete. The Sunday school entered the Church in procession. After the opening service, again forming a procession, all the members proceeded to the choir gate and each gave a small bunch of flowers to be placed in frame having the form of a triangle enclosing a circle.

Then followed the catechising of the Little and Great Catechisms, the Little Catechism doing especially well.

The rector then gave prizes for attendance and recitations.

Bibles were given to Mildred Linscott, May McLauchlan and Rhoda Cody, of the Great Catechism, for good recitations during the year.

"Children's Round of Fast and Festival" were given to Elizabeth Fortune, Mildred Linscott, William Fortune and Rhoda Cody for attendance. (Only two absences are allowed for the year.)

Diplomas for finishing the course of the Great Catechism and admitting to the Bible Class Department were given to Rhoda Cody, Emma Dybeck, Elizabeth Fortune, William Fortune, Thomas Hobson, Warren Hobson, Mildred Linscott, William McLauchlan and May McLauchlan.

Prizes for attendance, lessons and behavior, in the Little Catechism were awarded to Kenneth Haskins and Alfred Cody. For lessons and behavior, to James McLauchlan. For attendance and improvement, to Matilda Dybeck.

Charles Fortune and Kenneth Haskins have not been absent any Sunday. Alfred Cody and Matilda Dybeck have been absent twice.

The following children passed an examination and were advanced: James McLauchlan, to the Great Catechism; from the second to the first year, Francis McLauchlan and Russel Copstick; from the third to the second year, Lionel Bergin, Kenneth Haskins and Alfred Cody; from the Infant Department to the Primary, Ruth Forrester, Alberta Priest, Mary Searles, Francis Haagland, Mabel Lykens, Josephine Boyle. Fifty-nine children have been enrolled during the year, and eight teachers.

THE MISSION.

November 7-21.

The Father Superior of the Order of the Holy Cross has consented to undertake a mission at St. Clement's for the two weeks immediately preceding our patronal feast. The mission will commence on Sunday, November 7, and end with a corporate communion of the Parish on Sunday morning November 21.

We have not had a mission at St. Clement's for a number of years, but there are members of the Parish who recall with joy the stirring eloquence of Knox Little or of Luke Rivington. Many date their conversion to the Catholic faith to one of these missions of the past. And now it seems expedient to make another effort. All about us we hear of growing apathy and a disregard of the things of the spirit. From parishes of differing forms of churchmanship comes the same cry. We are not without our apathy at St. Clement's. Too often our attitude toward God is one of smug self-complacency and an assurance of salvation that rises from spiritual pride. Each one of us, if he searches his heart truly, will find much that is amiss, and doubtless a lack of interest in spiritual things that increases as the years go by. Before it proves too late, we should make an earnest effort to fan into flames the dying embers of faith and aspiration in our souls.

The mission will be first and foremost an endeavor to deepen the spiritual life of the Parish. God, undoubtedly, will send some special lesson to us during our fortnight which we will consecrate especially to Him. Secondarily, the mission will be a means to bring to a full acceptance of the Catholic faith those who as yet have not comprehended it in its fulness.

As a means to the first object let us prepare ourselves by praying daily for the enlightening power of the Holy Ghost that He may give us both the will and power to enter into the mission entirely and unreservedly. Let us in anticipation set apart this period of two weeks as a time when all other engagements shall be laid aside and let us consider nothing of greater importance than the salvation of our souls.

As a means to the second object, let us spread the news of the mission widely among our friends. Let us talk much of it through the Parish and urge each person whom we meet to enter into it earnestly and heartily. Let us all try to realize that with the opportunity that God is giving us there comes likewise a tremendous responsibility to our own souls and to our fellowmen.

November 7 to November 21. A period of two weeks to be set apart for the salvation of souls, and above all, for the salvation of one's own.

RESERVATION OF THE BLESSED SACRAMENT.

According to the Strangers' Guide, issued by the American Catholic, there are seventy-five parishes in the American Church today where the Blessed Sacrament is reserved. Of these, thirty-three reserve occasionally, the remainder perpetually. The list is not complete, but it bears evidence to the growth of the practice in the last few years.

In our own city reservation is practiced in six parishes: St. Elizabeth's, St. Mark's, the Annunciation, the Transfiguration, Calvary, West Philadelphia, and St. Clement's. In New York there are seven: The Transfiguration, St. Mary the Virgin, St. Ignatius, Corpus Christi, the Redeemer, St. Edward the Martyr, and St. Martin's, Brooklyn. In Newark three: Grace Church, the House of Prayer, and St. Alban's. In Jersey City two: St. Mark's and Holy Cross. In Boston and vicinity: St. John the Evangelist, Church of the Advent, St. John's, Roxbury; St. Luke's, Chelsea; St. Philip's, Cambridge, and St. Stephen's, Providence.

It may be interesting to trace the history of the practice in St. Clement's Parish as we find it in past issues of the MAGAZINE.

Although for many years it has been the custom at St. Clement's to carry the Sacrament from the altar to any sick person who desired to make his communion, there was no altar in the Church provided with a tabernacle; so that perpetual reservation was not a possibility.

In 1897, however, the stone altar that had been erected in the private oratory of Mr. William Halsey Wood, in Newark, was, at his death, presented to the Parish, and the crypt chapel was built to receive it. In the May number of the MAGAZINE for that year the gift is mentioned, and Father Moffett also inserted the following article on "Reservation:"

"There is no reason except it may be the opinions and prejudices of individuals founded on no certain warrant of Holy Scripture, or ancient custom why the Blessed Sacrament should not be reserved in our churches, and as a matter of fact the number in which there is reservation is increasing. The custom is a very early one in the history of the Church, and a very necessary one in the experience of parochial work. The pastoral letter of the House of Bishops spoke of it as not contrary to our rubrics or canons. It is not contrary to post-Reformation practice, for the Latin Prayer Book, prepared in Queen Elizabeth's time provided for it, as well as the first book of Edward VI. while provision is still found in the liturgy of the Scotch Church for it. Until the last few years it was constantly practiced in Evangelical Churches, although not with the reverence due to the Sacrament. The religion of some people seems to be the compulsory carrying out of their whims and prejudices, although this may mean the sacrifice of reverence, ancient custom and devout practice. Nameless dread and fear is the atmosphere in which some people live. Our Risen Lord never gets a chance to walk with them or manifest Himself to them for cheer and comfort. Others may have sorrow for a time, but after a while it is turned into joy which no man can take away from them. In this Christo-Pagan age we ought not to be afraid to be real about religion; it is very needful to accentuate the spiritual and heavenly aspects of what we know and believe."

In June, 1897, a picture of this crypt altar appears, with an announcement that enough money is in hand to pay for cementing the space in the cellar under the high altar and that it is hoped that a stairway may be made from the Church into this Chapel. The following editorial also appears on "Reservation:"

"We quote from Doctor Mortimer's book, 'Catholic Faith and Practice':

"'The rubric in the English book was introduced in the year 1664, and is from the hand of Bishop Cosin. We have in Cosin's own handwriting a comment entitled "Suggested Corrections in the Prayer Book," which formed the basis of the alterations made at the Savoy Conference. In this we read: It is likewise here ordered (in the book of 1664) that if any of the bread and wine remain the curate shall have it to his own use, which words some curates have abused and extended so far that they suppose they may take all that remains of the consecrated bread and wine itself to their homes and there eat and drink the same with their other common meats. . . . Some words are needful here to be added. . . . If any of the consecrated elements be left, etc. This rubric then was put in by the Catholic party after their victory over the Puritans at the Savoy Conference to prevent a specific practice which then prevailed. This is not a matter of opinion, but of history. We have in Cosin's handwriting the above statement; and it is preposterous to say that the rubric refers to the twenty-eight articles which had been drawn up for more than one hundred years, during which period reservation for the purpose of adoration was not the practice of the English Communion.'

"Bishop Forbes says: 'The article does not prohibit the practices mentioned but merely states that the reservation, circumgestation, elevation and adoration of the sanctissimum is no part of Christ's institution; such ceremonies may be and are omitted without breaking our Lord's enactment touching the Eucharist. The Church might leave them out and yet leave the whole of His institution untouched. So much is really the whole amount of the prohibition as far as the sentence is concerned.

"'That the Sacrament of the "Eucharist" as the Latin articles term it was not by Christ's ordinance reserved is admitted on all hands. The Council of Trent asserts that "it was instituted that it might be received," but the Church has from the earliest times reserved the Holy Sacrament, regarding it as a most precious pledge from heaven and the miracle of divine love.

"'Till the thirteenth century we have distinct evidence that in different ways, sometimes suspended over the altar enveloped in veils, sometimes in tabernacles in the form of a dove, sometimes in ambries beside the altar, sometimes along with images and relics of saints, and sometimes in towers a few feet from the high altar, the Blessed Sacrament was reserved with great dignity and honor.'"—Bishop Forbes.

"It may not be generally known that to a certain extent the American Church is pledged to the restoration of reservation of the Sacrament. When Doctor Seabury was consecrated in Scotland, one of the things he promised was that he would endeavor to have provision made in the Prayer Book for reserving the Sacrament for the sick. It was, we may say, one of the conditions on which the Episcopal office was first given to us—the phrase 'we and all others who shall be partakers of this Holy Communion' was held to refer to this."

In August, 1897, the following clipping from the Church Times appears, which is so good that we insert it here:

"An attempt is now being made to spread the suggestion that we have got all we want. There are people who were regarded as extreme men twenty years ago or less, who are disposed to assert that all they themselves do is English, and all that goes beyond their own practice Roman. Such people should ask themselves what they would have thought in the past of an attempt to separate the extreme and the moderate men. As there are doctrines to be more widely spread, so there are practices to be more generally revived; for instance, the Reservation of the Blessed Sacrament, the anointing of the sick, the use of incense, strangely neglected considering its Scriptural authority. To carry on the work that has been going on so well during the last sixty years it is necessary for all Catholics to stand shoulder to shoulder. There were many who hesitated about introducing the Eucharistic vestments themselves who stood nobly by those who were persecuted for doing so. There ought to be the same kind of feeling now. There may be mistakes and errors in judgments; there may be excess and defect, but the only clear distinction is between Catholics and Protestants, and all Catholics ought to stand together for the defense of the Catholic faith and for the full expression of that faith in Catholic worship."

In October, 1897, plans were ordered for an altar in the Church at the head of the South Aisle. In November, 1897, the plans are reported to have been submitted by Mr. Vaughan, and plans for the "Lady Chapel" (the crypt) are reported as progressing. In December, 1897, a sketch appears of the side altar, and a Parish Note says it will be under the dedication of St. Katharine, and the hope is expressed that work on the crypt may begin immediately.

In the January, 1898, number of the MAGAZINE appears the following notice:

"It seems fitting that we should follow the example of the older St. Clement's, and place our side altar under the dedication of St. Katharine, Virgin and Martyr. The altar, which is the offering of a member of the parish, was designed together with the ornament by Mr. Henry Vaughan, of Boston, who also designed the high altar some years before. It arrived just before Christmas and was blessed, and the first Mass said on Christmas Eve."

This was the first altar with a tabernacle ever erected in St. Clement's. With this number of the MAGAZINE a supplement was published containing a photograph of the new altar, and an article on "Idolatry," which we reproduce:

"The old cry of "Idolatry" is still sometimes raised against those who adore the Real Presence of Christ in the Holy Eucharist. This cry is the last resort of ignorant prejudice. "Idolatry" might be applied to the adoration of some image or token of a false god, but it never could be applied properly to an adoration intended for Almighty God even if that adoration were addressed to an image.

A lover's devotion to his loved one's portrait is not considered false devotion. It would be considered false only when directed to the portrait of some other person.

Even if adoration of the Blessed Sacrament were not justified by the certainty of the Real Presence of Christ, it could never properly be called idolatry, because the intention of the worshiper is to adore Almighty God and nothing else.

The difficulty is that ignorant prejudice does not understand how God, who is omnipresent, can also be present in special ways, at special times and in special places.

Nevertheless that God can do this is the teaching of the Bible. The Jews believed that God was omnipresent (see Psalm 139), but they also believed that He could, when He chose, as it were, localize His Presence. Again and again in the Old Testament He manifested His localized Presence, the angel of the Lord, the flame of fire, the pillar of smoke, the shekinah, rendering the very ground holy ground, and making a meeting place for God and man.

In the Incarnation of Christ God was present in human form. "In Him dwelt all the fullness of the Godhead bodily." This Christ said: "He that hath seen Me hath seen the Father," and He allowed men to kneel and adore Him as their Lord and God. Surely the Presence of God was local in Christ.

And so in the Blessed Sacrament of the Body and Blood of our Lord, a way, a "point of contact" has been provided by which we approach in a special place the Divine Essence.

The cry of "Idolatry" is absurd. It shows an ignorance of what God has done, and a lack of faith in what He can do."

In February, 1898, the following note is significant: "The candlesticks for St. Katharine's altar have arrived, and are now in place; the crucifix was sent, but not being entirely satisfactory, has been delayed. . . . A lamp has been promised also to hang before the altar. The tabernacle is also being fittingly prepared for use." (Italics ours.)

During Holy Week, 1898, the crypt chapel was completed, and the following account appears in the MAGAZINE for May:

"The portion of the altar beneath the sanctuary is at last arranged, the small fourth century altar is in place. The dedication in honor of the Blessed Virgin Mary took place on Wednesday in Holy Week, after the 7 o'clock Parochial Mass, and many availed themselves of its privileges for devotion. On Maundy Thursday the altar was beautiful with flowers and lighted candlesticks, to the glory of our Lord, and in honor of the Blessed Sacrament."

From this time the Blessed Sacrament has been reserved perpetually at St. Clement's. In June, 1898, the people were informed through the MAGAZINE that "the Lady Chapel in the crypt was usually open during the whole day for devotions."

In July, 1898, the following Parish Note is inserted:

"The Rev. F. E. Mortimer sends us a little book which we are glad to commend to the notice of our people—"Devotions before the Blessed Sacrament." It consists of litanies, hymns, intercessions; particularly we would speak of the 'Holy Place of the Tabernacle and Subjects for Special Prayer,' as likely to be helpful to many in the practice of intercessory prayer."

In Advent, 1907, the tabernacle on St. Katharine's altar was put to "the use" for which it had been prepared and since that date the Blessed Sacrament has been reserved in the Church.

As a result of making the Sacramental Presence more accessible there has been a notable increase in the number of persons who come to offer their adoration to our Divine Lord, and to make their intercession in His Covenanted Presence. That the number will increase as we come to appreciate more and more all that the Sacred Presence means we have no doubt. Nor do we doubt that the blessings showered upon the Parish for many years have been the direct result of the devotion of the people to Our Lord Jesus Christ in the Blessed Sacrament of His Body and Blood. We can not close this article more appropriately than by reprinting the following verses from the June number of the MAGAZINE, 1899:

THE SACRAMENT LIGHT.

Oh! happy light, whose shining
Guides us to Jesus' throne;
How many a heart is pining
To make Thy lot its own;

To live within His presence:
To spend one's self for Him;
With joy to furnish guidance
For other's eyes grown dim?

Like Bethlehem's star thou standest
Above where Jesus lies;
Yet, like God's sword, defendest
The gate of Paradise.

Now, Eye of God, thou seemest
To search the sinful soul;
Then, Jesus' heart, thou beamest
To cleanse and make us whole.

On high Thy sign of warning
His second advent tells;
Yet, like His Spirit's yearning,
The fluttering radiance swells.

Oh! blessed lamp, like Mary,
The Lord is e'er with you;
Guide me with steps unweary,
To gain His blessing, too.

SALVATOR MUNDI.

O Saviour of the world, Who by Thy Cross and Precious Blood hast redeemed me—
Save me, and help me, I humbly beseech Thee, O Lord.

Save me—
from the weariness and despondency of living;
from looking to earth for comfort and release;
from clinging to any lower consolation;
from encouraging melanchly forebodings;
from any shadow of doubt and unbelief;
from all impatience under the burden of life;
from ceasing to resist the assaults of Satan;
from losing trust and confidence in Thee.

Help me—
to persevere hopefully to the end;
to keep Thee in sight and ever follow Thee;
to be courageous and cheerful under afflictions;
to cast upon Thee all my care for those I love;
to pray better, and live more nearly as I pray;
to live this day as if my last;
to rejoice more and more in Thy Sacramental Presence;
to count it all joy when I fall into temptation.
In my cross and in my passion;
Save me and help me, I humbly beseech Thee, O Lord.

THE AMERICAN CHURCH UNION.

We publish below the principles of this organization which has been formed recently and urge upon every Catholic the privilege and duty of identifying himself with this movement. Perhaps never before in the history of the American Church has the necessity of unanimity of action on the part of the loyal churchman been so urgent. Since the Richmond Convention we have been sailing on troubled seas, and if we would save the Church from shipwreck each one of us must "lend a hand." The American Union gives every one an opportunity to do his part.

A Declaration of Principles of the American Church Union.

The American Church Union is formed to defend and maintain unimpaired the doctrine, discipline and worship of the Church against laxity and indifference within and hindrance and aggression from without.

It gives its unreserved assent to the following principles:

1. That the Protestant Episcopal Church is an integral part of the historic Catholic Church.

2. That the Church's creeds are to be interpreted and believed in their traditional sense.

3. That, as declared in the Preface to the Ordinal, the Ministry of the Church has been from the Apostles' time, threefold; and those only are to execute the functions of this Ministry in the Church who have had Episcopal consecration or ordination.

4. That the Scriptures of the Old and New Testaments are the Word of God.

5. That the Church's Sacraments possess vital power to confer grace.

6. That the marriage tie is indissoluble, as set forth in the Church's Form of Solemnization of Matrimony.

The gravity of the present situation is that the boldest attacks on the Faith and Order of the Church are made by those within her own household. Of these attacks we signal the following as requiring immediate attention:

1. The denial of the inspiration of Holy Writ.

2. The admission to the Holy Communion of persons who have not been confirmed by Bishops of the Church, and who have not professed their desire to be so confirmed.

3. The permission to persons not communicants of the Anglican body to teach and preach to our congregations.

The American Church Union pledges itself to resist these and all other contraventions of the Faith of the Church as enshrined in the Book of Common Prayer.

"Membership in the American Church Union shall consist of three classes: Life members, ordinary members and associate members. They must be communicants of the Church; life and ordinary members must be men, associate members may be either men or women. Application for membership shall be made to the Council and endorsed by two members of the Union. It shall contain a written assent to the Declaration of Principles. The application shall lie over one month, when, if no objection be made, the applicant shall become a member on payment of his dues. In case objection be made, the Council shall, at its discretion, elect or reject the applicant."

"Life members shall pay a fee of $20; ordinary members, $1 annually; associate members, 50 cents a year. Life and ordinary members shall alone be entitled to vote."

MR. KENSIT AGAIN.

Mr. Kensit, the younger, is following faithfully in his father's footsteps, and, like his father, is always amusing. The following is from a London paper:

The decorous dulness of a small street in Westminster was suddenly enlivened yesterday morning by the appearance of four young men carrying a large banner which bore these words: "Warning! The new Archbishop is a Romanizer."

In front of the banner walked another young man in a silk hat, wearing a large paper scarf inscribed, "Oh, for another Cromwell." Other placards were exhibited declaring "We want no Popery," and denouncing "Asquith's betrayal of Protestantism."

Arrived outside Church House, this odd little procession halted, and Mr. Kensit, a small and nervous figure, detached himself from it. Accompanied by two older men, he knocked at the door, and, after a little parley, was admitted.

His object was to protest against the confirmation of the Bishop of Stepney's election to be Archbishop of York. This he was obliged to do, not in the large hall where the ceremony took place, but in a committee room, to which the general public were not admitted.

Around a green baize table sat the Archbishop of Canterbury with six other prelates, all in their robes. There was the Bishop of Durham, with a rosy countenance like that of the conventional John Bull, the Bishop of Rochester, with a legal air about him, and the Bishops of Winchester, Worcester, Southwark, and St. Albans, all bearded, spectacled, and scholarly of mien. There were also several lawyers, gowned and bewigged; Mr. Cripps, the Vicar-General, looking like a legal portrait that had stepped from some eighteenth century frame.

The proceedings were short and business like, Mr. Kensit read his protest, the Primate ruled it out of order, and that was all. The Archbishop made it quite clear that he was expressing no personal opinion as to the acts alleged against Doctor Cosmo Gordon Lang (toleration of and participation in "Mass practices," defense of "confession," and so forth). The subject was, he admitted, "open to wide differences of opinion." But the law laid down on the subject was definite and distinct. As Royal Commissioners appointed to confirm the election he and the other prelates had no power to consider such allegations.

Half an hour later the Commissioners and lawyers filed into the Great Hall sparsely occupied by spectators and the legal formalities were gone through. The Archbishop-designate took the oath to be faithful to King Edward, and swore that he had not obtained his office by means of bribery! His appointment was declared valid. A young clergyman read the litany with a special clause in it for Doctor Lang. The Primate pronounced the blessing and the congregation dispersed.—American Catholic.

Grant unto us, Almighty God, that when our vision fails, and our understanding is darkened; when the ways of life seem hard, and the brightness of life is gone; to us grant the wisdom that deepens faith when the sight is dim, and enlarges trust when the understanding is not clear. And whensoever Thy ways in nature or in the soul are hard to be understood, then may our quiet confidence, our patient trust, our loving faith in Thee be great, and as children, knowing that they are loved, cared for, guarded, kept, may we with a quiet mind at all times put our trust in the unseen God. So may we face life without fear, and death without fainting; and, whatsoever may be in the life to come give us confident hope that whatsoever is best for us both here and hereafter is Thy good pleasure, and will be Thy law. Amen.

VERSES BY THE REV. BROTHER BEALE, S.S.J.E.

The following lines and few introductory words appeared in the Lent number of our Mazagon Parish paper:

The beautiful verses in our present issue will be valued by many of our readers for the sake of the author. They appear in the Memoir "Dorothea Beale of Cheltenham" by Elizabeth Raikes, with this introduction: "The following lines in her brother Edward's handwriting, found among Miss Beale's papers, seem to be undoubtedly original, and to tell the history of his consecrated life."

Written in India in illness, 1884.

Once I was wont to prize
Glance from approving eyes,
And sun myself too fondly in their light.
Too eager to entwine
The flowers about Love's shrine
With pulses throbbing with a wild delight.
And one who loved me said,
With voice of boding dread,
"Oh! child, these hopes will fade, these flowers will die,
And what will then remain
To ease the long, slow pain,
Unless your heart be lifted up on high?"

Once, when I heard a name
Of high heroic fame,
Of lives of lasting influence for good,
I felt my heart on fire
With one long vague desire
To join the ranks of those who have withstood.
But now I do not ask
For such heroic task,
My heart is all too faint to stand the glare,
My eyes too weak to see
The path laid out for me,
I only wait and feel that One is there.

One at whose blessed feet
I lie in silence sweet
Perhaps unheeded as the world goes by,
There only lying still Waiting to know His Will
Till He shall bend on me His gracious eye.
Then in that glorious gleam
Shall every earthborn dream
Darkness, delusion, doubt all flee away:
Truth shall be brought to light,
Faith shall be lost in sight,
In the clear shining of the perfect day!

E. H. B.

Brother Beale made his profession in the Society of St. John the Evangelist on St. Matthew's Day, 1891, after a novitiate which, owing to ill health, had been much longer than is usual among us. He had been admitted to the diaconate, but the same ill health prevented his ordination to the priesthood. He was called to his rest on February 2, 1893.—From the Cowley Evangelist.

CHURCH SOCIABILITY

It has been pointed out to us lately how one notable difference between a Protestant and a Catholic Church seems to be that the Protestant Church is a club, but the Catholic Church is the House of God.

That being so we must be careful not to use the Church before or after a Service, or at any other time, as a place for ordinary conversation. The Catholic on going to Church expects no human welcome; his welcome comes from the depths of the tabernacle. He goes to his Church because he has a right and because it is his duty. Bound together by a common belief, afire with the same love, urgent on the same purpose, all the worshippers are brethren—brethren whether on the African Veldt, the Islands of the South Seas or in the crowded city Church. There are no strangers.

PARISH NOTES.

The Catechism will begin the third Sunday in September, and the Bible Classes the first Sunday in October.

Parents are requested to see to it that their children attend either the Catechism or the Bible Classes.

The 8 o'clock Mass on Sundays will be resumed on the third Sunday in September, and Solemn evensong will be sung at 8 o'clock.

By the will of the late Elizabeth Morgan Willcox $500 has been added to the Endowment Fund, in memory of George Herbert Moffett, and a like amount bequeathed to All Saints' Seashore Home.

During the summer a new chimney has been erected for the church boilers. The old flues were found to be in bad condition and quite insufficient for the new heating plant. The new chimney has been built in the wall at the end of the south aisle. This has involved an expense of about $1,000. The Accounting Warden would be glad to receive contributions toward this sum.

NEXT WINTER.

As we return from our more or less protracted holidays, it is natural that plans should be formed for the coming winter. It would be well, perhaps, among other things, to consider what is to be the work of the parish, and what part each one is to take in it, for each one is expected and ought to take a part.

The first topic of general interest is the coming mission, to be preached during the two weeks preceding the parish festival. We trust that every member of the congregation is, at least, saying daily the prayer which was published in the August magazine. Much of the success of the mission will depend upon the earnest prayers of our people. And, in addition to our prayers, we should be trying to interest others. If we know any member of St. Clement's to be lukewarm or careless about his religious duties, or any one who does not go to church, or has never been confirmed, then we should tell such an one of the services that are to be held and urge him to come, giving him a card with the list of mission services. There will be special services for men and women, besides the children's mission, and the general service every night. Possibly a Bible Class will be held each morning, and there will be special intercessions offered daily for various objects and persons. Let us endeavor to take advantage of this very great opportunity which God is giving us to stir up and perpetuate a real spirit of devotion to Christ and His church.

The Sunday School is another extremely important feature of our work. We can not hope to have a really vigorous parish life unless we are educating the children in the love and fear of God, and instructing them in the principles of the Catholic religion. For many years the Sunday School at St. Clement's has been pitiably small. How may this be remedied? Could not each person endeavor to urge one child to join the Catechism or the Bible Class? This might be done in connection with the children's mission in November. And will not parents, whose children already attend our Sunday School, urge their boys and girls to ask others to go with them?

One great problem of our Sunday School is our lack of teachers. It is very difficult to find men and women who are willing to undertake this exceedingly important task, and yet there is perhaps no other that means so much, or that accomplishes such large results. Our Bible Classes meet immediately after the 9.15 Mass on Sundays, for a little less than an hour. Does not this offer an opportunity for some one to help in the work of the parish?

When the new sanctuary was completed, an old member of the parish remarked that we must have many prayers to sanctify it—the old sanctuary was a place made holy by the petitions of many faithful souls. The atmosphere of prayer has been noticeable always to those who have come to St. Clement's for the first time. There is no doubt that the devotions and aspirations of the past leave their subtle influence within material walls. We have had many saints among us, and their influence is felt today; but too often we are apt to rest solely upon a sacred past, not realizing that it means only reproach if the sanctity be not carried into the present, that the future may be made holy. The sanctifying of the present is our work, and there can be no surer way of helping forward the parish life than by striving to cultivate the life of prayer within our souls.

For many years we have had the privilege of from two to three masses daily. Here is the best and truest means of worship and intercession. How many

St. Clement's people come to mass on a week-day morning? Some, of course, are honestly prevented, but surely there are a number of persons who, in spite of duties, could make the effort to be present at least on one week day and unite in offering the Holy Sacrifice for some special object. The clergy are always ready and willing to make mention of special intercessions at mass.

In this connection we might mention the weekly service of Intercession at noon on Fridays. Very few persons take advantage of this service by sending in topics for intercession, and only a handful think of coming.

It would be well if every communicant would join the Confraternity of the Blessed Sacrament, which is a society of the American and English churches, founded for the purpose of promoting intercessory prayer, especially in connection with the Eucharistic Sacrifice. St. Saviour's Ward of St. Clement's parish is one of the oldest and the largest in the country. Applications for admission may be obtained from the Rector.

This winter we shall be confronted by the missionary problem. Most of us have learned, doubtless through the church papers, of the deficit in the appropriation of the Board of Missions. The death of Mr. Thomas revealed a financial weakness, both in the church at large and in our own diocese, which is appalling. Heretofore Mr. Thomas, with his large-hearted charity, has met the deficiency from his own pocket. Now, the situation must be faced if the church is to carry on even the amount of work already begun. St. Clement's parish must take its share of responsibility and make up its own share of the appropriation, and more if possible. We shall know a little later just the amount asked of us, and we must make every effort to meet the assessment. The Catholic parishes have too long held aloof in the missionary cause, and if we expect to have anything like fair recognition from the Missionary Board we must show ourselves deserving of such recognition. There is no reason why the Catholic parishes should not have as much weight in missionary matters as any others, if they would earnestly endeavor to do their part. If all stand aside and regard others with suspicion, we can not expect, nor do we deserve to exercise any influence at all.

It is the duty of every member of St. Clement's to take an intelligent interest in the spread of Christ's Kingdom, and each one is urged to attend any missionary meetings that may be held in the parish and to give generously for this object through the offertory or otherwise. The women of the parish should join the auxiliary, and the men should respond by their interest and co-operation. Let us make St. Clement's a parish burning with missionary zeal, that the faith we have learned from its pulpit, and the grace we have received from its altar, may be given to others less fortunate than ourselves.

Church support, of course, is an ever-present problem. It was gratifying to learn that the finances at the beginning of the summer were in better condition than has been the case for many years. This should encourage us to yet greater effort that the affairs of the parish may be put upon a substantial business basis. If each one will continue to do his part, we shall soon be able to issue a very satisfactory statement. This can only be attained by real devotion and self-sacrifice for the glory of God on the part of every one.

Let each one resolve that during the coming winter Almighty God shall be considered first in any plans for the future, and that any thought, word or deed that can not honestly be offered to His Glory shall have no part in lives which have been consecrated to His service.

OF CHIMES AND BELLS.

The other day I read that Spain early developed a romantic poetry for the reason that her people dwelt alone, cut off by the Pyrenees from the commercializing spirit of other countries more given over to trading. It was spring; the book slipped all too readily from my hand, and I fell into a dream or study. Why was it, I wondered, that our country lacked so many elements of the romantic we associate with other countries? Was it because of our newness? For that need hardly be. Can not the elements of romance lurk in new things? Or is it that we are too busy? Are we too open and attainable to commerce? Must a country in reality be hidden away behind impregnable mountains, driven to bay for amusements before it can truly become that most engaging of things, a romantic country with kings and castles, poet-lore, and chimes? For, to me, chimes are the gauge by which to measure the beauty-loving spirit of a nation. By their frequency and tone I judge the emotional response to life and beauty of its people. A set of lilting chimes is to me as sure an indication of the instinct for beauty and a brooding fondness for the past as the quiver of the rod in the well-diviner's hand is of his approach to water.

But we live in a chimeless country and mourn it not. Indeed, I believe a large majority of Americans look upon chimes as jangling, barbaric disturbers of the peace. As an instance of this I recall lunching with a friend who lives within earshot of the chimes on a new city church. When their notes rolled out over the city at noon-tide I exclaimed with sheer joy, albeit these chimes are modern, twentieth-century chimes with a lusty, youthful tone, unmellowed, unhallowed by the experiences of dead centuries, the sweet, thin voices of old chimes are like the sweet, thin voices of old men and women such as have filled a noble part in life—but my friend feeling no sympathetic responses to the chime-spirit, said with impatience in tone and gesture, "O those horrid chimes! I am so tired of them!" For her no pretty fancies wove themselves about the notes, or memories of other chimes in other lands came to haunt, and now and then to torment with their lost, quivering loveliness.

In my own city, across the Charles, is a set of chimes on Christ Church; and these are old, perhaps, for all I know, so old that when the spirit of devotion led thither George and Martha Washington—if the tradition that they worshipped there for a time has due foundation—they too may have listened in pleasure while for the moment the fair sounds drowned the tramp of marching feet and the sound of fife and drum. Today they are seldom rung, and seem faint and frail as they reverberate, a little languid and halting, but infinitely sweet. After all is said, however, the best chimes are those the memory gropes for—dancing bells, ringing on a fair day in French cities; mellow bells stealing over an English landscape at evensong; bells which have called the people of other days to their daily work and play, to christenings and funerals, to coronations and to prayers for victory over invaders camped near. Such bells ring across picturesque Rouen from a slender, gracious tower.

Among the foreign bells which I remember is a bell on a little Catholic church in the Highlands, which held a power to stir my emotions. It rang through an historic pass; and the bell heather quivered in response on all the mountains, while the old gray Scottish castles turned grim, disapproving faces on the intruder which symbolized to them perhaps a troubled reign. Though this was a tiny, solitary bell, its clear note comes floating back to me with curious frequency.

Bells there are—like the Sunken Bell—fraught with meaning, foreboding tragedy, more notable perhaps for their melancholy mystery than for their tunefulness. Nevertheless, I count them also among the assets of a country's charm. Such a bell I heard in Scotland bitterly rebelling against its lot whenever a servant tugged it in the pursuance of domestic routine. I could never be quite sure at the time I knew this bell whether I was sorry for it, or ashamed of it for a naughty, wilful bell; but always when its voice spoke to the household at the dressing hour, in the late, unnatural twilight, I shivered in my tower room, and looking down upon the slender, rippling Dee following its world-long course among the mountains, drew the curtains with fingers which trembled slightly, and a mind troubled with a nameless trouble. Once this bell had done service as a ship's bell, voyaging from England to the far East and coming back with strange and beautiful cargoes; but the winds destroyed the ship and the bell went down into the foreign seas, where it lay for many a day, to be recovered later and taken back to England. The new laird of Dinnet Lodge, seeing it in the shipmaster's study, bought it and sent it off to Scotland with a collection of curios which included a sphinx and a mummy from Cairo; and shortly before my arrival in the house as guest he had raised it over the entrance hall, where straightway it began its misdemeanors. First, it threw its tongue to the ground, drawing attention by this means to its state of nerves and temper. Next, it brought about a series of domestic misfortunes, some comic, others increasingly serious. Objects were mysteriously lost or broken, causing great regret often, and often inconvenience when they could be replaced only from London. A crucifix fell in the boudoir of the lady of the Lodge, breaking into bits on the wooden floor; and a puffin which had dwelt contentedly enough under glass for years suddenly burst its case one night, and was discovered in the morning apparently on the verge of flight. The sphinx began to disintegrate; and I often secretly suspected the mummy of turning in its coffin at midnight; while we all fell ill, and ere the spring came our beautiful chatelaine had died. I have never known what punishment was meted out to the malignant bell, or, in fact, if any punishment befell it; but that it was a bell of spells and charms none of us who knew it at that time must doubt. Had it learned such terrible secrets under seas that its whole nature had become warped and its tone permeated with a je ne sais quoi of lurking mysteries and terrors? Had it preferred its life in the shipmaster's study, silent although it could tell of such adventures? Or had it begun to crave the wild caress of the salt wave and its oldtime pitch and toss on angry depths and limitless waters globed in by an all but limitless sky? Who knows the heart of a bell? He that doth, let him answer.

Next to chimes and bells I love a harpsichord. There is the same wistful quality in a good one that there is in an old set of chimes. What true lover of bygone days has stood before a collection of old instruments without thrills of excitement and quickening of "the inward eye?" And who has ever heard a concert on the harpsichord and clavichord without gaining from it a new idea of the music of Bach, and Handel and Haydn, and ever afterward being a little impatient of the modern pianos which deaden and smother the delicate melodies? Our attention is being called of late to the real joys of the old-time music and the beauty of the earlier instruments with their faint, wistful tones which penetrate to the imagination; the lovely poignancy of the harpsichord; the clavichord, winsomely melodious, full of homely, domestic charm, suggestive of ripening wheat and fattening sheep and happy family life indoors. Well did Bach characterize it as "well-tempered," so gentle, sweet, and ready to serve, so devoid of all harshness seems this instrument.

To me, these precursors of the pianoforte have a very special charm—the charm of early association. To be sure, growing up in a musical library is not the common lot of little girls, so that perhaps my affection for them is a peculiarity. However that may be, the fact remains that I have derived a special pleasure throughout my life from all that has served to make real the people who wrote for and played upon the clavichord and harpsichord and the primitive piano. I learned to read from the lives of the composers, knowing nothing of "Mother Goose" or "Alice in Wonderland" till much, much later than the average child, whereas well do I remember with what palpitating interest I read the life of Wolfgang Mozart from a much-thumbed red book, and studied the full length engraving of that jaunty gentleman upon our parlor wall. How greatly I admired the fit of his embroidered waistcoat, and his fine features, as he stood beside a marble settle in a bower of roses, a sheaf of manuscript on the seat beside him; and with what awe did I contemplate the companion engraving of Ludwig van Beethoven overtaken by a thunderstorm on a wild moor. His greatcoat was wrapped about him, and with one foot he trod down a clump of thistles while the great fury of genius was represented as playing across his face. What message was the storm bringing to this man, I used to wonder, struggling in my childish fashion to understand the mystery of the creative power.

In lesser degree I have felt the same mysterious power of music coming from the fingers of a world-weary old musician whom I knew as a fellow boarder in a little country house. This man was rapidly going down into the shadowland; and the single, wistful, penetrating strain I used to hear steal sometimes from the music room when he thought himself alone, although I can not find it in the keyboard, has left a groove somewhere in my memory as sharply defined as the cutting of a diamond on glass. It used to seem to me like an answer to the great Summoner.

Sometimes I ask myself what it is that makes for so much love of all beautiful sounds, and find it hard to reach a conclusion. Is it the love of beauty for its own sake? Is it the intellectual stimulus music gives? Perhaps it is chiefly the memories called into life again; music and memory are so closely related. The voice of the singer we loved formerly, so clear, so true in its every intonation, we never forget; or the great cathedral organ, or the chimes, or the lonely bell—all of them come trooping back at a touch of the right chord, almost causing us pain in their near-reality.

Whatever evokes lovely memories, whether great or small, may surely be worthy of a place in our country. I, for one, claim it for chimes, for deep-toned bells, and many, many other missing things which have the gift to foster our imaginations and a musical spirit in us. We may not have the kings of other countries, we may not want them; we may not have the heather or the mediaeval castle, chateau, ruined church, or battlefield surcharged with the pageantlike interest of an early epoch; but we have youth and strength and promise, and let us have chimes that are young and strong and bells with a valiant tone.

Do I hear the great majority protesting against so much din and clatter? Ah, my dear great majority, I respect you and sympathize with you in your wish for quiet. I do not like steam rollers nor elevated trains under my own study windows, but since in the march of human progress I am at any moment threatened with them, give me in addition, please, one little nearby belfry, filled with sweet-voiced chimes to which my weary imagination may take flight, and out of which it may slake its thirst and live.

EDITH MENDALL TAYLOR.

SOME MESSENGERS, AND WHERE THEY WENT.

I.

One Sunday evening in early summer, a short time before Father Moffett died, he preached a sermon of which the text was, "The love of Christ constraineth us." His thought, all through it, was that the missionary spirit—the spirit of self-effacement in drawing others to Christ—was an essential part of the Christian character.

Not because he knows he ought, does the really successful servant work for Christ, but because he can not be contented unless he is doing his utmost, all the time, everywhere. In these times, when mission work is so thoroughly organized, and specialists are everywhere in training for it; when the idea is to send well-equipped and well-prepared workers; when, in other words, it is, as a careless observer once remarked, "getting to be quite a business"; then, with the thankfulness that it so well arranged, comes the fear that we every-day sort of folks, who have to stay at home, may forget that the Church itself is the great Missionary Society, and we ourselves its messengers. It may never be your lot to convert a heathen philosopher; but it is quite likely that you will find some room mate or fellow worker in dense ignorance of the real comforts of religion in some trying hour, and you may, by the grace of God, become a "messenger" when you least expect it. That is, of course, if you are ready. One may use a parish retreat or mission simply as a time to pray for or acquire holiness for oneself, or one may use it as a time for preparation for the next opportunity God may send us.

One thing is certain: the sort of church member who spends all times of devotion before the Sacrament in prayer for self, even for personal sanctity, will lose wonderful chances. It is prayer for others which draws us nearest God; it is work for others which leads us in the very footprints of the Master. It was this spirit of utter self-sacrifice for others that made Moses cry out in that awful appeal which he made to God for his miserable people (Exod. xxxii: 32); that St. Paul expressed in his bitter cry for his "brethren" (Romans ix: 3). . . . But sentiments such as these are quite obsolete; we read the daily newspaper record of sin, but we don't let it spoil our breakfast; we may, if we are very, very devout, spend a few quiet moments in church on our way to work, praying for God's blessing on our own particular friends and interests. We all make little dabs at the wretchedness around us, calling it charity; but we don't throw ourselves at God with passionate prayers that would bless and save them at any expense to ourselves. In some future time, when the great Church of China is a completely organized and established force of the kingdom, it may have to send missionaries back to lead poor, dull, money-clogged America back to God again.

The writer, in this little mission study, preferred to use St. Paul's word for a missionary (Phil. ii: 25) "One sent forth."

It is an old, old office, beginning with Abraham, who was sent forth from his own country and from his own people. Divine love constrained him, a man fearless, devoted, and full of faith. Through his efforts, Palestine became the nursery of the true religion, in the earliest times, till the days of the Apostles. Then, suddenly, in the very times of the Apostles themselves, a new place was found in which the kingdom might grow without observation, safely and surely, for a thousand years.

For five hundred years, beginning about 55 A. D., the Romans maintained an army in Britain, consisting most of the time of about 48,000 men. Britain was known to the Romans at the time St. Paul was first imprisoned there, and ancient Welsh tradition holds that Cunobelinus, father of Caratacos, was at that very time in Rome as a hostage, and there learned Christ, devotedly serving Him after his return to Britain. St. Paul's own guard very likely heard and repeated to him many tales of the strange West. There is no record of St. Paul's going to Britain, but he certainly went to Spain, as he had intended, for St. Clement mentions that. "To the further limit of the West," he says. This may include Britain.

At any rate, Christianity went into Britain with the Roman invasion, in the first century, and in the simplest, most every-day fashion. "In those days," says one writer, with perhaps unconscious sarcasm, "every Christian was, as a matter of course, a missionary." Roman soldiers caught up the word while on duty about the "palace," to which St. Paul lovingly alludes, where the household contained many Christians; Roman Christian ladies spoke quietly to their British slaves—nay, better: slaves were purchased, taught the truth as it is in Jesus, and sent home to teach it; captives otherwise freed, or hostages released, went back as Christians; many Spanish traders were of the faith; best of all, missionaries from Gaul went over, to preach with a pure heart, fervently.

By the time of the Welsh monk, called Gildas the Wise (A. D. 520), Christianity had such a hold on Britain that he could write as follows:

"The Church is spread over the nation, organized, endowed, having sacred edifices and altars, the three orders of the ministry, monastic institutions embracing the people of all ranks and classes. It has spread, moreover, into Ireland and Scotland. It is also a learned Church; it has its own version of the Bible, and its own ritual."

More than once, British missionary bishops went to councils over on the Continent, sitting patiently and meekly while their more "advanced" brethren wrangled over questions of theology and discipline. There were such conventions during the fourth century.

As the Roman power waned, Britain became a prey to hordes of pirates, and Divine Providence ordered that the Faith should be sheltered and nourished in Ireland. So, if we want to understand the Irish missionaries, we shall have to begin with the Saint who especially belongs to Ireland and Ireland to him. Let him being the story himself:

"I, Patrick, a sinner, the rudest, and least of all the faithful, and the most despicable among men, had for my father Calpurnius, a deacon, son of the late Potitus. . . . We had gone back from God's Commandments, and had not been obedient to our priests, who used to warn us for our salvation. And the Lord brought upon us the wrath of His displeasure, and scattered us among many nations."

This refers to a terrible raid of pirates when he was sixteen. He was carried to Ireland, and then became one of the slaves of Milchu, King of the Dalriads, the most powerful king in Ireland, ruling in the northwest. Here the lad was set to tend swine for six long years, and he afterward compared that time to the case of the Prodigal Son. For, in these weary straits, his heart turned to his Father. As with Moses in exile, Joseph in Egypt, St. Paul at Damascus, the time of discipline became one of blessing, and he remembers it as a time when for very joy "my spirit burned within me." Ability to bear any amount of discomfort is a prime need in missionary labor, and St. Patrick then acquired it. Summer heat and winter snows, hunger, weariness, cruelty, discouragement, loneliness, he bore them all, and meanwhile did his humble menial tasks so well that his rough companions noticed it with praise.

Finally, in a dream, he was told that a ship was ready a hundred miles away and that he would be carried home on it. Following this advice, he escaped and reached the ship, whose captain rather unwillingly took him on board. After many misadventures, during which the ship's company more than once cried, "Christian, pray for us," he reached his home. But in the midst of his joy there came another dream. He seemed to see a man coming to him with letters, one of which was inscribed "The Voice of the Irish." As he began to read he heard voices, "We beseech thee, holy youth, come back and walk among us." He therefore gave himself up to incessant study and preparation, studying in Gaul and elsewhere, feeling keenly his need, as he speaks of himself then as "ignorant, slow of speech, rustic, a fugitive, and moreover unlearned." When he finally went to Ireland he went straight to the old scenes, to King Milchu's territory, and made his first convert there.

But his chief object was Tara, the land of King Loaghaire, where assemblies were held, and the harps of the poets used to hang. Its distance across the stormy Irish Sea kept Ireland immune from Roman invasion, so St. Patrick found there the ancient seat of the Druid worship, and Tara was its stronghold.

Here, on Easter Eve, he lit the sacred fire as a challenge to the Druids. And soon after he overcame them and baptized the king and most of his followers.

St. Patrick lived to extreme old age, loving and serving his people, and even to this day is preserved the beautiful hymn with which he fortified himself for his great struggle with the Druids.

I bind to myself today,
The strong power of the invocation of the Trinity,
The faith of the Trinity in Unity,
The Creator of the elements.

I bind to myself today,
The power of the Incarnation of Christ with that of His Baptism,
The power of the Crucifixion with that of His Burial,
The power of the Resurrection with the Ascension,
The power of the coming to the Sentence of Judgment.

* * * * * * *

Christ protect me today,
Against poison, against burning,
Against drowning, against wound,
That I may receive abundant reward.

Christ with me, Christ before me,
Christ within me, Christ behind me,
Christ beneath me, Christ above me,
Christ at my right, Christ at my left,
Christ in the heart of every man who thinks of me,
Christ in the mouth of every man who speaks to me,
Christ in every eye that sees me,
Christ in every ear that hears me.

I bind to myself today,
The strong power of an invocation of the Trinity,
The faith of the Trinity in Unity,
The Creator of the elements.

Salvation dwells with the Lord,
With Christ the omnipotent word,
From generation to generation,
Grant, us, oh Lord, thy grace and salvation. —Amen.

ST. JOHN EVANGELIST'S IN BOSTON.

The staunch old Boston Methodists, in years gone by, took pride in their new stone meeting house that reared its massive tower on the slope of Beacon Hill, back of the State House. Today, it is to be feared, they would turn away with heavy Protestant hearts were they to enter those familiar portals. The old pulpit and the somber walls are things of the far-away past, and a Catholic altar stands in the shallow apse, for the edifice is now the Church of St. John the Evangelist, and the home of our old friends, the Cowley Fathers.

As we pass from the vestibule, with its familiar notice board and the lists of sick and dead to be remembered in our prayers and enter the church, symbols of the Catholic Faith greet us on every hand. The stoup of holy water bids us purify our hearts and minds as we make the holy sign and bless ourselves before we kneel to pray, and the red light before the tabernacle gladdens us, as it speaks of the perpetual presence of Jesus Christ under the veils of Bread and Wine.

The church is square and plain, with a gallery on three sides. The old-fashioned pews were replaced long ago by oaken benches and a low platform erected at the east end to form a choir and sanctuary. Across the chancel thus formed, stretches a beautiful oak rood screen, surmounted by a Calvary and the figures of our Lady and St. John. The High Altar is of carved oak, and the dossal which hangs behind it reminds us of the old sanctuary of St. Clement's, for the embroidered crucifix is a copy of that which we loved on the old blue baldachino.

At the head of the north aisle under the gallery is the Altar of the Sacrament, surmounted by a Tabernacle, where the Blessed Sacrament is always reserved, and on the other side of the church, in a corresponding position, is the Altar of our Lady, backed by a carved oak screen, behind which is the Baptistery.

The Stations of the Cross are of plaster in low relief, and are of a soft ivory tone—these, as well as all the ornaments of the church, show the artistic hand of Father Field.

A sweet odor of incense lingers about the sanctuary, and there is the same atmosphere of reverence and devotion which we know in our St. Clement's and which bids us kneel and pray.

There is no parish building, but in the basement of the church are several large choir and Sunday School rooms, and an oratory where the community recites the Breviary offices.

The clergy house adjoins the church. Some years ago the Fathers occupied a wooden dwelling in the rear, old and dark within and with a tiny garden at the side. The old house was not fashioned for comfort or convenience, but those who dwelt there gave an atmosphere of quiet charm to the old low studded rooms, for here were Father Benson, Father Longridge, Father Field, and many others whom we know well. It was in this house that Father Benson once was asked his opinion concerning a projected "Home for Disabled Clergy." "I have little knowledge of such matters," he replied; "but in disabled homes for the clergy I have had some experience."

The present house is an old brick dwelling that has been remodeled to meet requirements. On the left of the narrow hall is a small reception room, and beyond the swinging doors, the Fathers' common room and the kitchen. On the floor above a cheerful library extends acrosss the front of the house, and back of this are the Superior's office and the refectory.

One finds here warm hospitality, especially if one lets it be known that St. Clement's is his spiritual home, for no Cowley Father ever forgets Philadelphia and the old days of warfare for the Catholic Faith. The Provincial Superior is our good friend, Father Field, who looks upon all St. Clement's people as, in a sense, a portion of his own flock, and he is ever ready to hear news of old friends. A "Clementine" visiting Boston need never feel himself a stranger while St. John's and the Cowley Fathers bear witness to the Catholic Faith.

PARISH NOTES.

The Friday Evening Bible Class for Women will commence the first Friday in October.

Fr. Quin left for his holiday on September 1 and has been spending some weeks in Canada.

Solemn Evensong was begun on the third Sunday in September and the 8 o'clock Mass resumed.

Parishioners are reminded that the list of names for All Souls' Day is made up by noon of the previous day. They are asked to send in any names to be included in the list as early as possible, and not later than the 31st of October.

We welcome Fr. Underhill as one of the regular staff of St. Clement's clergy. He enters into residence the 1st of October and will have charge of the Mission work. At the same time it is with regret that we part with Fr. Venables, who goes to Baltimore as curate at Mount Calvary. During his residence in the Parish he has made many friends and the prayers and good wishes of our people follow him.

The services of intercession on Friday noons will be resumed on the 3d of October. It is hoped that very many of our people will make an effort to be present at this service throughout the winter. Names and subjects for intercession may be written out and dropped through the letter-slide in the door of the Clergy House. Will not every member of the congregation use his influence to fill the Chapel at these services?

HYMNS FOR OCTOBER.

BURIAL.

August 14—Joseph Culleney.

THE NEW CHIMNEY.

Our friend, Mr. Sellers, tells us that with the new chimney which has just been completed, we will have a warm Church and Parish Building this winter. It was found possible to build the flues without encroaching upon either the Church or the corridor. We trust that the members of the Parish may contribute to the expense of this work. The cost will be $1,100 and the Accounting Warden is anxious to meet this bill without encroaching upon the current expense account or borrowing from other funds. The building of the chimney was a necessity at this time if we were to pass the winter with any degree of comfort.

THE MISSION.

Following is the list of services suggested for the Mission; a corrected list will be printed on slips for circulation later:

Masses on Sundays as usual; on weekdays, 6.30, 7, 7.30 and 9.30 a. m.

General Mission services every evening at 8 o'clock.

Bible Class weekdays at 10 a. m.

Services for Men every Sunday at 4 o'clock.

Services for Women every weekday at 3 p. m.

Children's Mission every weekday at 4 p. m.

Every one in the Parish should be spreading the news of the Mission through the neighborhood in which he lives and should be urging people to attend it. The best way to fill the Church is to come oneself and bring some one else.

Do not hesitate to ask others to come. We can not tell what soul Almighty God may be leading to Himself through our instrumentality. And be quite sure that He has a message for you.

The Mission will commence on Sunday night, November 7, and will end with a corporate Communion of the Parish on Sunday, September 21, and a closing service, with renewal of baptismal vows, at night.

THE SUMMER SCHOOL.

The Summer School opened this year on July 12 with real interest and enthusiasm shown by the first day's attendance of forty-nine. As many of the children were pupils of last summer Mrs. Root had the advantage of meeting the children as friends whose dispositions and characteristics she had already learned through last year's experience as teacher in the Summer School.

Every one came eager to make something and the spirit of work which prevailed throughout the seven weeks of school found employment for each child in the classes of chair-caning, sewing, basket and raffia work besides the usual kindergarten occupations for the little ones.

The chairs caned by the boys were brought from home and were very proudly carried back the last day of school, not only caned, but varnished as well.

The older girls were interested in making shirt waists for themselves and the smaller girls in making aprons. Most of the children had a share in the reed and Indian basket work while the raffia boxes, picture frames and napkin rings were made even by the small children with great delight and care.

The usual religious instruction was given each day by the Sister for an hour, and the children were both attentive and responsive. An effort was made to help them in their everyday contact with each other to put in practice the lessons taught.

Much credit is due to Mrs. Root for the energy and patience with which she kept the children interested and happy, as well as for the general order maintained rather by the attention and encouragement given to each child than by collective discipline.

We owe our hearty thanks to the ladies who so kindly gave a morning each week to help in the work, to Miss Elizabeth Stecher for her interest and kindness in sending books, and also to Miss Helen C. Mason who came from a distance every morning to assist Mrs. Root.

The average daily attendance was thirty and in many cases either illness or a trip to the country accounted for the absentees.

The school closed on August 27 with an exhibition of work, kindergarten games and songs, and the usual closing treat to which the parents were invited.

THE NEW MISSION HOUSE.

The Sisters are finally installed in their new house at 2016 Race street and have a most comfortable and cheerful home, much better adapted to their needs than the old house on Lambert street.

The building is in a quiet neighborhood on the corner of Woodstock street, and is also near the Church.

On the first floor are two pleasant reception rooms, which are a marked contrast to the small, dark room with which we are familiar. The additional room was much needed. On the same floor are the Sisters' refectory, kitchen and laundry.

The second floor has a bedroom and sitting room for a guest, a light and convenient office for the Superior, and the Chapel and sacristy. The Chapel has been simply but tastefully furnished after plans by Mr. Sellers, and the result is devotional and satisfying.

The upper floors are occupied by the Community common room and cells. All who have seen the new house are much impressed by its cheerfulness and convenience.

SOME MESSENGERS, AND WHERE THEY WENT.

II.

On the map Great Britain looks somewhat like a very fussy old lady with a much-ruffled cap and flying skirts. The ancient boundaries being a little difficult to follow, suppose we accept the childish fancy and say: the ancient Picts, northern and southern, occupied the region indicated by the frill and peak of the old lady's cap; the Scots, along the battered cap strings; the Romanized Britons occupied all the rest.

The word "Scot" is very misleading, and has confused historians because in early times only a few Scots were in what is now Scotland. Most of the Scots were in the northern part of Ireland. Across the region occupied by the Picts, obliquely southwest to northeast, ran a chain of mountains dividing the northern from the southern Picts. Among these heathen the principal objects of popular worship were the personified powers of nature. The spirits supposed to be dwelling in mountains, valleys, and seas were to be feared and propitiated.

About the year 350 was born the Apostle of the Southern Picts, St. Ninian, on the banks of the Galway. His father was a chieftain, probably a man of some authority, and Ninian was baptized and grew up an earnest student of the Scriptures. He longed for more light on some points and better training. So he went to Rome. It was a placid and orderly journey along the well-managed Roman roads, through Britain and Gaul. Either then, or on his return journey, he made the acquaintance of the beloved soldier-bishop, St. Martin of Tours, who took a kind interest in his plans and hopes. Some writers state that the plans and workmen for the new church building were obtained from St. Martin.

Reaching home, St. Ninian began his church, taking for his missionary center Whitehaven, in Wigtonshire, on the north bank of the Galway. Withern, or "White House," was a Roman seat of government, probably the Cathedral buildings. "Candida Cara" took their name from the town. This was half sanctuary, half shelter—St. Ninian's building; as it was nearing completeness he heard of the death of St. Martin and named the Cathedral in memory of him.

Then the ardent spirit looked out to the adjacent heathen tribes on the Grampian Hills. He might have been satisfied, as it was; the church buildings were of stone, stately and beautiful, so that people came from far away to see them, perhaps disturbing the worshipers with their comments. A sort of dioceson government was worked out. St. Ninian was a busy and successful ecclesiastic. But "the stranger at his gates" appealed to him, and finally he went in person among the southern Picts. In required consummate tact and patience, this mission. The Picts, joined by the Scots, in an invasion into the southern country, had just been put down by the Romans with a strong hand. Roman manners and ways, such as St. Ninian had acquired from his long residence on the Continent, were bitterly disliked. Moreover, he was a "Ritualist," so to speak, preferring a rather crude worship, and one would think he was about the last man to go among primitive people to lead them in prayer in the wilderness. But if Catholic privileges are really effective they make men Christ-like, and the Christlike man serves God anywhere. The true Catholic lays up treasures of worship and devotion; then, as others need them, prayerfully, unobtrusively, draws upon his store.

In some such way as this St. Ninian made his way among his heathen neighbors, and so won them to Christ that he has ever since been known as the Apostle of the Southern Picts.

Long after him, more than a century, St. Columba broke away from the monastery where he had been trained, in the northern part of Ireland, and with twelve companions, crossed to the small Scot's kingdom on the opposite coast, ruled by his cousin, King Canal. This king gave him the small island of Iona for his work. Massive stones were St. Ninian's protection; the waves were St. Columba's barrier. His community built its own walled huts and worked there happily, becoming a center for good missionary work among the northern tribes. Little by little the wild tribes were won; day by day the community plied its humble tasks and ministered to body as well as soul. St. Columba began this work at 40 years of age. Of princely descent and high authority in his own country his impetuous spirit had led him into some political struggles and the worst side of his nature, the ambitious, contentious, domineering side, was uppermost when God in His mercy brought him to Himself, humbled and penitent, and the Saint went over the sea, away from temptations and dangers, as Moses had fled from Egypt, and like Moses, at 40 years of age, he clearly saw his work, and followed it.

St. Columba is a favorite subject of ancient song and story; it is difficult to get at the facts of his life through the thick mists of legend. But it is certain that he converted the north as St. Ninian the south. Totally different types of men, different in circumstances, they are side by side as conquerors for the Kingdom of our Lord and of His Christ, for the love of Christ constrained them. St. Columba, in those days of hand-written books, himself transcribed hundreds of copies of the Scriptures. On the day of his death he was at work on the Thirty-ninth Psalm, stopping at the words "They who seek the Lord shall want no manner of thing that is good."

He was very weak but took his usual place at Evensong, and again at midnight went into the chapel to recite the office. As he knelt before the altar he sank to the floor, and so fell asleep in Jesus.

Onward, therefore, pilgrim brothers;
Onward, with the Cross our aid;
Bear its shame and fights its battles,
Till we rest beneath its shade.

THE SECOND CRUCIFIXION.

Loud mockers in the roaring street
Say Christ is crucified again;
Twice perished His gospel-bearing feet,
Twice broken His great heart in vain.
I hear and to myself I smile,
For Christ talks with me all the while.

No angel now to roll the stone
From off His unawakening sleep;
In vain shall Mary watch alone,
In vain the soldiers vigil keep.
Yet while they deem my Lord is dead
My eyes are on His shining Head.

Ah! never more shall Mary hear
That Voice exceeding sweet and low
Within the garden calling clear;
Her Lord is gone, and she must go.
Yet all the while my Lord I meet
In every London lane and street.

Poor Lazarus shall wait in vain
And Bartimaeus still go blind;
The healing hem shall ne'er again
Be touched by suffering humankind.
Yet all the while I see them rest,
The poor and outcast on His breast.

No more unto the stubborn heart
With gentle knocking shall He plead;
No more the mystic pity start,
For Christ twice dead is dead indeed.
So in the street I hear men say;
Yet Christ is with me all the day.

Our prayers fail of their fulfilment because we do not ask aright. We ask for wrong things in a wrong way. The church in our Prayer Book gives us a lesson in this respect, in showing us the sort of things that we should ask for, instead of the childish asking for everything we see and everything we fancy, or the minute dictation to God which our fancied superiority suggests to us.

It comes to us as a beautiful legend from later mediæval times There was once an aged hermit in the Egyptian desert, who thought it would be well with him if he had an olive tree near his cave. So he planted a little tree, and thinking it might want water, he prayed to God for rain; so rain came and watered his olive tree. Then he thought that some warm sun to swell its buds would be advisable; so he prayed, and the sun shone out. Now the nursling looked feeble, and the old man deemed it would be well for the tree if frosts were to come and brace it. He prayed for the frost, and hoar-frost settled that night on bar and beam. Next he believed a hot, southerly wind would suit his tree, and, after prayer, the south wind blew upon his olive tree and it died. Some little while after the hermit visited a brother hermit, and, lo! at his cell door stood a flourishing olive tree. "How come that goodly plant there, brother?" asked the unsuccessful hermit. "I planted, God blessed it, and it grew."

"Ah! brother, I, too, planted an olive tree, and when I thought it wanted water, I asked God for rain, and rain came, and when I thought it wanted sun, I asked and the sun shone, and when I deemed that it needed strength, I prayed, and frost came. God gave me all I demanded for my tree as I saw fit, yet is it dead." "And I, my brother," replied the other hermit, "I left my tree in God's hands, for He knew what it wanted better than I."

We must trust God more than we do to give us those things which, for our unworthiness we dare not, and for our blindness we cannot, ask, through Jesus Christ our Lord.—Canon Newbolt.

LETTER FROM BISHOP WHITAKER.

The following letter has been received from our Bishop concerning the Mission:

DIOCESE OF PENNSYLVANIA.
THE CHURCH HOUSE,
TWELFTH AND WALNUT STREETS.

PHILADELPHIA, Oct. 6, 1909.

My Dear Rev. Brother:—I sincerely hope the Mission which you purpose holding in St. Clement's in November, may by God's blessing, be the means of quickening and deepening the spiritual life of your congregation. If the earnest prayers of your people are united with the prayers of those who minister to them in Holy Things, God will surely be with you, and as you draw nigh to Him He will draw nigh to you and bless you abundantly. That this may be so, is the prayer of your friend and Bishop,

O. W. WHITAKER.

THE MISSION.

There seems to be a general interest through the parish concerning the Mission which commences the 7th of this month. We trust that every one is striving to awaken this interest in others. Particularly are the congregation asked to send children to the special services whih are to be held for them every weekday at 4 o'clock, or immediately after school. Every child attending all the services will receive a "remembrance" of the Mission at its close. The instructions are full of interest for the young people, and it is hoped that the children of our parish will endeavor to bring their friends. Each child will be given a card on which will be kept the record of attendance. These should be procured before the Mission commences. Those in charge will be in the Parish Hall on Saturday, October 29, and November 6, to register the children. The boys are asked to come in the morning at 10 o'clock and the girls at 3 in the afternoon. In addition, they may come directly from school on Friday afternoon, November 5. Will you not try to make the young people's services a success?

There will be special services for women at 3 every weekday, and a service for men on each Sunday at 4 o'clock. The church should be filled for these services. It will be if we all do our duty.

Extra copies of the lists of services may be obtained from the clergy.

Bring some one to the Mission.

PARISH NOTES.

Bona Mors will be said every Monday during November after evensong.

During the Mission evensong will be sung on Sundays at 5.15 p. m.

The service for the Confraternity of the Blessed Sacrament will be omitted in November.

Vespers of the dead will be said immediately after evensong on Monday, November 1.

The parish tea will be held on St. Clement's night. This ought to be the occasion when the entire congregation comes together as one family. Let every one make a real effort to be present.

The Rt. Rev. Frederick J. Kinsman, Bishop of Delaware, is expected to preach on St. Clement's Day, and the Rev. Elliot White, of Newark, will preach for the Sodality on the Friday in the octave. It is hoped that all of the congregation will endeavor to make a devout communion on the patronal feast. Let us try to make the coming festival the very best that we have ever held.

The following special offerings will be taken during the month of November:

Monday, November 1 (All Saints' Day)—For the Sisters of All Saints.

Sunday, November 14—For the expenses of the Mission.

Tuesday, November 23 (St. Clement's Day)—For the repair fund. To be applied especially to defraying of expenses of the new chimney, the renovation of the clergy house, and the building of a new sidewalk on Cherry street. The sum of $2,700 is needed for these objects, and all are necessities.

Thursday, November 25 (Thanksgiving Day)—For the poor and for the Episcopal Hospital. The hospital has opened its doors many times to our people and it deserves our support.

HYMNS FOR NOVEMBER.

November 1—A. M., 618, 435, 437, 436.
November 2—398, 311; pt. ii., 608.

October 3—Kathryn Bernice Arnreich.
October 13—John Milton Ford.

ST. CLEMENT, MARTYR AND BISHOP.

Collect:

O God, who makest us to rejoice in the yearly solemnity of Blessed Clement, Thy Martyr and Bishop, favorably grant that we who keep his festival may likewise imitate his fortitude in suffering, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Epistle; Phil. iii: 17; iv: 4.

Brethren, be followers—together of me and mark them which walk so as ye have us for an example. (For many walk of whom I have told you often and now tell you even weeping that they are the enemies of the Cross of Christ: whose end is destruction, whose God is their belly, and whose glory is in their shame, who mind earthly things.) For our conversation is in heaven; from whence also we look for the Saviour the Lord Jesus Christ who shall change our vile body that it may be fashioned like unto His own glorious body, according to the working whereby he is able even to subdue all things unto Himself. Therefore, my brethren, dearly beloved and longed for, my joy and my crown, so stand fast in the Lord, my dearly beloved. I beseech Euodias and beseech Syntyche, that they be of the same mind in the Lord. And I entreat thee also true yoke fellow help those women which labored with me in the gospel, with Clement also, and with other, my fellow-laborers, whose names are in the book of life.

The Gospel, St. Matt. xxiv: 42-48.

Watch, therefore, for ye know not what hour your Lord doth come. But know this: that if the good man of the house had known in what watch the thief would come, he would have watched and would not have suffered his house to be broken up. Therefore be ye also ready: for in such an hour as ye think not the Son of Man cometh. Who, then, is a faithful and wise servant, whom his Lord hath made ruler over his household, to give them meat in due season? Blessed is that servant, whom his lord when he cometh shall find so doing. Verily, I say unto you, that he shall make him ruler over all his goods.

Licensed for use in St. Clement's Church during the octave of the anniversary.

SOME MESSENGERS, AND WHERE THEY WENT.

III.

In telling about St. Ninian, we said that he went easily through Britain by means of the well-guarded Roman roads. But that was previous to the time of the northern invasions of the Jutes, Saxons and Angles, who came over in 449. Beginning on the southeast coast, they drove the Britons back, and back, and back, sometimes destroying whole communities. They were not only cruel, but derisive—they gave the Britons the name of "Welsh," or unintelligible. Any one who has struggled with the Welsh language will appreciate this; but the bitter feelings engendered last even to the present day between the Celtic and Anglo-Saxon descendants, and British politics testify to it.

So in the fifth century, and for a long time after, it would be well-nigh impossible for Celtic missionaries to make any impression on the heathen of the southeast. St. Patrick, St. Columba, and St. Ninian having Christianized the north and west, nothing remained for one with the pioneer spirit but to set his face toward the Continent.

There was plenty of room for missionary effort there. Since the time when, more than a century before, Constantine had destroyed the edicts of persecution, the countries around the Mediterranean had been nominally Christian. But as Christianity became a matter of less effort, it was embraced by a less heroic sort of folk. "Blessed are ye when men shall persecute you," says the Lord. There was time now for Christians to quarrel with each other, which they proceeded to do. The Church within was poisoned with heresy; its clergy wrangled among themselves, and were discreetly blind to the vices of their masters, the kings and princes. So it was for a short distance north of the great sea; then, far, far northward, for thousands of miles, stretched the awful wilds—the wild and lofty mountains, whose peaks towered above the great tracts of the densest forest. The border-land still bore the traces of Roman camps or Frankish town-life. But the barbarian invasions, especially those of Attila, had left desolation everywhere. The forlorn peasantry crept a little way into the woods, here and there, to get fagots for their fires. Bands of merchants went through, now and then, accompanied by the strongest guards.

And the people's souls were as neglected as their bodies. There were hordes of heathen, worshipping the powers of nature which they feared. There were, here and there, little bands of Christian descent, forgotten by the Frankish clergy in their comfortable city homes. One young Christian soldier of the British Church thought this a good place to endure hardness. In the face of much opposition St. Columbanus sailed from Britain with twelve followers.

He was thirty years of age—does any one ever think what a beautiful age that is to be? Just the age when Our Lord began His work—with mature judgment, and still with the vigor of youth. Yet many a one, because of some bereavement, or loss, or disappointment, finds the thirtieth birthday a bitter time. This is so especially with the lonely ones—they are beginning to be a little, just a little, discontented and wistful.

"There are long, plain spaces without a break,
Which in youth are hard to bear."

In the thirties, your share of the world's burdens is taken for granted—and you are not yet old enough to feel any of that serene content with your daily work which does, believe me, come later. But this is the very finest age for one who aims to become a missionary. The best for beginners in the foreign field, by all means. The best for the charities nearer home. And if God will not make a way for either of these, there is, there must be, some one—perhaps in your own home—for whom you can do something that no one else can. There must be, or you wouldn't be living. You stay in this world only so long as that need lasts which God put you into this world to fill. How glorious if one might come definitely into one's vocation, as the Lord began His work, at thirty years of age! He began—as was pointed out to us in a recent sermon—just among His own friends, at a humble, little up-country wedding. Festive occasions may not be numerous in your circle—how about our little parish gatherings, meant to draw us together—for instance, how about the next parish tea? It makes no difference where one may be set to work—here at home, or perhaps in settlement "evenings," or with fellow-workers in China, or among the North Carolina mountaineers. The true missionary must exercise sympathy, tact, self-forgetfulness, and love of the humanity which Christ so loved that he spent thirty-three years of intercourse with it, and even faced death for it, when He began to be about thirty years of age.

St. Columbanus landed in France in 580, and made his way across to the Vosges Mountains, on the eastern border of Gaul. Here, on the outskirts of the wild forest, as the love of Christ constrained them, Columbanus and his monks gradually won the wild heathen and heart-sick Frankish stragglers, and led them from mischievous idleness to industry and the worship of God.

The little community had its buildings grouped around the church, and that had a strongly fortified tower, as a place to flee unto in times of danger. The tower of a church was more than an architectural feature in those days. The brethren worked cheerfully and humbly with their converts, felling trees, ploughing, planting, and making a place of comfort to all around. Their own life within doors was no easy one; the Rule of St. Columbanus was one of the severest ever known. But his monks did not seem to object. They loved their work, and they glorified in endurance. If some of those who write for our magazines on the subject "Why are there so few candidates for the Ministry?" would utilize that much-wasted space in telling definitely and strongly just what kinds of men are needed, in just what places, and what their sacrifices would have to be—numerous would be the responses. There is a certain amount of nobility in men which can be stirred by the earnest cry for help. "The ministry as a paid profession" is despicable. So are the men who write about it in that tone, and no young man was ever yet led to devote his life to the service by any such article as that.

The monasteries at Luxeuil, Fontenay, and Anegray, infused new life into the Christianity of Gaul. But these methods were bitterly resented by the self-indulgent Frankish clergy, who tried to get rid of Columbanus by involving him in a discussion with Gregory the Great as to Irish customs and observances, to which he clung. At the same time, the abbot was engaged in a struggle with the notorious Brunehaut, mother of King Thierri of Burgundy, who incited her weak son to all kinds of vice, through which she ruled him and controlled the kingdom. Didier, Bishop of Vienne, had paid with his life for rebuking the king. But Columbanus somehow escaped this fate, and was some restraint upon the wretched king. Brunehaut revenged herself by petty persecution and especially by cutting off his supplies from Ireland. Finally she had him forcibly carried away, down the Loire to the coast, and put on a ship which was to take him back to Ireland. But a great storm arose and cast the ship upon the coast of Neustria, whose king readily gave Columbanus a safe conduct to King Theodebert.

His kingdom covered what is now Switzerland. St. Columbanus set out to explore the neighborhood. On the southern shores of Lake Constance he found traces of Christianity, and especially in the southeast. There he found one lonely priest, who guided his party to the ruins of a Roman camp. There they found a church. The heathen had fixed three idols to the chancel wall, and worshipped them with much ceremony. In the presence of a vast multitude these were torn down, broken to pieces, and thrown into the lake.

The heathen looked on with much interest; many of them observed how helpless their gods were and forsook them accordingly. But the majority were indignant. The "poor heathen" often do not consider themselves poor at all, and object to being interfered with. Nevertheless, the community struggled along for a while, St. Columbanus hoping to penetrate further into the wilds, but was warned in a dream not to attempt it. He therefore, after many patient efforts, gave up his work on Lake Constance and made his way down into Lombardy. There he was eagerly welcomed and received the territory called "Bobbio," in a defile of the beautiful Apennines, between Genoa and Milan. Here he found a ruined church, which had been dedicated to St. Peter; and here, by degrees, he built up a famous monastery.

Meanwhile, there was left behind, on the shores of Lake Constance, a devoted follower, whom the master's departure left very lonely. Gallus, better known as St. Gall, had followed St. Columbanus faithfully, and when the heathen hostility left the little band almost starving, this gentle saint applied himself to net making, and fished along the shores of the lake. Then, as now, there was an abundance of delicious fish, and they got on pretty well. One can not but linger over the thought of the holy man, gifted beyond the average, who humbly plied this daily toil in all kinds of weather to save his brethren. Still it comes to us, doesn't it, that cheerful and kindly acceptance of things as they are, is a necessary quality of the church worker.

St. Gall was very ill with a fever; that was why he couldn't go to Lombardy. On his recovery, he set about looking for work of some kind. Accompanied by one deacon, he wandered about, till a site was found suitable for a mission. Little by little he won converts. Little by little they worked out their plans. At last the mustard seed became a great tree, and the great monastery of St. Gall stood in northeastern Switzerland, and the saint himself was sought far and near, as his wisdom was recognized and his genial and kindly disposition won him friends.

Hearing of the death of St. Columbanus, he sent messengers to Bobbio for particulars. In reply the brethren sent him a letter and the abbot's pastoral which had been bequeathed to him.

But dearest to him must have been the memory and example of St. Columbanus, the secret of whose success in his arduous work may be found in his own words:

"Whosoever overcomes himself, treads the world under foot.

"No one who spares himself, can truly hate the world.

"If Christ be truly in us, we can not live to ourselves.

"If we have conquered ourselves, we have conquered all things.

"Let us live in Christ that Christ may live in us."

Go, labor on! spend and be spent;
Thy joy to do the Father's will;
It is the way the Master went—
Should not the servant tread it still?

Go, labor on! 'tis not for naught;
Thine earthy loss is heavenly gain;
Man heed thee, love thee, praise thee not;
The Master praises—what are men?

Go, labor on; enough, while here,
If He shall praise thee, if He deign
The willing heart to mark and cheer;
No toil for Him shall be in vain.

THE "APOCRYPHA."

The omission from Christian Bibles of the books known as the Apocrypha is one of the strange results of the Reformation. From the time of the Apostles they had been read by the Christian Church as part of Holy Scripture. They were included in that collection of sacred books published in Greek by the Jews of Alexandria, which we know as the Septuagint. This was the common Bible used by the Jews wherever the Greek language was spoken. It was used as such by the Apostles and all the first preachers of Christianity; it was always current in the Church, and was soon rendered into Latin for the use of Western Christians. There seems, however, to have been a narrower tradition among the Jews of Palestine. They reckoned a smaller number of sacred books, existing in the ancient Hebrew or the current Aramaic text, gathered into several collections. During the second Christian century, these collections were carefully revised and amalgamated by the labors of the Massoretic scribes and thus the Hebrew Bible was formed.

The Hebrew Bible had for some time no currency among the Christians. They knew it, but they held it of little account. It belonged to a hostile tradition, the tradition of those who had rejected Christ. Origen, for example, noted the fact that the book of Tobit was rejected by "them of the Circumcision," but was read by "the Churches." Other books omitted from the Hebrew canon were accepted without hesitation by men like Ireneus, Athanasius and Cyril of Jerusalem, in the list of sacred Scriptures which they carefully distinguished from Apocryphal. St. Jerome was the author of a new tradition. An ardent scholar and a critic of no mean skill, he sought the original text of the sacred books. He plunged into the task of learning Hebrew, and finding the Jews of his age in possession of a compact Bible, with a carefully edited text, he was led to attribute to this an importance never before dreamt of. He translated some books anew, and revised the old version of others from the Massoretic text. He did not attempt to cut the Latin Bible down to the limits of the Hebrew canon, but he suggested a new distinction between the books which were common to the two collections and those which were peculiar to the Septuagint. He assigned to the former a far higher authority than to the latter.

There was some critical ground for this distinction. The books retained in the Hebrew were supported by two separate and hostile traditions. The Septuagint, though still used by some Jewish synagogues, was supported in the main by the Christian tradition only. The bulk of the Jews disliked it so much as to provide a new Greek version closely following the Hebrew text. But Christians naturally preferred their own tradition. They unanimously held to it, using the Hebrew only for critical purposes, and that very sparingly until the sixteenth century. The Swiss Reformers then led a revolt. They attacked the Latin rendering of the Vulgate—for no obvious reason, unless it were for the sake of breaking the tradition—and encouraged the use of Castellio's new version. They quarreled also with the Christian canon of Scripture, acknowledging only the books of the Jewish canon. Their movement was not without influence in England. St. Jerome's distinction was emphasized, and found conspicuous expression in the Thirty-nine Articles. The books omitted from the Hebrew were not, however, in any way rejected. They were printed in all editions of the English Bible, even those that issued from Geneva. They were appointed to be read in church, and were constantly and familiarly quoted by ecclesiastical writers. But they were carefully gathered together in a place by themselves, and were usually marked by the title of Apocrypha. The title was singularly inept, for it properly means private or secret writings which are not publicly read, while these were so read in Divine Service; it also acquired a popular sense implying worthlessness or falsehood. For this cause, or because of some fanatical devotion to the Jewish canon, the English Puritans fiercely assailed these books. Many of the Non-Conformists refused to read them when appointed for use in Divine Service, and strove eagerly for their exclusion at the revision of the Prayer Book in 1661. This kind of nonconformity continued in spite of all authority, and continues to our day.

Copies of the Bible were multiplied from which the "Apocrypha" were omitted altogether.

It is possible to justify the neglect into which these books have fallen. They are of unequal merit and importance. So also are the books of the Hebrew canon. The distinction is, indeed, purely accidental. On no intelligible principle can the book of Esther be received and the book of Tobit rejected; Ecclesiastes be honored and the wisdom of the son of Sirach set aside. On no Christian principle can the canon of Rabbinical Jews be exalted above that of the Christian Fathers. It is reasonable, with St. Jerome, to prefer those books which are in both canons to those which are in only one. Further, we dare not go. Citation in the New Testament is sometimes taken as defining the authority of the Old Testament and quotations of Scripture in the New Testament are almost always taken from the Septuagint, of which these books were an integral part. Critics have noted two hundred and twelve places where these quotations differ textually from the Massoretic Hebrew; in only fifty places do they differ materially from the Septuagint. The Hebrew text is of first-rate value for those books which exist in Hebrew; the Scribes were jealous for the smallest variation, while the Greek translators were notoriously careless. Yet even here scholars prefer in some cases the testimony of the Greek version as preserving an original reading, and for the inclusion or exclusion of a book there is little to choose between the two authorities. The question which has arisen regarding the Coronation Bible will serve to inform the English public, and we may reasonably hope that English Christians, when duly informed, will show some preference for the Christian canon of Scripture.—Church Times, London.

Lessons from the "Apocrypha" are appointed to be read at Morning and Evening Prayer during the month of November and on a few other occasions as St. Paul's and St. Luke's Day. These books therefore are bound up in all lectern Bibles, i. e., those used at Church services, but too rarely in other editions which are commonly found on sale and in private use. The "Apocrypha" is bound separately.

The Children's Corner

DEAR CHILDREN:

Have you ever wondered, as you kept your happy Christmas and Easter festivals, or—we hope—tried in Lent to deny yourselves "for Jesus' sake," how these things first started, or who first thought of doing them?

Of course, you have been taught what the Church Seasons mean; but there's much hidden away between the covers of your Prayer-book, which you might enjoy finding.

Right here, let me say, this is not going to be all hunted up for you; but we will tell where to find the things to which we refer in these talks; and you can look for them; the Prayer-book is yours—use it.

It's an old book. It was first printed in 1549; when the Church was well-started in America, the book was Americanized in 1789; and only one change was made, in 1892. But the prayers and services, of which the book is composed, date far, far back; at least one-third of the Collects were composed in 490, and there are some prayers older yet.

Let us begin, now, at the beginning of the Christian Year. Not the first of January. No, our Christian Year is so arranged as to follow the events of our Lord's life, and so we must begin with His Birth, which was in December.

For a long time after Jesus had ascended into Heaven, His disciples dated their year from the anniversary of His Resurrection, that is, Easter. But about three hundred years later, two men named Arius and Apollinaris, made a great deal of trouble in the Church. Arius taught that Jesus was not really God; that He was just a very good man whom God especially sent. This was so dreadful that a great Church Council met and denounced it; that was where we get the Nicene Creed, which is said or sung at Mass.

Do you notice in that Creed what a long paragraph there is about Jesus Christ? Get a Prayer-book, American edition, such as we have in all the pews, and look at the top of page 225. Not easy to understand, is it? Well, we are not expected to understand. It was Infinite Wisdom which did this for us; we are only human beings. God is a Wonderful Mystery, and no human being can explain Him. But still, they went on trying to, and a little later, a teacher named Apollinaris said that Jesus was only God; that when He came to earth He took the body and mind of a man, His Divinity took the place of His soul. This is just as much of a mistake the other way. Our blessed Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ was perfect man as well as perfect God. He took our nature upon Him, in everything, only without spot of sin. So, with the mind and body of man, He took the soul of man. That is how He knows so well how we feel; for, especially as we grow older, we suffer through the soul more than any other way.

It was the soul of Jesus Christ which suffered in the desert, when the Devil tempted Him; it was the human soul of Jesus which cried, "My God, why hast thou forsaken Me?" It is the soul of Jesus which feels for you, when you are sorry and ashamed of something and want God to help you. That is why, dear children, we Catholic Christians show such reverence when the choir sings "And was made man."

So the Church decided to make people remember that Jesus was made man by keeping His Birthday.

If you want to keep a great Church feast rightly, you should get ready by special prayer and watchfulness. So, about the middle of the fifth century, Advent was finally set apart as a time of self-examination and preparation for Christ's coming. He came the first time as a little child; He shall come the second time as our Mighty King.

There has to be some rule for Advent-Sunday, so the whole Church will keep the day together. Now for your hunt:

Take your Prayer-book and look in the fine-print pages at the beginning. You will see that they are numbered in Roman numerals. Find the page marked "xxiv," which has the heading "Tables and Rules for the Movable and Immovable Feasts." Then look down till you find the paragraph beginning "Advent-Sunday is always"—Then look on page xxii, down near the foot of the page, and you will find St. Andrew's Day.

There is another way to find out: Look on page xxvi, and see when Easter was this year. Then look on the next page, find that date, and follow it across the page to the column marked "Advent-Sunday."

Get into the habit of looking up such things with your own Prayer-book. Then, no matter how far away you may be, some time, from Church surroundings and helps, you may, with the aid of your Prayer-book, keep the dear days as they come and worship in spirit with the loved ones at home.

St. Andrew is said to have been the founder of Christianity in Russia, and to have been put to death in Greece. You have all seen the St. Andrew's Brotherhood men, wearing a small button marked with the letter "X." Well, that was the shape of the cross on which St. Andrew was nailed, and there he suffered for two days before he died, preaching and praying in the midst of torment, to the end. The Collect for his day, therefore, was:

"Almighty God, which hast given such grace to Thy Apostle St. Andrew, that he counted the sharp and painful death of the Cross to be an high honor and a great glory; grant us to take and esteem all troubles and adversities which shall come upon us for Thy sake as things profitable for us toward the obtaining of everlasting life; through Jesus Christ our Lord."

As this festival came so near to Advent, it was changed to the one which you will find on page 188.

The Collect for Advent-Sunday was written to go with the Epistle. See page 52.

Who is going to write to the Children's Corner of the magazine this month, and tell what they found in the Prayer-book hunt?

We should be glad to hear from some bright boys or girls.

See also how many Collects there are in the Prayer-book. And if there is something you come across, or think of, that you would like to have explained, write us that, too, and we will try to find an answer. Sometimes children ask us grown-ups very hard questions; but this is to be your own corner, and you may use it as much as you please.

PARISH NOTES.

Contributions are asked for the Christmas fund. Amounts may be sent to the rector or to Sister Catherine Angela.

To spread missionary knowledge; to arouse interest and to secure daily intercessory prayer for missions.

The offering on St. Clement's day amounted to $1,244. This was not the full amount desired but was a generous offering.

The price of the calendar is 50 cents. Copies may be obtained from Mrs. J. Nicholas Mitchell, 1505 Spruce street, Philadelphia.

The present issue of the magazine has been delayed until we might have some news of the mission and the parish festival. The finances of the magazine are sadly in need of replenishing and contributions are earnestly requested for this purpose. May we not have more subscriptions?

The masses on Christmas Day will be as usual, 12.01 (midnight), 6, 7, 8, 9.15, and Solemn Mass at 11 a. m. Any who desire to make their communions at the midnight mass should keep a fast of devotion from 6 p. m. The proper preparation for the Christmas communion is to make a good confession and receive absolution from a priest.

We are happy to acknowledge the receipt of many flowers for the altar during the last three months.

Gifts of flowers or of money for the altar of the Blessed Sacrament are always desired. We are asked to bring before the notice of the members of the parish the "Church Missionary Calendar for 1910." The calendar has been compiled by Mrs. J. Nicholas Mitchell and its objects are threefold.

Again it seems necessary to remind the congregation that it is exceedingly irreverent to make one's communion if one is late at mass. No one should ever come up to the Altar rail to receive if he has not been in church in season to hear the gospel. On the last Sunday of the mission twenty persons entered the church after the offertory and received. As no provision had been made for them it was with difficulty that they were communicated. Not long since a member of the parish came directly from the door to the Altar. Hereafter the sacrament will be refused in such a case, if it is known to the priest. Many persons have also the irreverent habit of leaving the church before the service is over. It is extraordinary how little time many of us are willing to give to Almighty God.

AFTER THE MISSION.

The parish has a tremendous responsibility resting upon it as a result of the mission that has but just finished. For two weeks the missioners have set before our people the supreme claim of Jesus Christ upon their hearts and lives. It was a lesson that was sorely needed in St. Clement's, despite the fact that many seem to realize it very little. The great danger that lies before us is the possibility that we shall refuse to accept it. The many years of struggle for the faith and the long period of persecution through which many passed in times gone by have resulted, quite naturally, perhaps, in a subtle form of spiritual pride, that, if not striven against, will lead us into self-righteousness. A spirit has been manifest among us for some time that seems to consider devotion to St. Clement's Parish as synonymous with devotion to our Blessed Lord. Of course, nothing could be more disastrous than such a mistaken conception. The soul must first give itself to God and value the parish only as it finds there the means of grace, whereby the union with God is made possible. It was with this thought in mind that the plan of a mission was first conceived. It was to be a mission primarily for our own people; for our own conversion, as well as the conversion of others. We believe that the mission has accomplished this result. The note of the mission preaching was "service;" "service to God and to man." The congregations were large during the two weeks, and on the last Sunday night all who came could not be accommodated. Many souls have been reached and first confessions made.

We trust, however, that the fruit of these two weeks may be abundant and lasting, and that a spirit of real humility and entire surrender to God's service may be manifest among us.

As the Advent season brings us near to the Birthday of the Redeemer, let each one examine his heart and soul, asking of himself: "Is it well with thee?"

ST. CLEMENT'S TIDE

In spite of the threatening weather our parish festival this year seems to have been more generally celebrated and its joy more keenly realized than has been the case in many years. The communion was a large one and this is the more encouraging inasmuch as nearly all who came had gone to the corporate communion which closed the mission only the Sunday previous. At 11 o'clock the choir rendered Gounod's Mass of the Sacred Heart with the usual orchestral accompaniment and the choir did more uniformly excellent work than it has for a long time. The Bishop of Delaware was the preacher for the occasion. The parish tea in the evening was largely attended and the spirit of real unity prevailed. It was voted the most successful "tea" that has been held in the parish for a long time.

The procession of the Sodality took place on the Friday night in the octave when Rev. Elliot White, rector of Grace Church, Newark, was the preacher.

CAROLINE JACOBS WETHERILL.

The passing of Caroline Jacobs Wetherill, on the third day of November, brought to every member of St. Clement's a keen sense of personal loss. For many years Mrs. Wetherill had been a most devoted member of the parish and an ardent supporter of the Catholic faith.

Hers was a rich and generous nature that never spared itself in labor for others or in devotion to our Divine Lord. Singularly earnest and devout, she bore rare witness to the power and beauty of the Christian life. To her had been granted a clear vision of things unseen. Angels and Saints were to her the friends and companions of every day, and it would seem strangely fitting that she fell asleep during that great feast which held for her a special joy.

Give rest, O Christ, to Thy servant with Thy Saints, where sorrow and pain are no more; neither sighing, but life everlasting. Amen.

SOME MESSENGERS AND WHERE THEY WENT.

IV.

The seventh century, at length, after the conversion of the greater part of northern Europe by British missionaries, saw the Christianizing of the home-land. The missionaries had converted the north and west portions of the British Isles, and then—it does at first seem strange—passed over to the Continent, leaving all the central and southeastern parts of Britain in the hands of heathen. But they were brave even to travel through that section ruled by the "Heptarchy"—the Anglo-Saxon rule of seven kingdoms. As the work of St. Augustine for England is all that many people think of, in connection with this subject, and the British missionaries are seldom given sufficient credit for their part in it, let us, in this chapter, take up these Saxon kingdoms, and see how they were gradually reached by the Italian and British missions.

(a) Kent.—When the Romans ceased to occupy Britain, the country was straightway overrun by barbarous northerners. The Britons, in despair, receiving no help from the Romans, invited the Jutland warriors to come and drive out the northerners. In 449, accordingly, the Jutes landed south of the Thames, and were given the southeast country, extending from the mouth of the Thames to the Isle of Wight. It was like the story of the camel's nose; the door having been thus opened, the Jutes proceeded to make themselves masters of the land. In the next century, Ethelbert, their king, married a princess, daughter of the king of Paris. But one condition—the principal one—was that she should be permitted to continue in the Christian religion, to which she was devoted. She brought with her her own clergy, and the little church of St. Martin's, dating from the time of the Roman occupation, was rescued from heathen desecration. This church still stands, and the walls of the nave are the very same walls.

Meantime, Rome itself was having trouble. The government had been transferred to Constantinople, and the city was left a prey, ravaged by savage hordes of barbarians. The Bishop of Rome had to be a man of firmness and courage. Gregory the Great possessed the necessary qualities to a remarkable degree. When affairs were well in hand, he turned his attention to the needs of Britain.

Some years before, while still in a subordinate position, he had observed with interest the beautiful fair-haired boys, English slaves, for sale in the markets. These were from the part of Britain most sunk in heathenism, and the thought of converting that region became very dear to Gregory. Accordingly, after his consecration, he ordered many English slaves to be bought, and brought up in monasteries, that they might be set free later to work in their native land.

Gregory had established at Rome a Benedictine monastery, and was deeply attached to its prior, Augustine. Him he appointed, with forty monks, to go to Britain, and assisted him on his way by letters to the bishops through whose dioceses he had to pass; no expense was spared as to outfit; numerous interpreters were provided. Further, he made the company an independent brotherhood, with Augustine as their head. On their arrival in Kent, they were received with courtesy by King Ethelbert and with sincere joy by Queen Bertha. And this Augustine mission is often written up, with minute descriptions of the "procession" at the head of which the clergy met the king; of the ruined British churches restored and re-dedicated by the king's permission; of the ten thousand persons baptized on Christmas Day in the fords of the Swale; of the pall (or palladium) sent by Gregory. This was a white collar, or rather a deep circular band fitting the shoulders, having pendants before and behind. It was made from the wool of lambs blessed on St. Agnes' Day, and embroidered with purple crosses. This was the insignia of rank as the "Metropolitan of the Angels."

But the Kingdom of God cometh not with observation. It grows by the fervent devotion and courage of its messengers, and their appeal to the hearts of their hearers. As a matter of fact, the actual achievements of St. Augustine were confined to the region in which he first landed.

St. Augustine was an extremely pious man, showing to great advantage in a well-organized community, where he could, without opposition, arrange matters of discipline, but hardly religious in the best sense of the word. He had to be ordered by Gregory to finish his journey to Britain. While in France he was terrified by the accounts he heard of the rough people to whom he was going, and went all the way back to Rome to beg permission to give up the expedition. Notwithstanding, when he met in a conference with the British missionaries who had so faithfully labored for centuries in the north and west, he derided them for their "cowardice" in not attempting to minister to the Saxons. Christianity being the royal religion in Kent, it was easy enough to make converts there, but the Augustinian mission did little else; and, a quarter of a century later, almost decided to abandon the work when a heathen king came to the throne.

In conjunction with the British missionaries, the Italians could very likely have done a wonderful work among the Saxons. The British clergy were practical, clear-sighted men, knowing the locality and its needs. The workers under Augustine were well disciplined, well equipped, and had the support of the Church in Rome and Gaul. But they were narrow minded, arrogant, discourteous. St. Augustine claimed jurisdiction even over the Welsh Bishops. Meeting them at a conference, especially arranged at his request, to which they sent their most venerable clergy, he remained seated when they advanced to greet him, as if their superior. What they finally, after many efforts at friendship, realized, was that they were to be tolerated by the Italian mission and allowed to go on with their labors if they would obey as inferiors, and give up their ancient observances and customs. The Roman Bishop was to be their lord, Roman uses must be followed. Now, the British Church had its own well-established customs, and a perfect right to use them. There were at that time four "Uses" in the Church. The British Christians, driven by the Anglo-Saxons into the fastnesses of the Welsh mountains, still retained the Gallican Use. They had divided what land remained to them into ecclesiastical districts; each had its bishop, cathedral, and seminary. The Bishop of Caerleon-on-Usk was the principal overseer, and so the delegates told St. Augustine. The British monks shaved their heads so that the tonsure, or circle of hair, was in the form of a crescent, while the Benedictines and other Italians wore theirs in a circle. "What did that matter?" you may ask. It should not have mattered, had the love of Christ constrained the newcomers; but British monks sent to Canterbury, later, were treated with the greatest rudeness and ridiculed for this thing.

But the hottest discussion was that concerning Easter. The British Church held to the rule laid down by the Council of Arles, A. D. 314, which appointed the fourteenth day of the Paschal moon, no matter what day of the week, to be kept as if it were Sunday.

The question of Baptism also came up. Immersion was the rule, then, and the Romans dipped the candidates first on the right side, then on the left side, then face downward. The Britons (perhaps the coldness of their mountain streams compelled it), dipped their candidates once only, in the Name of the Holy Trinity. With mutual dislike and distrust, the delegations parted, and the fact that the Christian religion in Britain survived the constant friction which ensued, is a proof of Divine Patience with the unruly affections of sinful men.

(b) East Anglia.—So it came about that any work done from Canterbury had to be supported continually from the Continent. But the problem was worked out very successfully along the right lines in East Anglia. This was the part now covered by the East Anglian Hills, in eastern England, north of the Thames. King Sigberct, while a political exile in Gaul, had embraced the Christian religion. Wishing to bring this blessing to his subjects, he made a home for a Burgundian bishop, called Felix—still revered in Norfolk and Suffolk as "the Apostle of East Anglia." He achieved his success by taking as his assistant a British monk named Fursey, of a noble Scotch family, who brought a band of Irish monks with him. These won the hearts of the Anglians completely, and Christianity took a firmer hold than it had yet among the Anglo-Saxons. The monks of Canterbury resented this deeply, and protested against it. But the work went on till in 647 a native clergyman named Thomas was consecrated to succeed Felix. From this time the Church in East Anglia, having reached the point where it could supply its own bishops, was independent of Continental help.

(c) Wessex.—Birinus, a monk of Gaul, heard with joy of the success of Felix, and begged permission to go to some other Saxon people. He was consecrated as a missionary bishop, giving a promise that he would never intrude on any work already managed by Canterbury.

He landed on the south coast, west of the Isle of Wight, in 634. He had, perhaps, the hardest task of any Continental missionary so far, for he had to overcome the unwillingness of the home authorities to do anything that might reflect on Augustine's work; he had the ill will of the Augustinian clergy, his nearest neighbors on the east; he had the prejudice of the British clergy against foreign workers; and with all these, the work which he had chosen, the conversion of the heathen. But he persevered, and in later years the land he had converted became the greatest stronghold of Christianity.

(d) Northumbria.—But, after all, the greater part of the Heptarchy was converted by British clergy. The foreigners had done their part; they had gained the favor of kings, and overcome the fiercest hostility of the heathen. But they only made a way for others. Their missions occupied only the extreme southeastern part of Britain, extending from Wells to Torquay, with a bad break from the Stour to the Thames, where the East Saxon kingdom came down to the sea. Mellitus of Rome did work there in 606, but his converts apostated in 633. The work done thereafter was part of a great work which began in the northern parts in 626.

When Ethelbert died, Kent rapidly declined in strength, and the leadership of the Heptarchy fell to Edwin, King of Northumbria (the eastern part, from the Humber to the Forth). Edwin obtained Ethelbert's daughter for his queen, on condition that she be permitted, as was her mother, to take with her her own clergy, and follow the Christian faith. This was readily granted, because the king was rather indifferent to the matter, anyhow, and didn't care what his religion was, so long as his family affairs were satisfactory. The queen took Paulinus with them, who held long conferences with the Witan, or Counsel, as to the merits of Christianity. Some very pretty and romantic stories are told as to this conference; but the fact is, they all decided to become Christians, because, as one of the wise men said, "our old religion is rather useless; this new one can not be worse, and it may be better." Rather a queer way to adopt the Faith of Christ Crucified, but it worked pretty well so long as things were comfortable. But the heathen had a stronghold in the Midlands, in the kingdom of Mercia, governed by a fierce king named Penda. He was noble in his heathenism; he saw the ancient religions dying out, the old customs forgotten, the fierce, frank ways which he loved done away with. So he descended in might upon the kingdom of Northumbria, killed King Edwin, and frightened his subjects back into paganism. It was a strange campaign. The warcries were the holy names of the rival religions. Paulinus fled, carrying the gold chalice and altar furniture, and escorting the queen and her children to Kent—and staying there. One wonders if his mind ever reverted to the time when the Roman missionaries jeered at the British clergy for not making wholesale conversion of the Saxons! The kingdom of Northumbria was now divided, the little son of King Edwin being kept at Kent by Paulinus.

The divided kingdom was ruled by two young men, who tried to ingratiate themselves with Penda by renouncing the Christian faith. But Penda was not satisfied; he wanted the entire dominion himself, so he again made war upon them, and both were killed. One of these kings, Eanfred, should have held on to his faith, for with two younger brothers, he had been carefully reared in the holy community of Iona. On his death, his brother Oswald raised a small army, pitifully small in the face of such enemies, and putting his whole trust in God, recovered Northumbria. Now he wanted Christianity restored, and to this end looked for a bishop. Paulinus was out of the question. He had become so entangled with politics, and showed so little courage in times of danger that Oswald did not consider him at all. What more natural than to send back to his childhood advisers, and ask for a bishop from Iona?

Aidan was finally consecrated, but he would not live at the cathedral city of York. Canonically, that still belonged to Paulinus. The most sensible plan seemed to be to found an entirely new community, and this Aidan did, with monks from Iona. Oswald gave them Lindisfarne, now called Holy Island, up near the Scotch border, and there began and grew up a work which influenced the whole Heptarchy.

(e) Mercia.—Oswald, the brave soldier of Jesus Christ, finally gave up his life in a last struggle with the heathen, and Northumbria was again divided. Oswald's youngest brother reigned in the northern part — Oswy — and Paulinus' ward, Oswine, son of Edwin, in the southern part. But Oswy was jealous and distrustful of Oswine, and had him killed by treachery. His repentance was bitter, when he afterward realized the enormity of his crime, and he devoted himself to helping the Church in every way.

Penda had a son who later embraced the Christian faith. This was a sore trial to the fierce old warrior, though he said his objection to Christianity consisted chiefly in the cowardice and time-serving of those who professed it. When the old man died, his son and Oswy came to an agreement, their families intermarried, and bishops from Iona and Lindisfarne converted the Mercians.

(f) Essex.—The kingdom of the East Saxons, to which we have alluded above, now asked for Christian teachers. The works of Aidan and his followers in the north were greatly admired, and men like them were earnestly asked for by the king of the East Saxons. But the Lindisfarne monastery was overworked. There were volunteers enough, and they were well qualified, but it takes time to train a missionary, and the accommodations of the community were heavily taxed by those who came there to study. The wise plan, therefore, was adopted of recalling one who had already had experience in the field. Cedd was transferred from his work in Mercia to the East Saxons.

(g) Sussex.—The South Saxons remained untouched by the wave of Christian influence. Separated from their nearest neighbors by dense forests, and being a rough people with little interest in the ways of civilization, they were not converted till the end of the seventh century. Finally, in 681, Wilfred, of Lindisfarne, worked among them with considerable success, and the cathedral at Chichester is his monument.

I fear, dear readers, this chapter has been rather dry. But there is so little known of the real history of our Church in early times in Britain, that it seemed best to make this effort to give a short and simple account of it. All the way through, the deepest veneration attaches to those Christian heroes who, for the love of Christ, taught the truth as it is in Jesus with meekness and long-suffering. Courage, patiencee, trust in God rather than man, and the humble waiting for God's time—these planted the Word in the British Isles, where it has ever since been held in a sort of sturdy reliance of the individual man on his Maker, with Saxon honesty and Celtic spirituality.

Oh dear, dear Church! our heart, our lot,
  On earth, in Heaven, is linked with thine;
Oh keep thy vesture pure from spot,
  And let thy bridal jewels shine!
While thine own Priest presents thy prayer
  And thou unroll'st His promise free,
For thee to toil is all we dare,
  And all we hope, to rest in thee.

The Children's Corner

Dear Children:

This month we have a great many Collects, because so many Saints' Days cluster around Our Lord's Birthday. But, before the Birthday, comes the solemn season of Advent. The Collects for this season were, for the most part, written in 1549.

Suppose I stop here, and tell you something about what occurred in 1549, for that was a very important and wonderful time—the translation into English of the Services of the Church, so that every one who went to church could understand and take part in them.

Of course you know that the most important Service of all is the Mass, or Holy Communion. From earliest times the Church cared so much for this, which Christ Himself instituted, that it was carefully kept in books, although books were scarce in the days when there was no printing press. Holy men spent a great deal of time making copies of the Service, so that it should never be lost or forgotten. But, as the Church spread to different countries, and different languages, little changes crept in. The Canon of the Mass—that is, the solemn part where Our Lord's own words are used—remained the same in all, but the parts before and after were added to here and there. The book of the Mass was generally called "The Liturgy," and of course the most important bishop in any part of the world would arrange the Liturgy as he best could, and all the churches in touch with him would use that. Our own St. Clement arranged one. As time went on, other service books, for use in other services, were written out and used. When there came to be a great many of them, it grew very confusing, and the clergy had hard work to keep the services in their minds. Another trouble was, that everything was in Latin, for that was the language used when the books were first written, and the Church had never changed them.

The Church of England decided to have everything in English, in the time of King Edward VI, and appointed a Committee to look over all the old service books, select what seemed the most approved and most ancient things, and write in whatever was necessary to make a Book of Common Prayer; that is, that all people could use in common.

There were certain books, written in Latin, which the clergy at that time had to use: the Missal, Breviary, Manual, and Pontifical. Besides these, there was a book called the Primer, which was in English and Latin both, and contained many prayers for personal use. So you see, it was very hard to say your prayers in those days, so many books, so different, printed in Latin.

It was a hard task, wasn't it, to get together the most necessary parts of these, translate them into English, and make up such a volume as our Prayer-book?

For your Prayer-book hunt, this month, let us consider the Collects. A Collect, you know, is a short prayer meant to be said by the Priest for the people—he collects their needs in one prayer. There are many Collects scattered through the general services, but you take your Prayer-book, begin at page 52, and hunt through to page 220. See how many there are. I will tell you that there are fifty-nine which were taken from the old service books, and of those many date clear back to the fourth century. That being the case, how many did the Reformers have to write?

If you have a Prayer-book of your own—you ought to have—ask your father or mother to let you write the date of each Collect in the margin, as you get it; little notes like that, carefully made, make a treasury of your Prayer-book, which you will value always.

Here are the dates for this month's Collects:—

December 5. Second Sunday in Advent, 1549.

December 12. Third Sunday in Advent, 1662.

December 19. Fourth Sunday in Advent, 492.

December 21. St. Thomas, 1549.

December 25. Christmas Day, 1549.

December 26. St. Stephen's, 1661.

December 27. St. John the Evangelist, 590.

December 28. Holy Innocents, 492.

Long, long ago—at least twelve hundred years ago—Advent, the time of preparation for the Coming of Our Lord, began November 11. This is an old holyday named after St. Martin, and St. Martin's Mass, or Martinmas, was the end of the Christian year. People used to count from that day, and even now, in some parts of England, you'll hear some one say, "That was a year ago last Martinmas," or something like that. You see that made Advent six weeks long.

The Collects for Advent are very beautiful, in the way they speak of Christ's Coming. The Collect for the First Sunday reminds us that He is coming to be our Judge; the Second, that He comes to us in His Holy Word; the Third, that He comes to us through the ministry of His Ministers, in the Sacraments; the Fourth, that He comes to each one of us, daily, as we need Him, in the power of the Holy Spirit, to help and comfort us at all times. Please try to realize what that means—"at all times." Every time you are afraid, or tired, or have something to do that you don't understand very well; every time your feelings are hurt; think that God Himself knows just how you feel, because He came to earth on purpose to find out what it meant to be a Human Child and to suffer as Man. People often speak of Jesus, as if His sufferings for us began when He was crucified. No, indeed; He learned, by experience, everything that any child has to bear. When you read your Bible, remember that He had the Old Testament part of it, and knew it well, especially the Psalms. He knew those so well, that when He suffered, His pitiful cry was a verse from the Psalms.

When your mother calls you, and tells you to do this and that, think how sweetly Jesus waited on His mother, and cared for her, always. Remembering that, try every day to do something especially for your mother, that you know she wants; watch for a chance to do it, and please her, and so unite yourself with Jesus and His blessed Mother.

When you start for school, think of the little, rough, uncomfortable school where Jesus went: no songs, or pictures, or comfortable writing desks; just to sit on the hard floor, and study the lesson, whether He could understand it or not.

If you have to get a working certificate and help your father support the family, as many other children do, think of the long hours Jesus spent in the carpenter's shop with St. Joseph.

He did all this, as a Child, so that He might understand you, and help you. Can't you remember, then, when things get too hard, to ask Jesus for help, first, before you do anything about it? Just make a silent prayer, quickly, as to a near Friend "Dear Lord, help me to get this lesson"—"Saviour, I am afraid, help me;" "Lord, make me patient," and so on. It is a sweet and cheering habit to form, and you will find it takes away that feeling of terror, or helps you not to mind doing things that are tiresome.

Begin right away now, and see if you don't feel such a difference, that, when His Birthday comes, you will say with all your heart, "Thanks be to God for His unspeakable Gift."

AMONG THE UTES.

The following letter from Miss Helen A. Weston, of White Rocks, Utah, gives a graphic picture of the customs among one of the most neglected Indian tribes, and comes in time to illustrate the forceful work of Bishop Spalding, during his visit to the coast, as to the responsibility of the Church towards these people:

Although we live in a little agency at White Rocks, in the northwestern part of Utah, eighty-six miles from the railroad, we are not without some striking adventures. I should like to tell you of one of these, as it happaned to be one in which I had a part.

In the early part of July the Ute Indians have what they call a "Sun Dance." It is the only thing they have which comes any where near worship of any kind. In this they worship the sun, and ask it to remove any illnesses they may have. With the young braves it is somewhat of a test of endurance. From the beginning to the end the whole affair is very solemn. Early in the morning of the first day the poles are carried at the end of a long procession of gaily dressed squaws and braves, and raised into place with chanting and droning. Before they are raised, and the enclosure of green boughs and bushes built, a sham battle is fought with visiting braves, after which the two head chiefs of the opposing sides shake hands and say it was only in fun. Then a little play is acted. One Indian is dressed as a buffalo and others as cowboys. The supposed buffalo antics and paws the ground; the cowboys lasso him, and one draws a pistol and pretends to shoot him, and he is dragged out of sight in a second. We should rightly call this in English, "The Passing of the Buffalo."

Then the whole army gets into line and goes on to raise the Sun Dance enclosure. This is not a tent, as the whole of the top is open to the sky. In one corner is the big drum, around which are seated the wives, mothers or sisters of the young men who take part in the dance. When the young men once enter, they do not leave the enclosure for three days and nights. During this time they go without food. The dancing is continuous, the dancers relieving each other by turns. They are naked, except for a loin cloth, and are painted a brimstone color, which makes the scene at night, when it is lit up with a bonfire, look like the abode of his Satanic majesty. The Indians for miles around come and camp on the grounds, and sometimes stay a week or two. As they only have tents it does not take long to move from place to place. White people pay 25 cents to enter the enclosure and watch the dance.

It was on the third evening that a friend and myself rode into the grounds to see the dance. A man drove up and said that at a little distance from the dance enclosure a baby had been born, and the mother had died at sundown. Would I go and get the baby, as the Indians intended to bury it with the mother the next morning? I went off in the direction pointed to, over sage brush and rocks, but soon came back and asked an Indian woman to mount my friend's pony and show me the way. She went with me, and we found a tent made of rushes and dead trees. It was very dark and we had no light, but we found a pile of quilts on the ground of the tent, and after taking off a few of these, we came to a bundle of rags, with the tiny bit of humanity inside the bundle. I mounted my pony, carrying the baby in my arms, and we went back to this Indian woman's tent. She agreed to keep the baby until the next morning, when my friend and myself went for him. He is being lovingly cared for by Miss Canfield, one of our missionaries here, and she would now find it hard to part with the dear little fellow, who has won his way to her motherly heart. When he was ten days old the child was taken to the church and baptized Weston Yanawardes, the last being his mother's name

The burial of a living infant with its dead mother has happened often, nor is this the first time that we have been able to avert the tragedy. We thought, however, that the custom had died out, but the light is not shining yet for these heathen people The Mission here is soon to be opened as a hospital, but what to do with this waif, whose father is crazy, and with other motherless children, is a question. We need a home for orphan children and we need it badly. And as these few lines go on their way, we hope they will fall into the hands of some who will help us to build a shelter for these children belonging to the most neglected tribe among us today. We have here several missionaries, all of them estimable, hard-working women, who are trying to show the heathen a better way. Who will help them over some of the rough places in their work?

Our work is difficult, and we need infinite patience to cope with the heathen mind, but, at the same time, there is much that is lovable and good in each child we have. So let us give them a chance to stand on equal ground with the white man. This can hardly be brought about without careful moral and religious training. We must overcome their mistrust and superstition by sound instruction about the Christ and His Blessed Gospel of Redemption for all.—From the Pacific Churchman.

THE EPIPHANY.

The manifestation of our Lord to the Gentiles on His Epiphany should be to us a constant reminder of our responsibility as His disciples. If we are to be "as our Master" then must there be a "showing forth" of Christ in our own lives. We are to be "manifestations" of Jesus Christ in the world; the means whereby His gospel and His grace are carried to all mankind. But in order that any attempt to spread Christ's kingdom may be blessed there must be entire consecration of life on the part of those who would carry the message. We must earn our right to a share in His work by endeavoring ourselves to do His will. It is worse than useless for a person to give generously for missions, for instance, who is not himself striving after the life of perfection. So soon as this is realized among ourselves there will be little need to "stir up" enthusiasm for missions. The fire will have been already kindled. Any man or woman who is thoroughly imbued with the desire to serve Jesus Christ and who knows the meaning of the Christian faith will not only be ready but eager to give both life and means to the advancement of His glory. The secret of the wonderful spread of the faith in early days lay in the burning zeal of the disciples. Until such a zeal can be awakened in the hearts of people today we cannot hope for the "conversion of the Gentiles." The responsibility is put upon each one of us to "stir up the gift" which is within our souls that so we may speak to others of Jesus Christ with some semblance of sincerity and truth. Until this shall have been accomplished our solemn platitudes are a mockery. We cannot have wide influence in spreading a faith to which we give only a conventional and half-hearted consent.

Let us endeavor during the Epiphany season to discover how much we are willing to do and to sacrifice for Jesus Christ and the spread of His Kingdom. And let us be quite sure that if our desire is weak and our interest luke-warm there is something radically wrong with our souls and something quite mistaken in our conception of the Catholic faith. The Feast o the Epiphany will hold little meaning for us if we "do not believe in Missions."

PARISH NOTES.

A Bible class for women meets in the parish hall every Wednesday afternoon at 4 o'clock. Any who may be interested will be made welcome.

The annual dinner of St. Vincent's Guild will be held in the clergy house on Wednesday evening, January 19. The Guild of the Holy Child will have its Christmas party on the Feast of the Circumcision.

A very beautiful set of rose-colored vestments, including dalmatic and tunicle, has been presented to the parish. According to ancient custom, they are to be used on the third Sunday in Advent and on Mid-Lent "Refreshment" Sunday.

The acolytes have been provided with new black cassocks, which were sorely needed. There are at present twenty-two members in the Guild, and a few more will probably be admitted within a few weeks.

Mrs. Wetmore, of Christ School, Arden, N. C., will speak in the parish hall on Friday afternoon, January 21, at 4 o'clock. All the women of the parish are urged to be present and to bring any of their friends who may be interested.

The Confraternity of the Blessed Sacrament will have a Solemn Requiem for departed members in St. Clement's on January 19 at 11 a. m. It is expected that Fr. Armstrong, of Palmyra, will preach. This requiem is according to the custom of the Confraternity, celebrated annually. Last year the service was held in St. Elizabeth's, Philadelphia.

The Annual Parish Retreat will be held this year on Shrove Tuesday, February 8. A light luncheon for those who may desire it will be served in the parish hall at 1 o'clock. It is believed that the change will prove most satisfactory. It will be a fitting preparation for entering upon the lenten season and for the Ash Wednesday communion, and will be much easier for those who have heretofore found it difficult to make a helpful retreat on a fast day.

On Sunday morning, January 9, Bishop Griswold, of the diocese of Salina, will preach at the solemn mass. The offerings on that day will be devoted to the Mission field. Offerings may be designated for the work of Bishop Griswold, Bishop Weller and Bishop White, of Michigan City. Also for St. Paul's College, Tokio, for the the general mission field, or for the Northern Convocation of Philadelphia. We hope very much that the missionary offering may be a generous one, and that every person in the parish may give something to the furtherance of the missionary work of the Church.

The first meeting of St. Clement's Branch of the Woman's Auxiliary was held in the parish hall on Wednesday, December 1. Mrs. George H. Lea was elected president and Miss Laura H. Hutchinson secretary and treasurer. It was voted to send contributions to Bishop Weller, Bishop White and Bishop Johnson. Also to provide for St. Clement's day in the leper hospital in Japan; to contribute to the salary of a nurse in S. Luke's Hospital, Shanghai, and to aid in the work of St. Andrew's School and St. Mary's School, Sewanee, Tenn. Any in the parish who may desire to contribute to any or all of these objects are asked to send their offerings to Miss Hutchinson, 2413 Spruce street.

SOME MESSENGERS AND WHERE THEY WENT.

V.

For seven centuries, as we have seen in previous chapters, missionaries labored in the north and west of Europe—the missionaries of the Western Church. But there remained a great region, stretching eastward from the Elbe, untouched by the light of Christianity for nearly 900 years.

It bears an old, old name now; for the original of "chief prince," in Ezekiel xxxviii: 3, and xxxix: 1, is "Rosh" or "Russ," the only name of a modern nation found in the Old Testament. The original settlers of Russia were simple nomadic tribes, wandering from river to river, settling contentedly in the lands not occupied by the Germans. But these, as well as the Turks on the south and the Mongols on the east, harried and oppressed the Slavs, till they became famous for their duplicity and cunning in weakness, and their cruelty when strong.

Ancient tradition has it that St. Andrew visited the south coast of Russia, and pointing to the highland of Kieff said: "On these hills the Cross shall be planted." Hence he is the patron saint of Russia.

But as a matter of fact, it was not until the end of the ninth century that the Slavs began to embrace Christianity. At that time the Prince of Bulgaria, who had conquered and ruled the Slavs in the southeast, had a sister who was taken captive to Constantinople. He had among his captives at home a monk named Cupharis, and managed to exchange prisoners and recovered his sister. During her stay in Constantinople she had become a Christian, and as Cupharis had worked with some effect among the Bulgarians she found many to listen to her when she returned, eager to give the blessings of religion to her brother's people. He himself, however, did not take much interest in the matter. Idol worship among the Russians was conducted with a great deal of ceremony. Their chief idol was Swantevit. He stood in the inner shrine of a temple, beautifully built, attended with much mystery by priests. The idol was of gigantic size, with four heads, one looking to each point of the compass. He was attired in flowing robes reaching to the ground, holding in one hand a cup made of many metals, which the priest on certain festivals filled with mead. A special tax was levied for the maintenance of this temple, and a guard of three cavalry was specially detailed on duty all the time to protect it from profanation. It was believed that in times of war the god himself rode forth on a white horse, which was so sacred that none but a priest might mount it, and to pull a hair from its mane or tail brought death. When war was to be declared three rows of spears were brought out and laid in front of the horse, who was then led forth amid solemn prayers. If the horse, in stepping over the spears, lifted its right foot first the war was declared acceptable to the god; if the left foot, no one would dare to proceed. This particular idol was not destroyed till the twelfth century.

But at last a great famine devastated the land, and Bogoris was induced, in desperation, to say that if the Christians' God would help him he would become a Christian. Prayers were offered, led by the princess, and, the famine being over, Bogoris had to make good his promise. Now he was overwhelmed by zealous missionaries, Greek, Roman and Armenian, who confused him with the claims of their rival churches. It was so evident that what they really aimed at was temporal power for their respective bodies, that the prince was uneasy and unsettled. But he was kept from relapsing into heathenism by the labors of a monk who had been asked to decorate his great hall with hunting scenes. Instead of these the wise monk used the chance for an object lesson. He painted vivid scenes, supposed to represent the punishment of the wicked in the last judgment. Here was something the prince could understand, and he really at last felt the need of casting away the works of darkness. So, as a matter of fact, the great conversion of the Slav people dates from the painting of a picture. This may account for the deep reverence shown by them to this day for sacred pictures. The struggle, harder there than in any other field of missionary endeavor, to do away with idols, led the Slav Christians to forbid the use of any image. Flat pictures, such as converted Bogoris, were substituted, and are to this day the objects of deep veneration. That is so to this day:

"Every where, in public and in private, the sacred picture is the consecrating element. In the corner of every room, at the corner of every street, over gateways, in offices, in steamers, in stations, in taverns, is the picture hung, with the lamp burning before it. In domestic life it plays the part of the family Bible, of the wedding gift, of the birthday present, of the ancestral portrait. It has gone forth to meet the Tartars, or the Poles, or the French. . . . A taste, a passion for pictures, not as works of art, but as emblems, as lessons, as instructions, is thus engendered and multiplied, and in common life beyond all example elsewhere. . . . Of a whole army there is not a single man but carries in his knapsack a gaudy picture within a simple cover with which he never parts. . . . Or enter within a church. . . . From top to bottom, from side to side, walls and roof and screen and columns are a mass of gilded pictures. . . . And when we remember that some of these pictures have, beside their interest as the emblems of truth to a child-like and barbarous people, acquired the historical associations involved in the part they have taken in great national events, it is not surprising that the combination of religious and patriotic feelings in Russia should have raised their veneration to a pitch by us almost inconceivable."—Stanley, History of the Eastern Church.

Finally, Bogoris appealed to Germany and to the pope to settle the question of religious form, and Christianity was gradually established. It spread northward, through Moravia, which then covered the territory now occupied by Austria-Hungary.

But the king of Moravia wasn't satisfied. His people looked on with great respect at a mysterious ceremony, conducted entirely in Latin, by priests who spoke that strange language of the new God among themselves, and were entirely out of the ken of every day folks. So the people bowed, knelt, did as told—when they could understand it—and then went back for the other six days in the week to their familiar old family gods. Very much as some of us do, except that they didn't know any better. Of course, the Catholic religion is a beautiful and proper thing on Sundays, but among our neighbors it would be awfully in the way, and our daily life would have to be entirely rearranged and people wouldn't like us. That's the way the Slavs felt; they didn't allow their religion to "annoy" any one else, nor unset their arrangements.

But Rotislav, the Moravian ruler, was discontented. He sent to the Greek Emperor Michael and stated his difficulty. "Our land is baptized, but we have no teachers to instruct us, or translate for us the sacred books. We do not understand them. Send us teachers who may explain the Scriptures."

Two brothers, philosophers, who understood the Sclaovnic tongue, were finally induced to go to Moravia. They had to arrange an alphabet especially, as about forty characters were needed to express the sounds of the Slav language. They used the Greek as a foundation, adding characters from the Armenian and Hebrew and inventing some. Then they translated the Gospels and Acts of the Apostles, and the Psalms. This was looked upon with great disfavor by the German clergy, who regarded this as little short of heresy, this using the every day tongue in public worship. But for nearly five years Cyril and Methodius worked unmolested, and their labors were blessed and had permanent effect. Twice they were summoned to Rome to answer for the liberty they were taking, and silenced objections by quoting the Psalm, "Praise the Lord, all ye nations." How could all nations praise Him, they asked, if not in their own tongue?

But Germany could not forgive them. Rotislav was treacherously captured, blinded and dethroned, and Methodius obliged to retire for a time.

While these things were going on in the south, the north was being prepared for the Word. The Slavs of that region, fearing their powerful neighbors, begged Ruric, a Norman prince, to come and rule over them and protect them. This he did, and one of his descendants Christianized the country without the agency of missionaries. Russia stands along among European nations in this respect. The apostle of Russia is Vladimir, honored under the title of Isapostolos—"equal to an apostle."

This prince was converted through the efforts of his grandmother, Olga, who was converted while on a visit to Constantinople. She would have liked to convert his father. But that rough warrior preferred the gods of his ancestors.

In Vladimir's reign, Olga's interest in Christianity attracted notice, and many missionaries went to see what they could do with the prince. The influence of so powerful a chief was felt to be a desirable thing, and efforts on his behalf were not confined to Christians. Mahommedans went, and Jews. To the latter he said, "Where is your city?" When they admitted that their city had been taken from them by the wrath of God for their sins, he said: "Do I want anything of a people whose God has forsaken them?" Teachers came from Germany, but they mixed their teachings with denunciations of the other Christians, and Vladimir naturally remarked that as a heathen he could find plenty of quarreling to do.

At last a Greek missionary came, and again used the objective method of picture teaching, so successful with the Bulgarians. This roused Vladimir's attention and made him uneasy. But he was unsettled and dissatisfied, and finally sent his own messengers to visit all these different religions in their own homes. They returned, disgusted with the Jews and Mohammedans; the worship of the western churches was at that time very plain, and impressed them little. But they were carried away with the beauty and magnificence of the Church of St. Sophia, at Constantinople. It was the most beautiful church edifice in the world then, and held services of great impressiveness and beauty. The Russian visitors were dazzled and ready to believe anything, and the Greeks did not miss the opportunity.

What follows is amusing, but it really happened. When the acolytes entered the sanctuary with lighted candles the Russians thought they were angels. Although we know better, we can realize what a share the acolytes have in the beauty and dignity of our own glorious services, and how the strangers in the congregation sometimes learn by that spectacle the layman's part in the worship of Almighty God.

The conversion of the Russians was spectacular, and made a great impression at the time. The idol Peroun, for whose sake in other days Vladimir had put a Christian to death, was dragged forth at a horse's tail, beaten and thrown into the river. The people followed it in great trepidation for awhile; then, seeing the skies did not fall and that their ruler was displeased, turned back and were baptized by the thousands, wholesale.

The establishment of Christianity by royal edict as the State religion, from the first, instead of its slow growth in the minds and hearts of the people, has made religion to this day a very different matter from what it has come to be among the people of other countries. Still, there the Lord knows them that fear Him; in His own good time may He grant the prayer of Vladimir:

"Oh, Great God, who hast made heaven and earth, look down upon Thy people; grant unto them, Oh Lord, to know Thee, the true God, as Thou hast been made known to other Christian lands; and confirm in them a true and unfailing faith."

Resolutions adopted at a missionary conference of clergymen and laymen held in St. Mark's Church, Philadelphia, December 13, 1909:

On Monday evening, December 13, a missionary conference of the clergy of the diocese and the lay representatives, appointed by the rectors of the various parishes, was held in St. Mark's Church.

Notwithstanding the unusually severe storm which prevailed, about 250 men were present and the opinion was expressed by many that the meeting marked an epoch in the missionary history of the diocese.

Dr. Mortimer conducted a short devotional service and made an earnest and helpful address.

A letter was read from Bishop Whitaker regretting his inability to be present and encouraging the meeting with his sanction and commendation.

Addresses were made by Sheldon Potter, Edward H. Bonsall and George Wharton Pepper, after which the enclosed resolutions were unanimously adopted, and upon motion of one of the clergy were ordered to be sent to each rector in the diocese:

Resolved, (1) That it is the sense of this meeting that in each parish a permanent organization should be effected among men to disseminate information and arouse interest respecting the missionary work of the church.

(2) That those present at this meeting are requested to confer forthwith with the rectors of their respective parishes with a view to the formation of such organizations.

(3) That the bishop of the diocese be requested to appoint a committee of twelve, of whom six shall be clergymen and six laymen, to act in this diocese as an auxiliary to the General Board of Missions. This committee, when appointed, shall organize by electing officers and adopting rules for the transaction of its business. It shall be the duty of this committee to keep in touch with the several parochial organizations, stimulating their interest and requesting from time to time reports of their work. A meeting of representatives from each parochial organization shall be called by the committee of twelve within one year from this date, and preferably at the time of the diocesan convention, at which time the term of that committee shall expire and such permanent organization of a central committee or of a missionary society shall then be effected as experience gained in the interval shall suggest.

(4) That, while recognizing the different conditions that obtain in different parishes, this meeting deems it desirable for each parochial organization to consider the following suggestions respecting aims and methods of work:

1. The introduction of a system of weekly offerings for missions by which each individual shall be encouraged to set aside a weekly sum for this purpose, to the end that the giving of the parochial quota of the apportionment may be insured.

2. The formation of a mission study class within the parish or composed of members from neighboring parishes.

3. The presentation to the men of the parish of appeals for service in the mission field, to the end that the parochial offerings may be of men as well as of money.

4. The working out of a plan of cooperation with the parochial chapter of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew in order to reach and influence every man in the parish.

The Children's Corner

Dear Children: If I were to give you the dates for the Collects used by the Church this month, they would all be the same—590. Some of them are older than that, but that was the time when Gregory the Great became Bishop of Rome. He took the old service books then in use, arranged them more plainly, and wrote many of the Collects himself. He was a very wonderful man. At the time he was consecrated he didn't want to be bishop, but he was told that Rome needed him, just then. The city was having a very hard and dangerous time. It had been the capital of the Roman Empire, but the government was now removed to Constantinople, and the city of Rome was left in a very weak condition, with great hordes of barbarians coming down upon it from the north. The care and defense of the city came upon the bishop, and well did St. Gregory do his part. There are two things for which to remember him; one, that he arranged the services in an orderly manner, and wrote many beautiful Collects.

The other is a matter that he had very much at heart before he was made bishop. Passing through the market place one day he saw a number of beautiful children, especially young boys, standing in the slave market. You see that was the way the Romans got servants in those times; they went all about getting people to bring them to Rome, where they were sold. Many of those who bought the slaves had them taught the trades or arts for which they were needed. Sometimes a slave could get his freedom by long service, or by saving all the money he got till there was enough to repay his master. Sometimes his friends at home would raise the money and buy him back.

These particular boys that St. Gregory saw were from England, which was called Britain in those days. They were from a heathen kingdom in the eastern part. "England" is derived from the old name "Angle-land," land of the Angles. So, when St. Gregory asked what the boys were the dealer said, "They are Angles." "Not Angles, but Angels," said Gregory, "for they have faces like angels, and should learn to sing the praises of God as the angels in Heaven." He kept thinking about them, and asked permission to go to their country and convert the Angles. But he was, as we have just seen, very much needed at home. Afterwards, when he was bishop, he fitted up a missionary expedition to go to England. There was a monk named Augustine, and a large company with him. Traveling in those days was slow, of course, as there were no railroads, and only small ships to cross the water. They had to cross France—then called Gaul—and while there heard good news. Bertha, a French princess, had been married to a heathen king in England, making him promise that he would let her remain a Christian. She had gone over there and taken her own clergy with her, and even had a little church for Christian worship right in the heart of heathendom. So St. Augustine and his band went on to the southeastern part of England, where they were kindly received, and after awhile converted the king and his people. This was, as I said, in the southeastern part of England, and the Cathedral of Canterbury stands there now. Even in St. Augustine's time the site was old, or a ruined church stood there, dating from the time when the Romans occupied Britain—away back before St. Paul's time. St. Augustine had it repaired, dedicating it to "The Holy Saviour, God, and Our Lord Jesus Christ." It is still called "Christ Church." All that remains of the original church is the ancient seat called "St. Augustin's chair," which the Archbishop of Canterbury uses to this day.

The feast of the Circumcision of Christ (New Year's Day) was not kept as a festival in early times. It took a long, long time after the Day of Pentecost before the heathen were converted. Remember, there were very few Christians to begin with. Little by little they spread the gospel, little by little the civilized world became a Christian world. Christian ways were as strange to most folks then, as heathen ways seem to you now. Suppose you had to go to church in some dark burying-place in underground cellars, or in some one's upstairs room, with all the blinds pulled down. Suppose all the holiday toys and games of the children you played with were in honor of heathen gods. Suppose about a week after Christmas there was a great heathen festival, with dances and games, and people drinking too much wine. It sounds unattractive, but, in fact, the children of those times found it as hard to be out of that January frolic as you would to lose Hallowe'en or Fourth of July. Christian parents would not allow their children on the streets at all at those times; they kept them close indoors, and the time was spent in fasting and praying for their ignorant, sinful neighbors. This is why the circumcision of Christ was not kept especially, though Gregory wrote a beautiful Collect in honor of it. After a long time, about 1090, people began to feel that they wanted to honor Him on that day, and so St. Gregory's Collect was looked up and an Epistle and Gospel arranged.

Yes, all the Collects for this month were arranged or written by St. Gregory; 590. See if you can find them all, so as to date them, as we began to do last month:

January 1—Circumcision of Christ.
January 6—The Epiphany.
January 9—First Sunday after Epiphany.
January 16—Second Sunday after Epiphany.
January 23—Septuagesima.
January 30—Sexagesima.

Did you notice that I omitted one Sunday? There is a Sunday in this month which has no Collect of its own. Look at the end of the Gospel for the circumcision, and read the note—page 69 in the Prayer Book. Notice carefully, when you are in church, that Sunday, and see if you haven't found the reason.

There is a saint's day this month—St. Paul. Look in the Calendar at the beginning of the Prayer Book (page xii) and see what day of the month it comes.

St. Paul's Day used to be kept with St. Peter's, because the tradition is that they were martyred on the same day. But after awhile people began to think St. Paul was such a great missionary he ought to have a day to himself, so they kept an extra day in memory of his conversion, when Jesus spoke to him from Heaven. Perhaps you think I haven't put very many Sundays after the Epiphany. There are Collects enough for more than that in the Prayer Book. But look in the beginning of the book, on pages xxvi and xxvii, and you will see I am right. You see, we are going to have a very early Easter this year.

PARISH NOTES.

The clergy wish to thank many friends for their generous donations to the clergy house at Christmas.

During Lent the Bible Class of the Guild of the Holy Cross will meet on Wednesday evening. This class is open to any woman who may desire to attend.

The ladies of the parish will meet every Friday afternoon, during Lent, in the parish hall, at three o'clock. As last year they will fill boxes for the mission field.

Retreats during Lent will be held as follows: For women and girls, on Mid-Lent Sunday; for men, on Passion Sunday; St. Mary's Guild, on the Thursday in Passion Week.

The parish retreat will be held on Shrove Tuesday. Addresses at 10, 12 and 3 o'clock. A light breakfast and lunch will be served in the parish hall for those who may desire it. It is requested that names may be sent to Sister Catherine Angela.

The annual dinner of St. Vincent's Guild was held in the clergy house on the evening of Wednesday, January 19. Although a number were prevented from coming by reason of illness, a most enjoyable evening was spent by both acolytes and clergy.

A Retreat for the Associates of the Girls Friendly Society will be held in the parish building, on Thursday, February 17th. This is open to any who may wish to come, whether associates or not. Names should be sent to Miss Emma J. Neilson, 325 South 12th Street.

The Annual Requiem for the departed members of the Confraternity of the Blessed Sacrament was celebrated on Wednesday morning, January 19. A number of associates, both priests and lay people, were present, including Father Taylor, the Secretary General. A carefully prepared sermon was delivered by Father Armstrong, of Palmyra.

The offering for missions was as follows:

Convocation of North Philadelphia	$100.00
Bishop Horner, Asheville	75.00
General	55.00
Bishop Weller	7.00
Bishop White	10.00
Bishop Griswold	162.50
Domestic	5.00
China	10.00
St. Paul's, Tokyo	28.00
St. Andrew's School	5.00
	$457.50

The Bishop of the diocese notifies us that Bishop Jaggar will visit the parish for confirmation on the evening of April 5. Instructions for confirmation will be given as follows: Girls, after school, on Thursday afternoons, at the mission house; women, on Tuesday afternoons, at the mission house, at 4 o'clock. (Special appointments may also be made.) Men, on Tuesday evenings, at 8 o'clock, at the clergy house. Classes for boys will be arranged by appointment.

Instructions will commence on Tuesday, February 2.

CHRISTMASTIDE

The Christmas festival at St. Clement's brought joy and peace to many souls. There was a slight increase in the number of Communions, which is always an encouraging sign of spiritual growth, and the late Mass was well attended. The choir, under the direction of Mr. Sears, rendered the Mass of the Sacred Heart. The storm which commenced on Christmas Day reached such proportions that the greater number of the parish were unable to get to Mass on St. Stephen's Day, but those who had sufficient courage to brave the elements found peculiar satisfaction in the services. In spite of small congregations and a choir of ten men and boys nothing was omitted. The solemn processions, Solemn Mass and the "Te Deum" in the evening were all rendered, and the Christmas spirit was not quenched, despite the warring of the elements.

The Christmas parties of the various Guilds were held during the Octave, and were particularly enjoyable. The turkey supper was more largely attended than usual, and a "private table" was supplied for those who were unable to find seats with the rest.

The Guild of the Holy Child held a delightful entertainment on Saturday. Refreshments were served at an early hour and afterward the members of the Guild presented a "Star Drill," for which they had been carefully trained by Miss Rogers and Miss Grover, and the performance was most successfully repeated at the Christmas party of St. Mary's Guild. Each year a small silver crucifix and chain, "in memory of Eleanor," is presented to the member of the Guild of the Holy Child who has a sufficiently commendable record of attendance at Mass, Sunday School and Guild meetings. This year it was given to Edna Decker. Georgina Clark was second in excellence of attendance.

On Tuesday, January 4, the Girls' Friendly held their Christmas gathering. A most enjoyable evening was spent in the parish hall, and the time was enlivened by games and dancing.

IN MEMORIAM.

HARRY CONNELLY.

On January 8, after an illness of some months' duration, Harry Connelly entered into Life. Mr. Connelly had been a communicant of St. Clement's parish almost from its inception, and was for many years an honored member of the vestry. About three years ago he retired from active participation in the life of the parish, but he retained to the end a deep interest in all that concerned St. Clement's. Simple in his tastes, firm in his convictions, and loyal to the Catholic faith, he was a gentleman of rare and chivalrous courtesy which was the outward manifestation of a warm and generous heart.

ISABELLA T. FREEMAN.

Among those whom God has called to Himself during the past year none were longer associated with the parish than Mrs. Freeman. Coming to St. Clement's under its first rector, she remained a faithful communicant until her death. Her devotion to the church and all for which it stood was unusual and touching. After a long and painful illness, borne with wonderful patience and Christian fortitude, she entered into rest on January 5.

Grant unto them, O Lord, eternal rest, and let light perpetual shine upon them. Amen.

LENT.

During the Lenten season a change will be made in our usual order of services. Apart from the sermon with the Stations of the Cross on Friday evening, and Bible classes for women on Wednesday afternoon and evening, there will be no extra addresses. In place of these we shall endeavor to make the holy season a time of special prayer. During the forty days the members of the parish are asked to come to church once each day, if possible, at any convenient hour, to pray for at least five minutes for the object assigned to that day. No set form of prayer will be set forth, but the use of at least an "Our Father" is suggested. Daily, at noon, a service of intercession will be held in the church, lasting from five to ten minutes. These intercessions will be based upon the needs of humanity suggested by the daily press and by the happenings in our parish life. If every man and woman will try to enter into this plan earnestly our Lent will be of far-reaching benefit and influence.

We print a list of the subjects of intercession. The Sunday Masses will be offered for the general object for the week, and the 7 o'clock Mass on weekdays will have for its intention the object for that day.

SOME MESSENGERS AND WHERE THEY WENT.

VI.

"I have studied Arabic; I have gone abroad several times to preach the Gospel; I have, for the sake of the Faith, been cast into prison; I have been scourged; I have labored for forty-five years to win over the shepherds of the Church and the princes of Europe to the common good of Christendom. . . . Now I am old and poor, but still I am intent upon the same object, and I will persevere in it till death, if the Lord permit."

These words sound much like a certain chapter of St. Paul's writings, and their author somewhat resembled the great Apostle.

Raymond Lull, scientist, scholar, courtier and missionary, was born at Palma, in the Island of Majorca (Balearic Islands), in 1236. He was of a noble family, and his father a distinguished soldier. The lad was remarkably bright and winning, and was early introduced at Court, being made seneschal at twenty-eight. The usual temptations awaited him, and his early life was one of reckless vice and sensuality. In later years he bitterly regretted the waste of his great gifts and their misuse at this time. But, as in St. Paul's case, when he was about thirty years of age, the Lord called him. One day he was lounging in his room, writing a sensual poem, to be called "The Joys of Love." The muse was propitious, the meter went smoothly, and the verses were progressing, when suddenly he saw, as if right against the wall of the apartment, the Cross, reaching from floor to ceiling, and the dear Lord suffering thereon, turning reproachful eyes upon him. The courtier, after a startled moment, returned to his verses, but the Vision would not be ignored, and at last Lull surrendered himself to the call, threw aside his writing, and proceeded to spend the following days and weeks in tearful prayer, that, if not too late, he might be permitted to use his gifts for the Saviour.

He at last took a very different line of action from what the Christian world then followed. Missionaries had been sent to the heathen and the barbarians of the North. But the Moslems and Jews were considered simply as deadly enemies of the Cross; Lull's own father had been a famous Crusader. Lull, meditating on the dying love of Christ, could not see why "Father, forgive them," did not mean the Saviour's love and forgiveness for His enemies, to be extended to them by His followers. However, if one were to preach to the Moslems he must be well furnished with philosophical learning, and speak to them in their own tongue. Moreover, he must try to reconcile the claims of science and Christianity. Feeling a little shy about working aggressively for missions, after his notorious life, feeling also his own need of preparation, Lull spent the next few years in close study, working out a system of Christian philosophy. When he finally began lecturing, his ideas stirred Europe, and were received with enthusiasm.

No one can know, when humbly and devoutly fitting himself to follow some holy call, what effect his earnestness may have upon others. To the seminarian, absorbed in his studies and the beginnings of his ministry; to the church worker, practicing diligence in a day of small things; to any people ready to do good works, who are doing all in their power to be fit for their mission; to all these the probation time may seem merely a time of waiting and preparaton. But they do more good, these earnest young students, than they can know of, in rousing attention and interest, and setting an example. The most lasting memorial of Raymond Lull's devotion is his influence on the great Thomas Aquinas, whose theological writing was begun at Lull's earnest entreaty. The Church honors Aquinas and has almost forgotten Lull; but the Lord is not forgetful.

Lull's philosophy was extremely popular, but his appeals on behalf of the Jews and Moslems fell on deaf ears. These had been fought with the sword, but the Christian philosopher tried to induce men to try the Sword of the Spirit, which is the Word of God. One thing he did accomplish—he induced the Council of Vienne, in 1311, to make a decree that the study of languages should be made a part of the regular course, with professorships, at Paris, Oxford, Salamanca, and all colleges in the papal possessions. He also induced the king of the Balearic Islands to found a monastery at Majorca, where the study of foreign languages was required as part of the training.

It is sad, but the fact is that the utter lack of interest in his missionary object and the constant temptations of his former life caused him to lose heart for a time, and he relapsed into all his old ways. It was all very well for priests and monks to be devoted to missions and the Church, but men of the world had not much in common with them, and it was a pity to lose all the pleasure of life. He'd tried, and no one wanted to go ahead; all right, let it go. But the Lord would not let him go. At some great public service which the Court was attending Lull was impressed by a sermon preached by a Franciscan. It was a vivid description of the early life of the great St. Francis, dwelling on his utter renunciation of the gay life to which he had been accustomed. The sermon deeply affected Lull, who returned to his missionary plans with renewed ardor. He engaged shipping from Genoa, and went there to prepare for his journey. With his usual faculty for making friends, he had the little town greatly stirred over his proposed expedition. When everything was ready, at the last moment his courage failed, and he let the ship sail without him. It was hardly out of sight before he realized how he had shamed the cause of Christ in the eyes of all the curious neighborhood. So, the historian says, "remorse brought on a violent fever." It seems more likely and more in keeping with his character that he was on the verge of the fever when ready to sail, and that the thought of the undertaking was too much for him to endure in his weak condition. Be that as it may, he at once engaged another passage, and set forth, not waiting for full recovery or heeding the protests of his friends, and as his spirits rose with the feeling of duty bravely faced, he rapidly regained health. The sea voyage did him a great deal of good, and when they landed at Tunis he was his old audacious self. He at once challenged the literati of that region to a debate, at which he enlarged upon his favorite thought, that the doctrines of the Trinity and of the Incarnation were the only means of reconciling the Divine attributes.

It made a deep impression. So much so, that one of the philosophers asked the government to execute him, saying, "This man gives us an unsettled feeling as to our own position; I fear I might become a convert to his pernicious teaching if I listened long." Lull was by order of the authorities escorted back to the ship on which he had just come, and warned that he must not again be seen on that side of the sea. He managed to slip on board another vessel in the same harbor, and for three months watched his chance to return to the town. But the authorities were vigilant, and at last he returned home.

The rest of his life was one incessant struggle to carry on his work among the Jews and Moslems. Sometimes he labored in the islands of the Mediterranean, sometimes among the Jews in his native land. At last he got back to Africa. He built up a small congregation near a place called Buggia. Here he was imprisoned at one time, being kept in a dark dungeon for eighteen months. He preached to his jailers, and write treatises on Christian philosophy, which were secretly read far and wide. All sorts of means were used to induce him to renounce Christ. Beautiful women were brought to the cell, high honors were offered and large sums of money. At last he was again banished, but he returned in his old age.

It was his last effort. He was over 70 years of age, but in vigorous health and powerful as a pleader. He was joyfully welcomed by the little company of converts, and spent some quiet years teaching them and strengthening them in the Faith.

At last, saying "Woe is me if I preach not the Gospel," he stood boldly forth in the market place and preached, denouncing Mohammedanism, and declaring the truth as it is in Jesus. The angry populace rushed upon him, dragged him out of the city, and stoned him. Some merchants from Majorca dared to go to the scene of the martyrdom and bring forth the body from its stony coverlet and take it home for Christian burial.

The love of Christ constrained him—against discouragements, illness, the threats of his enemies, the ridicule of his friends, especially against his own baser self; in difficulties, in shipwreck, in imprisonment, in persecution, in illness. The love of Christ, which sought him so remarkably in youth, was as a flame burning within him, driving him on without rest. Feeling this, he offered at one time the following prayer, and the Lord granted it: "As the needle by nature turns to the north when it is touched by the magnet, so it is fitting that Thy servant should turn to Thee, since out of love to him Thou hast endured such pain and suffering. . . . Many are wont to die, O Lord, of old age, because their natural warmth fails, and because there is excess of cold. Thus, if it be Thy will, Thy servant would not die. He would rather die in the glow of love, even as Thou wert willing to die for him."

The Children's Corner

Dear Children: There is a great deal to think about this month, with Lent close at hand, three special Holy days and the spring Ember days. Perhaps the best plan would be to take the dates as they come, and make a sort of calendar for this month.

I hope you won't forget to date the Collects in your prayerbooks this month, especially the first that comes—February 2: "The presentation of Christ in the temple, commonly called the purification of Saint Mary the Virgin." Why must this festival come on this day? Because the law required the first-born son must be brought to the priest in the Temple when he was a month old—that is, thirty days, at least. If the mother was to bring him herself, the time was made longer, about forty days. She was required to bring an offering because "victims were offered by the law of old" as types of the great death of Christ for us. The usual offering was a spotless lamb, and flocks of lambs were especially kept in the fields near Jerusalem, carefully watched by shepherds who were devoted men. (Those were the shepherds to whom the angels sang on Christmas night.) But those lambs were expensive. Besides, the Temple was the same then as church is to us. You'd hardly like to bring a lamb to church. So the lambs were provided from the Temple flocks, and the people who came to offer sacrifices only brought the price of the offering. Now a poor person could not possibly afford a lamb. Money was very scarce then, and the Blessed Mother of Jesus was very poor. So the law allowed her to pay just what she could—only enough for two young pigeons. Pigeons were very cheap, indeed, only fifteen cents a pair; sometimes as low as five cents a pair. In the Temple court, as you went in, were great chests shaped like trumpets, and a priest sat there, and each one offering told him how much, as the money was dropped into the "trumpet," and he made a note of it, and saw to having the right kind of sacrifice offered.

The story of Jesus' presentation in the Temple is so beautifully told by St. Luke that you had better read the Gospel for that day yourselves: St. Luke 11:22.

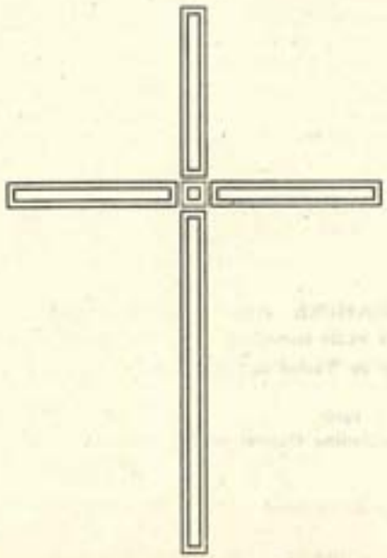
The Collect is found in the sacramentary of Gregory, 590. Till the ninth century this day was called by a Greek word which means "The Meeting," because St. Simeon and St. Anna met Jesus then, after they had looked so long for Him.

February 6th is Quinquagesima Sunday—"Charity Sunday." The Collect was written for the Prayer Book of 1549, and is based on what St. Paul says in the Epistle for the day.

Remember that "charity" means holy love, and God is love. So if we want to draw nearer to God and be like Him, this coming Lent, wouldn't it be a good plan on Quinquagesima Sunday to go off quietly somewhere with our prayer-books and read over the Epistle for the day? There are lots of people who practice great self-denial in Lent; who earn or save lots of money for Easter offerings; who attend many services, and yet they are the most disagreeable sort of people, and really do very little good, because they regard Lent as a time to "do stunts," as the boys say, forgetting that what God most wants, and the hardest thing to offer all the time, is the spirit of gentleness and love and self-effacement. There are many, many people doing things with the honest intention of helping the world to be better—but, oh, children, very few of them do it in the Christlike way. See if you can't practice in the ways that come up in your everyday life doing gentle things in a gentle way. If you do, when you grow up and take part in the work for God, you will be like carefully tuned violins, ringing true and sweet—not like the noisy cymbals.

of which St. Paul spoke: "The people who make a great noise and stir about everything they do, and fuss all the time they're doing it."

That brings us to February 9—Ash Wednesday. You can mark this Collect 1549, though it is really a translation and arrangement of several very ancient ones.



Did you know that "Lent" is an old word that means "springtime"? That was just because the season always comes in the spring of the year. But see if you can't make it really a springtime in your lives. The first thing, you know, before you can plant in the spring is to get out all the weeds. So begin weeding right away. Think, and think hard, what little pet fault there is that really interferes with your love for God. It may be a very little thing, not even wrong in itself, yet if you don't watch out it may cause you great trouble when you are older and feelings are stronger. Your parents and teachers watch out for your faults and correct them. But these are not the worst, generally. The ones that only you know about yourself, that you never speak of, are the dangerous ones. Well, if even yet you can't think what one to work at most, just say to yourself, "What would I hate to have told, just as it is?"

February 13 is the first Sunday in Lent. —Date the Collect 1549.

February 20 is the second Sunday in Lent. —Gregory wrote that Collect.

February 24 is St. Matthias' Day.—Collect was written in 1549. It is fitting that St. Matthias' Day, with its Collect praying that we may be "ordered and guided by faithful and true pastors," should come at this time, for the Ember days come in at this time. Why do we say Ember days? Because the word ember comes from a very old English word, "Ymbren," a regular season, and these days of self-denial and special prayer for the clergy were called in early times "the fast of the four seasons"—spring, summer, autumn and winter. Look in the small print pages at the beginning of the Prayer Book, p. xxiv, near the foot of the page, and you will see when they come.

May all wrong, unkind, angry and selfish feelings be weeded out of your hearts this dear springtime. May all that is good, lovely and Christlike get a strong new start. God give you a blessed and holy Lent.

PARISH NOTES.

The annual parish election will be held in the vestry room on Easter Monday. Polls will be open from 12 o'clock until 2.

Contributions are asked toward the flowers for the Altar of Repose on Maundy Thursday and for the High Altar at Easter. Money may be sent to Miss Arnold, 102 South Thirty-sixth street.

The weekly envelopes will be ready for distribution on Palm Sunday. As the fiscal year of the parish closes on March 24 all arrears in pew rents or envelopes should be made up before that time.

The Rev. William Remington, of the Church of the Holy Communion, preached in St. Clement's on the evening of January 30. He represented the Christian Social Union and gave an interesting account of the social problems with which the church has to deal in that section of the city.

Every communicant should fill out a communion card at Easter giving his full name and address together with the hour when he expects to make his communion. If every one will do this an accurate list and correct addresses may be obtained. Those who have not made a communion in two years are removed from the list of those "in good standing." It may be as well to state at this time that the Rector will in all cases refuse to give a transfer certificate "in good standing" to any person who is not on the list or who has been negligent in church duties.

The parishioners are asked to make their Easter confession during the earlier part of Holy Week and to come at the appointed times. If it is impossible for any one to come during the hours set a special appointment may be made, but the people are urged to consider that the priests have many other duties to perform and would prefer not to make special appointments unless it is really necessary. It may be as well to say at this time that it is exceedingly ill-bred and inconsiderate for persons to enter the confessional before others who have come to the church before them. If a regular order were observed the delay need not be great. Much confusion would be obviated if penitents would kneel before the confessional they intend to enter and not be scattered all about the church. When one comes for confession he should wait until all who have come before him have made their confessions, and then enter the confessional at once without waiting to gaze about. Having made your confession go to the front of the church for the devotions afterward so that the space before the confessional may be left for others.

A violet altar cloth for St. John's chapel is being embroidered by the Altar Guild, and it is hoped that it will be ready for use very soon. It seems wise to give a key to the shields which are on the super-frontal, for otherwise the thoughts of the worshippers might be distracted by efforts to decipher them. Each shield bears one or more symbols of Our Lord's passion, and from left to right, they represent, the lantern and sword; the ladder, with the spear and sponge; the scarlet robe and dice; the crown of thorns, with the nails, the cock and the money bag; the inscription on top of the cross; the pillar, with the scourge and the reed. The work has all been done by members of the parish, even the designing of the shields.

EASTER CONFESSIONS.

The hours of the clergy for Holy Week will be as follows:

Fr. Hutchinson—Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday, 10.30 a. m. to 12 m., 4 to 5 p. m.; Good Friday, 4 to 5, 7 to 8 p. m.; Easter even, 10 a. m. to 12 m., 7 to 9 p. m.

The other clergy—Wednesday and Thursday, 4 to 5 p. m.; Good Friday, 3 to 5, 7 to 8 p. m.; Easter even, 3 to 5, 7 to 10 p. m.

THE LENTEN MISSIONARY WORK.

I.

Last year, it will be remembered, the women of the Parish worked during Lent for a Missionary box which was sent to Miss L. J. Woods at Fort Yukon, Alaska. Two letters have lately been received from Miss Woods with acknowledgment of the box, which reached her safely and was unpacked September 22. The contents proved to be just what was needed and everything was distributed before she had had time to write. Her letters, which did not reach here in time to be published in the February MAGAZINE, are printed now, so that all who were interested in the work may have the opportunity of reading them.

Fort Yukon, Alaska,
October 19, 1909.

"I arrived here about August 23. Men were working on the Church and the new Mission House. The old building was in a state of undress, as the plan was not to use it this winter. . . . The kitchen of the new house could not be finished, and I saw at once that I would have to live in the old house with the children, so I set to work to get things in order. We extended the hospitality of the Mission to the new government school teacher, as his house was not finished, so I had Archdeacon Stuch, his Indian, Dr. Burke, the teacher and nine children, two of them being only about 4 years old.

"During this time the supplies and the new furniture came in. I worked from 7 in the morning until after midnight every day, and by the time Miss Cady returned, I had both houses furnished and looking very well." (Miss Cady was away a month for a rest.) In the new Mission there are six rooms. The sitting room is furnished with a desk, six chairs, one morris chair, a table, a settee and a rocker. The Archdeacon's room has a chiffonier, white iron bedstead, rocker and chair. The Doctor's the same. Miss Cady has a bureau and rocker. The guest chamber has an improvised dresser and a good bed and chair. In this house I have the dining-room table and chairs and buffet, my bureau and desk. Then I was able to buy rugs for all the floors and linoleum for the reception-room floor in this house, so we feel very grand and comfortable. Much of the money for furniture was given to me in Philadelphia. The children's rooms I had covered with matting, had their little wooden bedsteads painted and tacked a little red valance around them. John and I made their wash benches, chairs, etc., so their rooms are quite cosy and the children are all happy. I wish I could have about thirty of them, so many want to come, but we already have more than we have provisions for.

"What a splendid box the one from St. Clement's was, everything useful and good. Those pretty hoods and lovely wool scarfs; the girls' dresses and petticoats; the useful kitchen aprons and aprons for girls and children. The toys and bags and nightgowns, the useful hammered brass trays from St. Nicholas Guild and other things too useful to mention. How my heart went out to you in love and gratitude for all your gifts and labor of love. Please thank the ladies for me for all their loving thoughtfulness and precious gifts, which will each bring much comfort to our less fortunate brothers and sisters.

"Today I was visiting in the Indian homes in the interest of our own Woman's Auxiliary and Juniors, and also stirring up the men to bring wood for the Church. We are going to entertain the very oldest men and women tomorrow evening with magic lantern pictures and cups of tea, etc. Thursday evening we entertain the Archdeacon's choir boys. Friday evening the Doctor has his Boys' Club, and we have our Junior Auxiliary. The work keeps us very busy. It is 9 in the evening before I get all the children off to bed and then there is always some one in, but I try to write one or two letters after 10 at night.

"The school building is about finished now and school opens next Monday. We like the new teacher very much, though he is not a Churchman.

"The river is fast freezing up and the skating has been very good on certain parts. This morning the temperature is only nine above; the lowest this fall was three below."

November 30, 1909.

"I am quite ashamed that my thanks for your lovely box has been so long delayed. The box was indeed splendid, all those nice little hoods and the warm knitted scarfs, the little dresses and aprons, the toys and bags and dresses. Everything was just what we needed. The knitted scarfs and nearly all the things are gone already. There were nice little dresses, etc., which just fitted Alfred and Nina, a little girl I have taken since my return; so please tell the ladies how grateful we are to them for all those good things, but most for the love which prompted them to do so much for us.

"We now have ten children, and there are many who want and who ought to be here, but provision has been made for but one, and I expect to be somewhat embarrassed financially before spring. However, I am so sure the work among the children is most important that I am anxious to do all in my power for them. I have had such a busy time since my return. Miss Cady went away for a month and a very sick man was brought here the day she left. He had shot his arm nearly off and we were forced to take him into the Mission. Archdeacon Stuck and his Indian have been here since then, and left a few days ago. I had the government school teacher for two months and Dr. Burke is here all the time. Those, with the children, make a very large family. Dr. Burke left last evening to visit a very sick man, about a hundred and fifty miles away. He will probably be gone a week. He left at midnight and will travel almost steadily, by dog team, of course.

"Today the temperature has been fifty degrees below zero all day. Last night and part of yesterday and the night before, sixty and sixty-five below. We are having quite a cold snap, the first of the winter, and the Archdeacon is on the trail, as we call it. It is 2.30 a. m. and as I rise at 7 a. m. I will say good-night.

"Again thank all the ladies for the pleasure and comfort they have given us and many of our people, and trusting this long delay in writing will be forgiven, I am, etc.,

"Lizzie J. Woods."

These letters not only show us how useful were the articles sent and how much they were appreciated, but they give us a very good idea of Miss Woods' work and the life at an Alaskan Mission Station. In the January number of the Spirit of Missions there is a most interesting article by Archdeacon Stuck, in which he says that he is writing in the quiet of his "fine new study at Fort Yukon, furnished beyond anything you ever saw at an Alaskan Mission, out of money given 'specifically for Miss Woods' comfort'! She bought the stuff herself, and what can I do about it? . . . In about three weeks' time I start out once more on my winter journey, and am glad of it and am looking forward to it. I am afraid that all this unwonted luxury of morris chairs and mission furniture, carpet on the floor and cathedral etchings on the wall, and gasoline-pressure-lighting-system that turns night into day, will undermine my constitution and make me languid and self-indulgent again. I am glad they are here, but I am glad to get away from them. Arthur will come back from Tanana with my dogs over the first good ice, and I will strike across the wilderness two hundred miles to the Kayukuk River."

This year it has been decided to divide the work and send two boxes of different kinds, one to the Archdeacon of Milwaukee (Bishop Webb) and the other to the Mission for the Oneida Indians at Oneida, Wis. (Diocese of Fond du Lac, Bishops Grafton and Weller). Just what the Mission is and what its needs are, can best be told by the letter from the Sister in charge and by quoting from the pamphlet which gives the history of the Mission to the Oneida Indians from its early beginning.

"The Oneida Mission is the oldest of our Church's Indian Missions. It began about 1702 or 1703, under the direction of the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel. The work of God's planting never perishes. In spite of many obstacles and setbacks the christianizing of the red men went on. Missionaries had to toil and suffer and lay down their lives, and the spirit has not died out yet.

"In the middle of the eighteenth century we find the Indians ministered to by one Rev. J. Ogilvie, who attended the troops in the expedition to Niagara. Almost all the Six Nations co-operated. The Indians' fighting men numbered nine hundred and forty. He records that 'he officiated constantly to the Mohawks and Oneidas who regularly attended Divine Service.' 'When at home,' writes another Missionary, Rev. J. Stuart, 'the Indians regularly attended service daily, and when out hunting some would come (of course on foot) sixty miles to communicate on Christmas Day.' Finally they came under the protecting care of Bishop Hobart.

"The history of the Oneidas in New York State was a glorious one, until the white man of the East dragged them out of their primitive life and placed them in surroundings which were so different from those to which they had been accustomed. Under the new temptations, especially of drink, their strength and glory disappeared like dew before the rising sun. The aims and ideals of this people were, and are today, toward a high and noble end, and they had a fond hope that in the recesses of the forests of New York they might find a safe resting place to grow up in the knowledge and arts of civilization. How soon that hope withered! A generation had scarcely passed away when the vice and degradation of an advancing civilization found its way into their midst, and there was no hope of escape except a removal from the neighborhood of their seductions. Hence their departure to their present settlement on Duck Creek in Wisconsin.

"The first Indian Church was erected in the year 1825, and was the first Church built in the whole northwest territory. Bishop Kemper, who visited the Oneida reservation in 1834, describes it as 'a log building next the parsonage.' In 1839 these Indians built for themselves a frame building. It was thought very grand and 'magnificent' in those days. Here, Dr. William Adams and the Rev. James Lloyd Breck, founders of Nashotah Seminary, came to be ordained. It was the only consecrated building in the Territory of Wisconsin. So highly did these saintly men and heroic Missonaries esteem the sacred character of the building, that they walked, following the Indian trail through the forests, a hundred miles or more to be ordained within its walls."

Such was the beginning of the Mission, and today, through the efforts of the faithful Missionaries and the Indians themselves, there stands a good stone Church building (the Church of the Holy Apostles, Hobart Memorial) consecrated by Bishop Grafton, October 27, 1897; a stone Parish House dedicated November 15, 1907; the Sisters' House and the Hospital. To quote again from the pamphlet—"One might ask, why build so large a Church in that far away part of the Mission field? The answer is that the Church is none too large for the congregation. On festivals it is filled to its utmost capacity, and there is a large congregation on all ordinary Sundays."

When we remember that in order to go to Church, the Indians have not to walk a few blocks, or ride in the cars as city folks do, but come for many miles and often on foot, the large regular attendance speaks well for their Christian principles. Among the twelve hundred who belong to the Church, there are five hundred and twenty-eight communicants, and all on the reservation are baptized. They form an excellent body of Church men, as loyal to the Church and as faithful in their Christian lives as any congregation in the land."

The Mission staff at present consists of Rev. W. B. Thorn, Sisters Lillian and Amelia, Miss Elm, Indian teacher; Dr. J. A. Powless and Mrs. Powless.

"The Hospital is dependent for support upon the aid that comes in answer to appeals and prayer. The expense of carrying on the work is exceedingly small, for the cost of maintaining the Hospital with its Doctor and Nurse, together with the food, heating, medicines and other necessary expenses, requires but fifty dollars a month. Our Hospital physician is a young Oneida Indian, Dr. Josiah A. Powless, who finished, with great credit, a four years' course at the Milwaukee Medical College. He needs all the help and encouragement that can be given him in order that he may do satisfactory work among his own people. His wife is assisting in the work as Hospital Superintendent and Nurse.

"A great educational work as well as one of the most valued agencies in our Missionary work is the help given by the Sisters of the Holy Nativity. In the year 1898 the Sisters built their own home, and they have always given their services without any cost to the Church. Their work is not confined to spiritual ministrations, but with all the other workers, they labor for the advancement of the tribe in all that helps towards civilization. The Church altar work is done by them; they help with the music both in singing and at the organ, but perhaps their most helpful work is just the living here as they do, really belonging to these dear people, who know that at any time they may call upon the Sisters for anything which lies in their power to do for their Red friends.

"When the Bishop makes his annual visitation, as near 11 o'clock as it is possible for an Indian congregation to assemble, usually 11.30, for why should anybody be in a vulgar hurry, the big bell sounds from the tower and a procession winds along to the Church. The crucifer, followed by choristers (giants, some of them) followed in their turn by the native Priest, visiting Priests, Celebrant, Bishop, and after a short space the confirmation candidates, all proceeding quietly to their respective places while a densely packed congregation waits, reverently standing. The great Altar has been decorated with the treasures from the green house and from the greater green house, the woods, and stands in radiant significance for the King. The service flows evenly with no fear of unseemly breaks, each one knowing and doing, in exactly the right time and place, what is expected, so the spirit of devotion is unhurt by confusion in the chancel or whispered comment in the congregation; all are present to worship God and to wait upon him. Epistle and Gospel are read in the Oneida language and the sermon is interpreted by the Indian interpreter.

"Before the blessing the grand old Oneida Te Deum is sung, never to be forgotten when once heard and almost Gregorian in effect, with three strong, strange, satisfying alleluias after each verse. Finally a chair is placed outside the chancel for the Bishop, who receives every person in the Church, shaking hands with man, woman and child, laying his hand on some baby's head in blessing, and greeting all according to the old-time custom.

"The needs of the Mission are many; we are far removed from the great centers of the Church; we are easily forgotten; you must pardon our seeming importunity; it is ungracious—it is hard—to beg; it is harder still to be in want and to see the work of God straightened. Therefore, we urge in Christ's dear name the needs of our Mission upon the Oneida friends. To extend a loving and generous hand that will further lift them up, is to put in practice the great principle of the Incarnation; it is to make real our own following of Him who stooped down from heaven, and by the sacrifice of Himself lifted us up into union with Himself."

House of the Holy Nativity,
Oneida, Wisconsin.

February 10, 1910.

It is a joy to know that you are thinking of us and our Indians.

We, Sister Amelia and I, have been here a little over a year, having succeeded Sisters Katherine and Margaret, who were here about fourteen years.

It is a great privilege to help carry on the work begun by those noble pioneer missionaries, Fathers Goodnough and Burleson, and the monuments erected to their memory and marking the resting place of all that was mortal, are inspirations to carry on the work with zeal.

Our hospital is now closed on account of lack of funds, but Doctor Powless and family still occupy it, and several rooms are ready for use, as emergency calls. Any liquid foods, malted milk, beef extract, Scott's Emulsion, etc., are much needed. We distribute such to the people in their homes.

We are praying earnestly that when our hospital again opens its doors fully, it may be for tubercular patients. Tuberculosis is a terrible scourge here, and it can never be eradicated until we can take its victims from their homes. The want of care and cleanliness is so sadly neglected in the Indian home.

The lace industry still continues, over sixty of our women are making lace. It is now in the hands of a lace teacher.

There are two Sisters here. We have the care of the Church altar and choir, guilds, Junior Auxiliary, etc. Sister Amelia is organist and has a weekly instruction in the catechism in the Mission school. I have the children of our Church in the government school on Sunday afternoons. The class numbers ninety. Eighty-one were present last Sunday. They are bright and interesting and would put many a school of white children to shame in reciting the catechism. It is a joy to be with them.

The Junior Auxiliary meets at our house on Saturday afternoons. They, with the Oneida Guild women, are preparing a box of clothing this Lent for the Mission in Lincolnton, Ky. While others are working for us, we too are contributing of our mite to help in other places.

The congregation is composed entirely of Indians, except the Priest's family, Sisters and several of the teachers of the Government school. Our congregations are large (about three hundred) when the roads are passable. We have a large choir of men and women, and the singing with the full choir is beautiful. The service is in English, sermon interpreted by Brigman Cornelius, Indian interpreter, and instead of the Gloria in Excelsis, an Indian hymn is sung which inspires one.

Two Masses and Evensong on Sundays. Mass every Thursday morning in the Church, daily during Lent, with Evensong four days each week, a good attendance at all the services.

But few live within the circuit of a mile, yet there are many who do not miss a Lenten service.

Father Thorn (missionary) says Mass in our own private Chapel days when it is not at Church, so you see we are greatly blessed.

The Oneida Guild are all old Indian women, some who once wore the blankets, etc., speak no English, faithful to the fullest extent, for there is always a meeting. They come to the Thursday Mass and then spend the day sewing. They make aprons and children's clothing and then buy it themselves, but they still love to make patchwork and some of the quilts are gems. Any pieces which could be used for such work would be most acceptable. We use any material and they can be sent by mail in small quantities.

Thanking you all for the friendly interest and praying that God may bless your efforts and ours, I am,

Very faithfully and gratefully yours,

LILLIAN S. H. N.

SOME MESSENGERS AND WHERE THEY WENT. VII.

The sixteenth century was a time of discovery and exploration, and also, in many regions, of colonization. Those who read the secular histories must be impressed by the faithfulness of the clergy who accompanied the pioneers. For the most part, these were members of the Jesuit Order; it would be delightful, did space permit, to study their work among the heathen tribes of North and South America.

Laboring among the Indians of the North, they endured the greatest hardships and the most fiendish tortures, steadfastly performing their duties so long as life endured, because the love of Christ constrained them. Histories tell of one, found by old friends in the depths of the forest, hardly recognizable because of the mutilations inflicted upon him by the Indians. His extraordinary fortitude had impressed his tormentors, who respected courage, and his friends found him quietly and fearlessly going about among them, calling them his "children," and refusing to leave them.

In South America, their influence over the natives was unbounded. There were numberless little Christian communities who looked up to their "Padre' as the wisest and best of leaders. Bravery was not lacking here, also. One such missionary, who had for a long time labored unsuccessfully among some natives in the Amazon Valley, was warned that the river was rising, and urged to leave his flock and seek safety. But he stayed with the poor frightened creatures, helping them, and as the waters rose, climbing a tall tree with as many of the villagers as could get on. The village was small, and the tree was large, and some of the strongest ones may have made their escape. At any rate, the story goes, he had quite a colony with him in the tree, and as the waters came higher they climbed up farther, till at last they dared go no higher. All the time the priest had been praying aloud, and now urged them to be baptized, that they might obtain eternal life when the end of their earthly sufferings had come. At last they consented, and the priest blessed the fast-rising flood, baptizing them as rapidly as he could. Hardly was this done, then the water began to go down, and the newly-baptized, in an ecstasy of joy, devoted themselves to religion under the guidance of the missionary. In fact, the influence of the Jesuits over the natives was so great that when the Spanish traders followed dishonest practices, the Indians would shame them by asking how Christians could do such things. This was embarrassing for the traders, and they finally succeeded in getting the Jesuits recalled, claiming that they stirred up rebellions among the natives.

We have already seen in the life of Raymond Lull how the church, while zealous in its work among the heathen, regarded the Mohammedans and Jews merely as enemies of the Cross. The feeling that they too should be objects of Christian charity and effort was gaining strength. St. Ignatius Loyola himself, with his followers, longed to visit the Holy Land and work among the Mussulmans.

In 1530 he won a follower who became famous as one of the greatest of mediaeval missionaries.

Francis Xavier, then about 24 years of age, had just taken his degree of Master of Arts at the University of Paris. He was to be trained for the church, and his father, having great influence in ecclesiastical circles in Spain, was expecting him home shortly, where he could easily obtain a powerful and lucrative position.

But things were taking place in the life of the young man of which he said nothing. He had met Ignatius, and was rapidly coming under the influence of the master-spirit. Outwardly they were but pleasant and congenial acquaintances; if Ignatius saw his opportunity—and he probably did—he was too wise to push the matter.

"Fools rush in where angels fear to tread."

One must be ready to help a friend who may be seeking the truth, but one must let God direct every step of the matter, clearly, even if it does seem slow. The first, the very first, thing to do in such a case is to pray earnestly that one may not be carried away by zeal, and choke the aspiration with too much tending.

A soul just awaking to the love of God is a tender plant, which requires careful handling.

There was a servant of Xavier who saw the effect that this friendship was having on his young master. Jealous for what he considered the best interests of the family and not being able to divert the attention of Xavier, he lay in wait for Ignatius, and very nearly succeeded in assassinating him. This was too much for Xavier's chivalrous spirit, and the danger only drew the friends nearer together.

At last, in 1535, he put himself under direction, and Ignatius took up his spiritual training in earnest. They had already, with five others, founded the Jesuit Order, making a vow of poverty and chastity, Ignatius leaving the question of obedience to work itself out later.

They couldn't do anything in the way of work just then. Their chosen field was among the Moslems in Jerusalem—a sort of crusade of love, similar to that which Raymond Lull carried on. But they couldn't start for Jerusalem till a ship should leave Venice, and besides, they had to go to Rome to get the Pope's sanction.

It was decided to spend the time among the Venetian hospitals, and Francis Xavier was appointed to attend the Hospital for Incurables. It was a severe test of love; he was to wait upon others as a servant, dress wounds, make beds, prepare sick diet, and then, in any case, to administer the Sacraments as needed; last of all, and the hardest, as any trained hospital nurse will tell you, get them ready for burial. Last of all, did I say? It was the last of the hard part; the faithful shepherd then had to take the bodies to their resting place and lay them away with words of Christian hope. It was a fearfully hard life; the suffering poor don't always make things very pleasant for their helpers, and the Order was a new venture and not immune from sneers and small annoyances from the secular clergy.

During this waiting time they made the journey to Rome and received the Pope's permission to go to Jerusalem, if they desired it. Probably he didn't mind much where they went, so it was remote, thinking them crack-brained seekers after novelty. They were glad not to be opposed, however, and returned to Venice, where they were all ordained in the summer. But Venice at this time went to war with Turkey, so an expedition to Asia Minor could not be thought of.

If you can't carry out a good and lovely plan the probabilities are that it does not seem so good and lovely to the Lord, and that the delay is His ordering. But an earnest Christian worker is like the unresting stream, which finds its way to the ocean, if not by a direct course, then by taking the first outlet which comes. The obstacle doesn't stop the brook, it only widens its path and increases its usefulness. So the workers decided to go separately to the cities of Italy, do what they could for the good of souls, and wait a definite call.

Xavier spent the year in Bologna, working in the quietest way, preaching, catechising children, nursing the sick—doing any work, however humble, that came in his way.

I suppose the reader wonders, in reading this article, why, when it was to be so short, so much space is spent in preliminaries. That's because the preliminary work has so very much to do with the after success. Francis Xavier began his studies at the age of 20; he started on his first missionary voyage on his thirty-fifth birthday. Fifteen years had been spent in preparation; much of the preparation consisted of practice in self-abnegation, so that there was no need, however humble, no suffering, however great, for which he was not in some measure prepared. So much, so very much harm, is being done in these days of missionary zeal, by well-meaning people who plunge in without counting the cost. The Church has ruled that missionaries can not be accepted till they have had a certain training; one wishes that the poor of our large towns could have the sanctity of their little homes safeguarded in some such way! The mediaeval missionaries were obliged to respect the rights and prejudices of the heathen to whom they went. We can do more good to the stranger at our gates, if we try to understand him, before taking his affairs in hand, even at his own request.

There is another thing: One lingers a little over those tender last days when Xavier was seeking every chance to be near his beloved leader; when that leader, by his gentleness, and knowledge of his workers' needs, was drawing them so close to him that they deliberately took the vow of obedience in addition to those of poverty and chastity, and chose him as their Superior.

To his own great joy Xavier was kept closely beside Ignatius, as his secretary. It must have been a blessed, though busy time. But suddenly Ignatius was obliged to select a missionary for the East Indies. It was the first mission which had been offered to the Society, King John of Portugal being the promoter of the expedition, and Ignatius had to make the appointment at once. One of the two whom he had chosen having fallen ill, he had to send Xavier. It was hurried and a trying time, but Xavier was ready. A rapid journey to Rome for the Papal blessing, a few hours of heart-to-heart converse with his master, and then Xavier started for Lisbon, to be presented to the king, and complete the arrangements for his expedition.

There was a new Governor starting for India—Don Martin Alfonso de Sousa, with whom Xavier was to sail. As Papal Nuncio of the Indies, John III wanted to provide servants and an elegant outfit. But the king's servant felt that he would go better in light marching order and refused to accept anything but the merest necessities.

Now came what was perhaps the most trying part of all his preparation, the constant fellowship with a shipload of the most boisterous adventurers, for a voyage of six months. Only the most dare-devil characters would willingly go off on such an expedition; they were the most uncongenial companions that could be imagined for a man of refinement and spirituality. It is not the work among the miserable that tries one; it is enforced association with what is sordid, mean and profane in those whom we encounter by the way.

But the servant of the King of Love stood this test also. It is related of him that some one seeking him on religious matters was amazed to find him watching a game of chess, in a group of seamen and soldiers, treated with respect, but quite at ease and welcome. The "Padre Santo" was merely letting his light shine where it was most needed at that moment.

It is recorded as a fact that on board that particular ship profanity greatly decreased, and fighting was a rare occurrence. Many of the rough men took him as their spiritual adviser. Considering the effect which the traders sometimes had on the natives of the East, perhaps St. Francis did more for India than he had any idea. He didn't think; he just did "the next thing" as it came along, that was all.

And now came in his Venetian experience: Scurvy broke out as they were crossing the line; the sick were left to recover as best they might; supplies of every kind ran short. Francis was a blessing. He gave up his cabin as a sort of special ward for the desperately sick; he cooked their food; he nursed them; he gave them spiritual comfort; he divided among the sick the special food prepared for him by the governor's servants. Sundays they had divine services, the governor regularly attending.

Francis was very ill himself, but took his chances among the sailors, and in the intervals of delirium was found visiting and teaching the others.

After many adventures they came to the pearl fishery coast which extends from Cape Comorin, near Ceylon. The natives were ready to embrace Christianity—they had to. In a fierce war with the Mussulmans of Madura, the Portuguese had helped them, only on condition that they become Christians if victorious. Now they were ready to pay the price of their victory, probably wondering much what kind of new gods they would have to appease.

They could not have had a more blessed helper than Francis Xavier, who proceeded with the loving thoughtfulness which distinguished all his work. He first called together all the men he could find who could understand the Malabar and the Spanish. These, with much labor, finally translated the Church Catechism into the Malabar, which St. Francis learned by heart. Then he went from village to village, ringing a big bell, and so taught the Christian doctrine. Twice a day, in each village, as he came to them, he would assemble the people and teach the Catechism by rote, till they knew it by heart. He began with the Creed and as he gradually learned the language, he began simple explanations. It got so that he was able to hold a very simple responsive service with them in which they delighted, reciting the Creed with hands crossed over their breasts. In teaching the Commandments, which was harder work, especially with the examples of the Portuguêse settlers before them, he had them recite after each one: "Jesus Christ, Son of the living God, grant us the grace to love Thee above all things."

He had the very greatest success with children, and his methods much resemble those of competent infant-class teachers of later times. It is a little amusing to read his account of the way in which he trained the children to help in the abolition of idols:

"Whenever I hear of any idolatrous worship I go to the place with a great band of children who very soon load the devil with a greater amount of insult and abuse than he has lately received of honor and worship from their parents, relations and acquaintances. The children run at the idols, upset them, dash them down, break them to pieces, spit on them, trample them under foot, kick them about, and, in short, heap upon them every sort of indignity."

Probably the children took to this sort of spiritual exercise.

During the time that St. Francis labored on the coast he spent his greatest efforts on Malacca. He effected some improvement morally, but the people were cold and indifferent. He left, finally, shaking off the dust of his feet against them. But God kept him there long enough so that a very anxious Japanese seeker was brought to him and received the truth as it is in Jesus, joyfully and simply, taking the name of Paul of the Holy Faith at his baptism. This Paul induced St. Francis to go to Japan with him. It was a weary journey and full of danger, but they reached Japan and were cordially received by Paul's family. They made their landing on the Feast of the Assumption in 1549 and went to work at once. In the intervals of teaching and visiting St. Francis spent hours in dictating to Paul, who wrote out by hand in Japanese the chief things of the Christian religion. The prince of that region was anxious to secure Portuguese trade for his ports, and so St. Francis received every honor, and the prince's subjects were informed by proclamation that they might embrace the new religion if they liked it. The trouble was that that coast was rather unprotected and the traders went past it to a better one for their purpose. Of course the prince withdrew his favor and the missionaries had to move on, but not till they had done some good work. Out started the saint on foot, carrying with him in a bundle the necessaries for celebrating Mass, and the Japanese versions of Christian doctrine. On his way he was invited in by one of the nobles who had great curiosity to hear and see the "new bonze from the West." At this castle he preached and baptized seventeen persons, the lady of the house among them. He carefully regulated their way of living according to the Christian ideas—which took some thought and tact—and left them a copy of the doctrine, going away with a yearning heart. Twenty years after this little community was found by a visiting missionary. They begged for news of "Father Francis" and rejoiced in the description of his work in other parts. They had some prayers and litanies which had been carefully preserved and the whole matter was in the care of an old man, a sort of steward of the castle, who died soon after, having guarded the faith as well as he could in that lonely spot, till the king sent another messenger to relieve him.

Portuguese traders all along the coast greeting their holy shipmate with salvos of artillery and great rejoicings, the local governments felt it wise to keep his favor. So the preaching of religion progressed rapidly in Japan. The accounts of his work there are fascinating, especially the story of his public dispute with a Japanese bonze in the presence of the king of Bungo. The bonze undertook to say that he had already met St. Francis and knew all about him fifteen hundred years before and probably was going on to say that transmigration hadn't worked any improvement, as well as other personal remarks, when the saint trapped him up by asking "Where?"

Said the bonze: "Fifteen hundred years ago you sold me fifty pieces of silk at Frenojama."

Francis politely reminded him that Japan was not settled at that time according to the teaching of the bonzes, and the critic retired in disgust.

St. Francis at last decided that he must return to the Pearl Coast, and visit and strengthen the workers whom he had left there. On his return he made one more effort to win Malacca, but was treated with the utmost insolence, the people being led by the governor. On the day he left he went into a little chapel he had used in his former mission and knelt a long time in prayer. When notified that his ship was ready he came out, took off his sandals, and solemnly beat them together, shaking the dust toward the town. The people who stood near cried out at this and asked if he were never to return. "That is as God wills," said the saint, and departed.

He had met great numbers of Chinese in his travels, who had begged him to visit their country. But he had the greatest difficulty in getting a ship, but at last reached the island of San Chan, 120 miles from Canton.

St. Francis was now only 46 years old, but hard work and illness had aged him, and he looked and felt like an old man, broken in health. He was seized with an illness just as he had secured a ship which would take him to Canton. It had taken a long time, for Portuguese sailors, wrecked on the coast of China, were even then languishing in Cantonese prisons and no crew wanted to visit that coast. When he realized that his end was near he employed all his remaining strength in writing full directions to the Christians who had been in his care, all over the East, finding faithful messengers who would take them when they could.

Then he broke down, and attended only by a little Chinese boy, a recent convert, went into delirium.

The test of a person's character is in his involuntary ejaculations when suffering. The last words on the Cross were the result of a lifetime of utter self abnegation and ended in a cry of loving trust.

In this thing St. Francis followed the Master. His cries were fragments of church prayers: "O Sanctissima Trinitas," "Jesu, Fili David, miserere mei."

At last, on a Friday in December, near the hour at which the Saviour died, he looked up happily at the crucifix, and cried "Oh, Lord, in Thee have I trusted; let me never be confounded!"

And then God took him home.

Some of his people, in fear and trembling, prepared him for burial, robing the body in the priestly vestments, and erecting a wooden cross at the head of the grave.

The distinguishing achievement of St. Francis was the carrying of the Gospel into the very heart of heathendom. Hitherto the church had been content to work at the heathen along the edges, so to speak, where they touched Christian communities. But this pioneer boldly penetrated in to the very heart of the barbarian kingdoms, shrinking from nothing, neglecting no simple opportunity, loving all. He taught little children, as they have seldom been taught anywhere, and he commanded the respect of kings and courtiers.

Having shown that such work could be done, the century saw his example followed in Japan, Canada, China. There has been a noble army of martyrs gaining recruits from that day to this. But it was the zeal of Xavier that led the way, and in China, by the grace of God, his dying prayers are being answered now.

The Children's Corner

Dear Children: Besides the Sundays and the days of Holy Week, there is only one Holy Day this month, but it is a very important one, the day on which the Angel Gabriel was sent to the Blessed Virgin Mary, to tell her that she was to be the Mother of our Lord. She was just a young girl, but such a lovely, gentle, God-fearing maiden. God did not send to a lady of high degree, living in some gorgeous palace, because God does not care at all for such things. What He wants is the person who humbly loves and serves Him, day by day, in every little thing. Only such a one can be ready for a holy call. And Mary showed she was ready. When the angel explained to her that if she received the glory of being Jesus' Mother, she would have to bear a great deal of suffering with Him, so that it would be as if a sword pierced her very heart, she said at once, "Behold the handmaid of the Lord; be it unto me according to thy word." Some people, when they are asked to do some hard thing for God, shrink back and say, "Oh, I am not good enough; I don't know enough!" But don't you do that, when you get a real chance to do some thing to help God's work; just think that if God wants you to do it, He is able to make you wise enough and good enough.

The Blessed Mother did suffer with her Son, and as you attend the stations each week, think how brave and patient she was and try to serve Him, in your own way, as well. The Feast of the Annunciation (that is, the announcement to Mary) comes on March 25, but this year we shall not be able to keep it on that day. You have already learned that Easter comes on March 27 this year, so Good Friday must be on the 25th, you see, and that is such a sad day that the feast will have to give way. When a very important church day comes on the same date with a greater, it is usually "transferred;" that is, kept on some other day as near the right time as possible. The Collect for this day is one of the oldest we have, written by Gelasius, in 490, if you want to mark it.

Have you ever noticed the Lenten Gospels?

The Gospel for the first Sunday in Lent, tells how Jesus was tried and tempted by the devil; that for the second Sunday, tells about a woman who came to Him because her daughter was tormented by a devil (not Satan himself, but one of his bad spirits.) The third Sunday in Lent, the Gospel tells how Jesus was casting a devil out of a man, and how He taught the people that they must fill their hearts with good things, or evil spirits will seize on their idle minds.

So, through the Gospels, we are taught that evil is ever with us, and we must keep busy with good things, and resist the devil. But it is pretty discouraging, this trying to be good, for just as soon as you make a good resolution, the devil will start bothering and tempting you about that very thing, and put difficulties in your way. If you mean to be kind and gentle, he will stir some one up to be particularly unkind to you just then. If you feel you have been rather "piggy" about candy, and resolve that, to show your love for Jesus, you will do without it entirely this Lent, then it is certainly surprising how many times it will be harder than usual to give it up and say, "No, thank you." For instance, I know some children downtown who found it very trying to have that great candy show at the Third Regiment Armory, just at the begining of Lent.

There's always something to make it hard, but that is the test of love. So the Church gives us a "refreshment Sunday," right in the middle of Lent, the fourth Sunday in Lent. The Collect asks that we may mercifully be relieved; that God will make us feel His loving forbearance; that He will help us along through the rest of the season, and all our lives. And in the Gospel, we see how Jesus wonderfully fed a great multitude that was trying to follow Him faithfully. They had nothing themselves, but He gave them all they needed. So, in your case, perhaps you have been a little "stuck up" at the beginning of your Lent, and it hurt your feelings to find what a weak, silly, selfish little thing you really were. All right, that's good for you, now you will depend on Jesus to help you through the rest of the time, and the more you ask Him the more He will do.

The fifth Sunnday in Lent is called Passion Sunday, because both in the Epistle and the Gospel we are reminded how Christ suffered, not only by His death, but by His continual endurance of the hatefulness of wicked men.

Gregory wrote the Collect (590) and also the Collect for Palm Sunday, "the Sunday next before Easter," as the Prayerbook calls it.

Holy Week can be such a precious time, if then you will try to think especially of what our Lord did, on each day, as it comes. If I give you a summary of the week, will you remember it each day and keep your thoughts on Him in that day's acts of love?

If you want to read them, here are the Bible readings about each event:

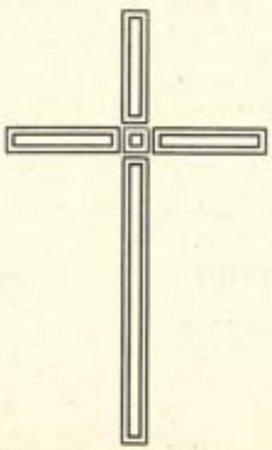
Saturday—He went to stay at Bethany, a little village near Jerusalem, with some friends. St. John 12: 1-11.

Sunday—Jesus rode into Jerusalem. St. Mark 11: 1-11.

Monday—St. Mark 11: 12-19; St. Luke 19: 45-48.

Tuesday—(Jesus' last working day on earth). St. Luke 21.

Wednesday—Jesus stayed quietly with His friends and disciples, talking to them, and geting ready for the end. Judas went out and promised to betray Him. St. Luke 22: 1-6.



Thursday—The Last Supper, and the Agony in Gethsemane, and the Betrayal. St. Matthew 26: 17-56.

Friday—Jesus died for us. St. John 19: 1-30.

Saturday—The Sepulchre was sealed and guarded. St. Matthew 27: 62-66.

Easter Day—Jesus arose from the dead. St. Matthew 28: 1-10.

God give you a happy Easter.

PARISH NOTES.

The much needed repairs on the clergy house will be commenced soon after Easter.

The Feast of the Annunciation, transferred from the 25th of March, will be observed on the Monday after Low Sunday. On Sunday night the first vespers of the feast will be observed with Solemn Evensong, a special sermon and solemn procession.

A goodly number of persons have visited the church on weekdays to offer intercessions for the objects assigned, and the services at noon have been well attended. We trust that the habit thus commenced of coming to the church to pray before the Blessed Sacrament will not be given up. There should be an increasing number of our people frequenting God's house during the working days.

The Lenten retreats have been well attended. Fr. Anderson, of the Order of the Holy Cross, conducted the quiet day for women on Mid-Lent Sunday, and the parish house proved well suited for such a day. About seventy made the retreat. The retreat for men and boys was held on Passion Sunday and was conducted by the rector, about twenty being present. Fr. Underhill conducted the quiet day for St. Mary's Guild on the Thursday in Passion Week.

The envelopes for the coming year have been distributed, but there should be more sent out. The increase of our offering has been most gratifying and the parish is in a good financial condition, but if each one were doing his part we might say more than this. There are many of the communicants who are willing to take all the blessings, God is sending them through His Church, but who are unwilling to give even so small an amount as five cents a week for the support of the parish. Any man or woman who has an income from any source whatever ought not to rest content until some portion of it be regularly set aside for God.

The vestry, at its regular meeting in March, voted to divide the Easter offering between the current expenses of the parish and the mission work of the American Church. This is a remarkable step forward in the parish history, and is, we believe, one result of our Lenten prayers. There could not be a stronger witness to the growth of the spiritual life of any congregation than an act of faith such as this, and the greater number of our parishes that learn to forget self the more rapid will be the growth of our communion and the deeper its spiritual life. We urge that the members of the congregation make an act of thanksgiving at mass in acknowledgment of God's mercy in thus leading us to make this offering. "Give and it shall be given unto you; good measure, pressed down and running over."

SOME MESSENGERS AND WHERE THEY WENT.—VIII.

The sixteenth century, the time of the Reformation and the consequent disruptions and upheavals, was not a time especially conducive to missionary enterprise. But the colonists and explorers, in their travels, generally took with them their own clergy. One need only read history to appreciate the labors and hardships of these devoted men. The French and Spanish priests, who carried the Word through the North and West of our own land, have never been equaled in their understanding of the Indian character, and their success in winning those heathen to Christ.

However, we must follow the history of our own branch of the Catholic Church.

There was little done for a while. In Golden Gate Park, San Francisco, stands the stone cross erected recently to mark the spot where the crew of Drake's ship, the "Pelican," held the first English service in this country. In 1587 an Indian named Manteo was baptized on Roanoke Island. From this time on British colonists declared one of their chief objects to be the spread of Christ's Kingdom. But this was carried on by individuals, as they chose or could; there was an order of Charles I in 1634 placing foreign congregations and clergy under the care of the Bishop of London. But, as an old writer of the time quaintly said, "for a bishop to live at one end of the world and his Church at the other, must be in a great measure uncomfortable for the bishop and useless to the people." An investigation was made about forty years after which showed that there were not more than three or four English clergy in all North America.

The need of some special effort was beginning to be realized. During Puritan times John Eliot had labored among the Indians of New England. The worst obstacle in the way was the dense, stupid ignorance of the settlers themselves. Many of them did not believe that the Indians had souls; the rougher ones had fantastic ideas about the Indians, which made them cruel beyond anything. For instance, a party of men one day upset a canoe, in which was an Indian squaw with her papoose strapped to her back. The canoe was righted and the party about to go on, when one of the men exclaimed, "I've always heard that Indian babies could swim. Let's see this one do it." The baby was torn from its mother's arms and thrown into the water, where, of course, the little thing was soon drowned, the mother being forcibly held back. A Sioux Indian, who was an art student in this city a short time ago, told the writer that among his people the practice of scalping was attributed to the English settlers, who in a time of great danger offered rewards for Indian scalps.

One thing is certain, the English pioneers did not make good their promise to spread the Kingdom of God. Eliot did nobly, and his efforts attracted the attention of "The Long Parliament." Cromwell ordered a general collection to be made throughout England and Wales, which raised £12,000. The income from this maintained missionaries in New England and New York. The society for carrying on this work was known as "The New England Society." On the accession of Charles II this was reorganized, so as to use the discipline and worship of the Church of England, but men of all faiths worked together for it. After the Revolution it went on working in British America and the West Indies.

Long, long after our own American Church acknowledged its debt to John Eliot, when the Indian Bible, compiled by him with so much loving care, which had lain useless merely as a historical relic, was found to be in a dialect used by the natives in one of our Western Missions, and the clergy found it vastly helpful.

"We are not divided," the hymn is right. We disagree with each other, we have many methods, many perverted ideas of the Truth as it is in Jesus, but God takes the earnest service and unifies it all, in His own way, in His own time.

After the accession of Charles II a grave peril threatened, not only the Church, but the souls of its members. Meetings were held, which were supposed to be for the free discussion of religious matters, but which had become hot beds of heresy, or even atheism. To counteract the carelessness about holy things and to promote the spiritual life of church members many small guilds were organized all through England. In London alone there were forty-one. These became "very instrumental in promoting, in some churches, daily prayers, preparatory sermons to the Holy Communion, the administration of the Sacrament every Sunday and Lord's Day, and many other excellent designs conformable to the doctrine and constitution of the Church of England, which have not a little contributed to promote religion."

The above is quoted from a member of the Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge, which grew out of the intense desire to spread the truth.

Along with the carelessness of the times as to religion there had been a great increase in immorality and profanity. Two London clergymen had in their guilds begun the noble work, which spread, as told above, until it grew into something still higher than the safeguarding of religion—the wish to carry it to others. The first efforts of this kind were directed to establishing schools for poor children, evening schools for their ignorant elders, publishing clean literature to replace the dubious romances of the times, and theological works in simple language. Especially was interest taken in the soldiers and sailors. Conversation with them led to a keen desire to carry the gospel abroad.

At last, in 1705, the Society (known as the "S. P. C. K."), began a work which it has carried on ever since—publishing cheap editions of the Bible and Prayer Book.

The Prayer Book has been called "the Church's best missionary." There is a diocesan missionary in New England who has always made it his practice to leave copies of the Prayer Book with those who would receive it, at the various points visited. The thoughtful Yankee farmers, working out their salvation as best they may in remote settlements, are then ready for him on his next visit, with volleys of questions, which he is only too glad to answer.

In 1722 the faculty of Yale College announced to the trustees that they felt it necessary to enter the Episcopal Church and adhere to its teachings. Without acquaintance of any English clergy in a colony where Puritanism was the settled order of things, with no one to answer their questions or settle their doubts, they had literally "read their way" into the Church.

So, the reader will agree with me, it was a very providential thing that the publication of the Prayer Book in a cheap form occurred at about the time that the Church of England began definite missionary work in the American colonies.

The most devoted missionary at this time was the Rev. Thomas Bray. He was a Church clergyman, deeply interested in the movement for carrying the Church's influence abroad, and was very active in the S. P. C. K. Finally, the Bishop of London appointed him one of the two commissaries who were empowered to visit the American colonies, and encourage the few scattered clergy there, bringing back a report to the home Church.

No money was subscribed, but Doctor Bray did not wait on that account. He hastily disposed of all his small property and with the proceeds of that, and some money which he borrowed on his own credit, he sailed for Maryland. There is no doubt that the action of Convocation, March 13, 1701, was due to his vivid descriptions of what he saw and heard on this side, and his earnest pleading. The petition, praying the king, William III, to authorize the founding of a missionary society, was signed by Doctor Bray. The king very promptly referred the matter to the Solicitor-General, subscriptions came in in generous measure and the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in Foreign Parts became a corporation and held its first regular meeting at Lambeth Palace, June 27, 1701.

Too much can not be said in praise of the Commissaries, Rev. Drs. Thomas Bray and James Blair. Chiefly at their own expense they went out on a rather unpromising errand, for the Church in the South, free from Puritan hostility, and away from Episcopal oversight and discipline, had grown lax. The tales told of the careless irreverence of that time make sad reading. This only roused the Commissaries to greater energy. Doctor Bray felt that they needed more clergy and better discipline and more direct attention from the authorities at home. Doctor Blair felt that the youth of the colony needed systematic instruction along Church lines. He founded the College of William and Mary, next to Harvard, the oldest school in this country. It has suffered so much, both in the Revolution and the Civil War, that it has never recovered, but it has a glorious record. The oldest literary society in this country, the Phi Beta Kappa, was organized there in 1776. Thomas Jefferson and John Marshall were educated there, and George Washington was Chancellor. Its direct result was the training of young men of character and ability, who were ready to minister to the Church's needs.

Before closing this account of the situation in America when the Church of England began definite work, the reader may like a sort of summary of the religious conditions in the colonies at that time.

Maine and New Hampshire were founded by Churchmen, and in the time of Charles I there was an attempt made to give them control of the regions inhabited by their Puritan neighbors. Ferdinando Gorges, the proprietor of Maine, and John Mason, the proprietor of New Hampshire, were given a sort of authority over the rest of New England. The Puritans, greatly roused, arranged for a great beacon to be lighted on a certain hill (Beacon Hill) as the signal for a general rally if the intruders should come. But the Churchmen were careless, the Puritans were vigilant, and all New England became Puritan. In Connecticut, Churchmen had a particularly hard time, for some reason. The writer, when a child, often saw the old permits issued on payment of a certain sum to the town authorities, which allowed members of the Church of England to attend services of their own. Many an out of the way farm house in Connecticut has such a certificate, and the family is justly proud of it.

In Virginia, as has been said, there was not this hostility to contend with. But perhaps the scattered Church members in the North had the best of it, with their sturdy adherence to the truth as they had learned it. The Southerners were, in the middle of the century, woefully lax about religious duties. But those who were exiled when Cromwell came into power, came to Virginia and infused new earnestness into the religious life of the colony. They were men who had sacrificed everything for king and religion; they would not take that religion lightly.

Pennsylvania and New Jersey were chiefly in the hands of the Quakers, but even there a feeling for the Church was gaining; Maryland was chiefly occupied by Churchmen.

The Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in Foreign Parts (the "S. P. G."), sent out two missionaries to make another general survey, confer with the Church clergy whom they might find, and do what work they could. They found that the majority of the clergy were in Virginia and Maryland; there were fifty altogether, of whom twenty-five were in Virginia and seventeen in Maryland.

In all the rest of the colonies there were only four Churches:

Charleston.—St. Philip's, 1682, through the gifts and efforts of Samuel and Millicent Jackson. There had been no religious work done till then, the scattered settlers living on large estates, rather far from each other.

Boston.—King's Chapel, 1689. When the Puritans got control of Maine and New Hampshire they ejected the Church clergy, of whom there were two. But the Rev. Robert Ratcliffe managed to get the assistance of the royal Governor, in Boston, and there on May 30, 1686, the Church Service was first publicly read. Three years later a church was built and called King's Chapel.

Philadelphia.—Christ Church, 1695. The S. P. G. missionary in Pennsylvania, George Keith, had been an influential Quaker, and when he came into the Church many of his friends came with him. The Rev. Evan Evans, his successor, is said to have baptized 800 Quakers in six years.

New York.—Trinity Church, 1697. In Boston and Philadelphia Church people suffered from the hostility of their Puritan and Quaker neighbors. But in New York the placid Dutch accepted the English Church as calmly as they had accepted the English Governor. There was a rough sort of building in the fort where the Dutch Reformed meetings and the Church services were held alternately. Then, after the ordination of the Rev. Mr. Vesey, Trinity parish became the home of all the English in that colony.

THE STATEMENT OF THE ROUND TABLE CONFERENCE.

Last month we could only give the bare fact of the holding of the Round Table Conference. This month we are permitted to speak of it more largely and to print the Statement in which is embodied the work of the Conference.

The two emotions that were present to all the members of the Conference were surprise and gratitude. And these emotions were due to a common cause—that not only was there a blessed sense of fellowship in Christ, of oneness of spirit, and of energetic mutual goodwill, but that all who were present found themselves in such a measure of intellectual agreement and could express themselves in the same language. At intervals, during the day, all fell to prayer, led by one or another among the priests who were present. These seasons of devotion drew all hearts together and seemed to renew the communion effected at the Altar in the morning. And it was in this atmosphere of united supplication that the Conference was conducted. There was no disposition to press, each man, his own view of truth; instead of that each man vied with others in acknowledging his own ignorance and proneness to mistake and in looking to God to make known the truth in which all could unite.

It will be seen that there is no attempt to carry out the propositions on their negative side. The Conference felt that it was far more important to affirm the truth than to rebut error, to recognize what God has done and is doing, than what men have failed to do, to dwell upon what we ought to do, than on what we ought not to do.

The subject proposed for consideration at the Conference was "Essentials for the Perpetuation of the Corporate Christian Fellowship as a Basis for Reunion." This proposition was not very definitely before the minds of those at the Conference, but the language determined the course which the Conference took. The keynote was "Fellowship," and that word received a considerable amount of definition before the Conference closed. It was taken to mean, first the life of God, then the life of men, as in Him and drawing their spiritual support from Him, then the life of the Church as the Body of Christ, "the blessed company of all faithful people." And as we have said, the Conference did not only talk about fellowship, it illustrated it.

We print the preamble and the statement.

PREAMBLE.

The undersigned, clergymen and laymen of the Protestant Episcopal Church, having met in unofficial conference at Trinity Chapel, New York, on the 27th and 28th of January, 1910, find themselves unanimously in agreement upon the following statement, which they believe to be warranted by the teaching of Holy Scripture and of the Universal Church; and they humbly recommend it to the consideration of their brethren of their own communion and of other communions as common ground upon which men of goodwill may discuss, without scruple of conscience, the manner in which those who are in the fellowship of Christ may become reunited in one communion and fellowship with each other.

STATEMENT.

1. The life of God, revealed as the life of the blessed Trinity in Unity, is a life of fellowship.

2. God has created man in His own image. This likeness He has perfected in Himself, taking human nature in the Person of Jesus Christ. As God's life is one of fellowship the life of man is also one of fellowship.

3. God's revelation of Himself in His life of fellowship is received and made our own through our fellowship with Him, and in Him with one another.

4. God's purpose to bring us into fellowship with Himself, and in Him with one another, is manifested in Jesus Christ His Son, "who for us men and for our salvation came down from heaven and was incarnate by the Holy Ghost of the Virgin Mary and was made man."

5. God's purpose to bring us into fellowship with Himself, and in Him with one another, manifested in Jesus Christ His Son, is made effectual by the operation of the Holy Ghost.

6. Our fellowship with God is in Jesus Christ through the oneness in Him of all mankind. This fellowship is a mystery so far above our natural state that by our own strength we can not attain unto it. It is God's free gift, originating in His creative will and purpose, and administered by the presence and power of the Holy Ghost.

7. God's purpose of fellowship for us as manifested in Christ to be realized in us by the gift and presence of the Holy Ghost, becomes effectual as it finds outward and visible embodiment.

8. This outward and visible embodiment which makes effectual God's purpose of fellowship for man as manifested in Christ is the Holy Catholic Church.

9. The Holy Catholic Church, which is the embodiment of God's purpose of fellowship for man as manifested in Jesus Christ, involves the fact of continuous life divinely given and outwardly and visibly assured.

10. Fellowship with Christ in His Church comes from Christ's communication of His life to us, of which the sign and means is Baptism duly administered with water in the Name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Ghost.

11. The fellowship of the baptized with Christ, and with one another as sharers of the one life received from Him, calls for some corporate and articulate expression of their common faith in Christ and of their worship of Him; and this common faith of those who are baptized into the fellowship of Christ and share His life is expressed in the Apostles' and Nicene Creeds.

12. For those who are in the fellowship of Christ the characteristic corporate act of worship is the Holy Communion as instituted by Christ Himself for the continual remembrance of the sacrifice of His death and for the Communion of His Body and His Blood, to those who are in fellowship with Him, for the strengthening and refreshing of their souls.

13. This corporate act of worship as instituted by Jesus Christ calls for some minister who bears Christ's commission to preside in the assembly of those who are in fellowship with Christ.

14. Jesus Christ, remaining a priest forever, ascended into heaven but present by by His Spirit in His Church on earth, now acts in the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper through those who bear His commission.

15. This continuing priesthood of the Lord Jesus Christ abides in the whole fellowship, the outward and visible organ of which priesthood is the continuous ministry.

16. As the Church is the outward and visible Body of Christ empowered by His Spirit, the Ministry, through which Christ acts in His Body, derives its powers continually from Him and receives its authority from Him by the outward sign and means of ordination.

17. The form of ordination by its essential uniformity should express the oneness of the Body of Christ, which is the blessed company of all faithful people.

18. Ordination has been effected from sub-apostolic times by the laying on of the hands of the historic episcopate and prayer; and this method of ordination, if restored to the whole fellowship, would be an effective bond of its unity in Christ.

A few remarks may be added on the Statement. Guarded as it is from any extravagance of expression it is not a series of platitudes. The very withdrawal* of one member of the Conference, who had voted for the Statement section by section, shows that it is not a colorless and pointless document. In fact, to those who are willing to examine the Statement with some care, it will become evident that there is a unity and a logical order in it that lends it force and effectiveness. There is a recognition of God as the Source of truth, and so of authority—as the Author of life, and so of unity—as the Fount of love, and so of harmony and joy. It is clearly implied that it belongs to God to give, that it is man's place to receive; that what comes from God unites us, what comes only from ourselves separates and divides. All this is fundamental and fruitful.

*Mr. William Jay Schieffelin withdraws his signature upon the ground that, on reconsideration of the Statement since its adoption by the Conference, it seems to him to contain too much of theological definition to serve as a useful basis for the discussion of Christian Unity.—Holy Cross Magazine.

The Children's Corner

DEAR CHILDREN: Lent is over and the happy Eastertime is here. Is it to be a blessed Easter, or are you going to say "Now Lent is over I m going to have an easy time?"

Be careful. Don't, for instance, if you have begun some special bit of work for God, drop it entirely just because Lent is over. Can't you keep it up a little longer? Lent is forty days long, I know, but the time upon which we are entering now is often called "The Great Forty Days;" it brings to mind the precious time, when Jesus Christ, in His Resurrection Body, spent hours and days and weeks with His disciples, turning their Easter joy into definite purpose that they would live and die for Him henceforth. Be earnest. Lent, if you have spent it well, has showed you how you may live nearer to Jesus; try to stay near Him and do all you can for Him, now and always.

Here are the dates for the Collects this month and then I am going to tell you a story:

First Sunday after Easter, 1549.
Second Sunday after Easter, 1549.
Third Sunday after Easter, 590 (Leo).
Fourth Sunday after Easter, 490 (Gelasius).

St. Mark's Day comes April 25. The Collect was written in 1549.

St. Mark was a very young man at the time that Jesus was teaching and working in Palestine, but he followed with the great crowd that was always about our Lord, and there is reason to think that his was a wealthy family, which ministered to Jesus, entertaining Him and His disciples, and furnishing things that were needed. When the Apostles began to go out as missionaries St. Paul took this young man with him for a time.

St. Mark became Bishop of Alexandria and was a faithful witness to the Faith. There was a great heathen festival at which the whole city was present, and those who wished to have any of the fun must sacrifice to a heathen goddess. St. Mark forbade his people to take part and did so much to stop the festivities that the heathen in fury dragged him out and killed him.

The sacrifice was very easy, and it wasn't much of a thing to do. All you had to do was to throw some grains of incense into a little charcoal furnace which stood out in an open place. You needn't even say any heathen prayer, the person in charge would do that. A little thing to do, wasn't it? And then you would have such a nice time afterward—you could go to the theater and see the games, and have all sorts of nice things to eat, and—most of all—you would be with the crowd, and no one would make fun of you. There were lots and lots of Christians in Alexandria at that time. Probably many of them thought St. Mark was very foolish to make such a fuss over a little thing like that. But you can see, can't you, that if a thing is wrong, it is wrong all the time? What those people did would have been seen by all the people around; it would have showed that they cared more for having a good time than they did for being Christians. This is going to be a short letter, for you have a great deal to think about just now; but in all your Easter joy remember what Jesus suffered to get it for you, and try, like St. Mark, to be faithful to Him and show your love for Him, in every little thing.

PARISH NOTES.

The Wednesday afternoon Bible Class will be discontinued after May 1.

Recently a white altar frontal was presented to St. Augustine's Mission, North Philadelphia.

The Paschal candle was decorated by Miss Prichett. The design this year is most pleasing.

A missionary mass meeting is being arranged to be held in the Academy of Music on the evening of May the 9th, the evening before the meeting of the convention.

The work of renovating the Clergy House has commenced. No repairs have been made since the house was built and there is much that needs attention.

The Sacrament of Confirmation was administered this year by the Rt. Rev. H. D. Robinson, Bishop of Nevada. The Bishop gave a most interesting account of the condition of the Church in his diocese.

The prayers of the congregation are asked for God's guidance for the Diocesan Convention, which meets in the Church of St. Luke and the Epiphany during the second week in May.

Again the magazine asks for contributions toward its expenses. As our people do not patronize our advertisers it is difficult to obtain any large number of advertisements, and aside from this the magazine should be supported by the congregation.

The Woman's Auxiliary held its last meeting for the winter on Wednesday, April 6. The report for the year was most encouraging. In addition to the money raised for various objects, two large boxes have been sent to Oneida Indians and to a missionary in the diocese of Milwaukee. The work was exhibited on the morning of April 7 and the boxes packed in the afternoon.

The Altar Guild is planning a new white cope for festivals. The cope that is at present in use was made many years ago, and is wearing out. The new vestment will be of a heavy white and yellow brocade and the orphreys will be embroidered with scenes from the life of our Lord. The Guild is also making a set of green vestments for the cathedral at Salina, Kansas, and a banner of St. Katharine for use at St. Clement's. The banner is to be a memorial.

During the Easter octave there were 472 communions made, 250 confessions heard, and 316 communion cards sent in. Those who neglected to send in their cards are asked to do so now, as the parish list is in process of revision. The communions in the octave last year were 454. The collections on Ascension Day will be used to pay the expenses of those who are in need of a holiday this summer and are unable to obtain the necessary funds. As we have no Seashore Home this year, the attempt will be made to secure accommodation for our people at various places.

ST. CLEMENT'S PARISH.

PHILADELPHIA, PA., March 28, 1910.

We, the undersigned judges, appointed by the vestry of St. Clement's Church to hold an election this day, Easter Monday, March 28, 1910, for twelve vestrymen, to serve for the ensuing parochial year, do hereby certify that pursuant to notice and in conformity with the Charter and By-Laws of said St. Clement's Church, the polls were opened this day, March 28, 1910, at 12 o'clock noon, in the Parish House, and closed at 2 p. m., and that all the votes were cast for the following named gentlemen-communicants of this parish:

Mr. Francis D. Wetherill
Mr. G. Theodore Roberts
Mr. Francis M. Berry
Mr. George H. Lea
Mr. S. McKean Bayard
Mr. Clinton Rogers Woodruff
Mr. Caleb F. Wright
Mr. George Lewis Mayer
Mr. W. W. Lafkens
Mr. Stevenson H. Walsh
Mr. Edward A. Casey
Mr. J. Lawrence Wetherill

We, therefore, certify that the above named persons were duly elected vestrymen to serve for the next parish year.

F. D. WETHERILL,
CALEB F. WRIGHT,
Judges of Election.

HYMNS FOR MAY.

1st—436, 411, 620, 447; p. m., 143, 468, 143.

5th—300, 148, 147, 316, 322, 304.

8th—300, 148, 147, 304; p. m., 300, 149, 147, 248, 304.

15th—157, 470, 209, 156, 154; p. m., 207, 157, 209, 156, 470, 154.

22d—160, 158, 601, 161; p. m., 160, 158, 163, 601, 161.

26th—316, 310, 309, 197.

29th—316, 310, 309, 297; p. m., 316, 311 pt. 1, 315, 309 (1), 197.

The annual Easter meeting of the vestry was held on the Tuesday in Easter week in the clergy house. Mr. Francis D. Wetherill was appointed Rector's warden, and Mr. Stevenson H. Walsh was elected accounting warden. Messrs. Bayard, Casey and J. Lawrence Wetherill were elected delegates to the diocesan convention.

HOLY WEEK AND EASTER.

The services during Holy Week were well attended. On Palm Sunday, for the first time at St. Clement's, the full and proper ceremonies for the blessing of the palms was carried out. The antiphons had been carefully prepared by Mr. Sears, and the service was most impressive and dignified in all its details.

On Maundy Thursday, Solemn Mass was sung at 9 o'clock and the Blessed Sacrament carried in procession to the Altar of Repose, which had been prepared in St. John's Chapel, where many visited it during the day. On Good Friday the congregations were large both at the Mass of the Pre-Sanctified and the Three Hours. Many from other parishes came to worship with us.

The communions on Easter day and during the octave were slightly in excess of last year and the spirit of joy was manifest throughout the day. At 11 o'clock the choir, under the capable leadership of Mr. Sears, rendered Mozart's Seventh Mass, with accompaniment of organ and tympani.

Lent at St. Clement's has been a time of unusual spiritual refreshment for all. To many it has proved more helpful than in many years. This is unquestionably due to the willing response of the congregation to a special work of prayer. Our Lord has abundantly blessed the prayers that have been offered in His Presence and in His Name.

SOME MESSENGERS AND WHERE THEY WENT.

IX.

Next follows a dark and shameful chapter in English Church history.

The Commissaries, at their own expense and risk, had verified the reports of Churchpeople in the colonies wanting pastors. Devoted men had gone over, under the direction of the "Venerable Society," to care for those few sheep in the wilderness. In the newly founded colleges were young men awaiting their call to their ministry. But how was that ministry to be kept up? There were many "ready and desirous," with no one to confirm them. There were candidates for Holy Orders, with no one to ordain them. All Episcopal functions had to be performed in the mother country. The clergy were either imported—foreigners, already, for the new country was growing rapidly and its clergy should have been natives—or else some few went over to England and were ordained.

It really would have been a very simple matter to have maintained an American Bishop. The colonists themselves, those who belonged to the Church, of course wanted their own Bishop very much. Burlington, N. J., was selected as the best location for an Episcopal residence, and large sums of money were subscribed by English church people. A new England clergyman bequeathed a farm for the purpose.

But the Established Church of England could not proceed without government sanction in any matter, and the peers of the realm at that time were very nervous about antagonizing the Dissenters. They were strong in the American Colonies, which were in that excited condition which finally resulted in the Revolutionary War, and even at home the Dissenting vote was highly valued in local matters. So these worthy Christian gentlemen, these Defenders of the Faith, simply ignored all efforts to get definite action in the matter of an American Bishop.

American church members in those days were martyrs in will; martyrs in the matter of petty persecutions; very nearly martyrs indeed, just before the Revolution, when the clergy were threatened and shot at in the performance of their duties. They could receive ordination only by returning to England for it, and the Ordination vow there was preceded by the following:

"Every person about to be ordained priest or deacon shall, before ordination, in the presence of the Archbishop or Bishop by whom he is about to be ordained, at such time as he may appoint, . . . take and subscribe the Oath of Allegiance and Supremacy, according to the form set forth . . ." (Act of Uniformity of 14 Car. II; amended XXIX Victoriae).

In other words, since Charles II's time, clergy at their Ordination had taken and subscribed an oath of allegiance to the realm. And, with all others who taught, in religious or secular matters, from the Archbishop to the poorest schoolmaster, they had to subscribe to the following:

"I, ———, do declare that it is not lawful upon any pretense whatever to take arms against the King; and that I do abhor that traitorous position of taking arms by his authority against his person or against those commissionated by him; and that I will conform to the Liturgy of the Church of England, as it is now by law established."

Any schoolboy can understand what an amount of moral courage it required to subscribe to the above, and then return to work in a region controlled by the Dissenters, and preparing for an uprising against the home government. To struggle, moreover, exposed to the attacks of their own fellow-churchmen at home, who sought to ease their consciences by proving that the colonial clergy were not worthy of support. One missionary was severely dealt with, on the grounds of alleged "transgression of Church discipline." The transgression turned out to be that "he had the Blessed Sacrament as often as twice in a month . . . and other unusual observances." The most unusual observance, and no doubt the one which led to his summons, was rebuking the English Governor for some scandalous occurrence, and forbidding him that same Blessed Sacrament, as any faithful priest must do, if he is to follow his instructions:

"See that ye never cease your labor . . . until ye have done all that lieth in you . . . that there be no place left among you, either for error in religion or for viciousness in life."

The honor roll of those who kept the Church alive in this country, with the help of the noble S. P. G., is a very long one.

Oh, yes; they were Tories—most of them had to be. Their vows bound them in obedience to a Church which was controlled by the State. Many of them were Americans whose own sympathies were with the American cause, so that they struggled against their own feelings as well as the feelings of their neighbors. We can not realize it sufficiently—think, that the American was the first branch of the Catholic Church which was free from State control, and that the despised, persecuted, maligned, half-paid S. P. G. missionaries made this possible.

The Children's Corner

DEAR CHILDREN:

If you had been in Rome, about fifteen hundred years ago, you might have had your choice, on the 25th day of April, of two events. One, a great procession, with flowers and singing, passing out of the Flaminian Gate over a bridge to a strange-looking sort of shrine just outside the town. You would have heard the people praying to a god whom they called "Robigus," to protect the young corn from blight, and to give them a prosperous year. After the procession was over there would be games and the theater.

Or you could join another procession with good St. Gregory at its head, just such a procession as we shall probably have in Church on the evening of Sunday, May 1, singing a litany, and marching around the city, just as our clergy and choir march around the Church now, and back to the Church of St. Peter. You would have heard prayers offered for God's blessing on the young corn and other things they needed. Look in your Prayer Book, about page 41, in the section marked "Prayers," and read the two "For Fruitful Seasons." Then you will understand the purpose of Rogation.

Rogation means "Supplication," or special prayer. The use of Rogation Days, as we have them, began in France in 477. There had been a great earthquake, and it had destroyed the young plants, and a great deal of damage had been done by fire. So the Bishop of Vienne ordered three days' rogations—litanies on the three days before Ascension. The people took so much comfort in them that it was decided to have the rogations every year, for the good of the country. The custom spread, and the Church throughout southern Europe observed it.

This is described by an Englishman, writing in 1554, telling how the queen and four Bishops, with all sorts of great folks, went in procession to different Churches, singing litanies, on the three days before Ascension. Besides, on Rogation Sunday (Sunday before Ascension Day) the choir and clergy marched about the Church, as we do now, to definite points in the great Churches; before Mass, the procession went to the high altar; other services, to the font, or some side altar. Remember, the old English cathedrals are pretty big places, and marching about one took lots of time. So now, let us all go to Church on the evening of May 1, and as we respond in the litany, notice how it prays for every sort of trouble that human beings could have. The litany, as we have it now, was arranged by Archbishop Cranmer in 1544, when England was at war with France and Scotland. In the Prayer Books of the time it was called "this common prayer of procession." Cranmer loved processions, and spent much time arranging hymns to be sung at such times. For the Easter procession he arranged our beautiful "Hail, Festal Day," pretty much as we sing it nowadays.

You notice I didn't say Cranmer wrote the litany; I said he arranged it; he took old litanies that had been used ever since that time of which I told you, in the fifth century, and placed them in an orderly fashion, and translated them into English that the common people could sing. Now take your book, page 30; you see it is to be used on Sundays, Wednesdays, and Fridays. I wonder how many of you ever think that it is being said in our Parish Church every Friday at noon. If you can't come, try to remember to say the first part, which is really the litany proper, addressed to the Father, Son and Holy Ghost—the Blessed Trinity. Those words were found in an old litany of the tenth century. What comes after those short paragraphs are called the Suffrages. Some of them have been used a very long time. Don't you want to mark them in your own books? It is lovely to have a Prayer Book all carefully dated in that way; during the services it reminds one how many thousands of faithful Christian folks have prayed in these same words before us.

Well, then——

The first date is A. D. 1000 for the beginning of the litany, through "Holy, Blessed and Glorious Trinity." "Remember not, Lord," used to be sung at the end of the penitential Psalms, in Lent. It is very old, but I think you might mark it 1089.

Now comes a group called the "Depreciations"—prayers against evil—shortened a little from the way they were used at Salisbury and York Cathedrals, about 1089.

About the time that Archbishop Cranmer was arranging the litany in England a German Archbishop, Herman, was doing the same for his people. Sometimes Cranmer used some of those petitions. He did so in the part that begins "By the mystery of Thy Holy Incarnation," and you can mark that 1543. You notice that every clause ends with "Good Lord, deliver us." We have finished the list of dangers from which we wish God to deliver us.

Now, the next part is called the "Intercessions," or prayers for others. It is right and necessary to ask God to help and defend you, but you should never stop praying without a prayer for some one else. As one writer says, "Those who forget themselves in prayer for others are very dear to Him."

"We sinners do beseech Thee to hear us," 1089.

"Christian Rulers and Magistrates," 1789 (American).

"Bishops, Priests and Deacons," 1662.

"Laborers into Thy harvest," 1892, special for missions.

"Bless and keep all Thy people," 1089.

"To all nations unity," 500.

"An heart to love and fear Thee," "To all Thy people increase of grace," Herman, 1543.

"To bring into the way of truth," 600 (French).

"To strengthen such as do stand," from an old prayer of the fourth century, in Africa.

"Succor, help and comfort," 1549.

"Prisoners and captives," 1089; "Fatherless children and widows," "Mercy upon all men," Cranmer, 1549.

"Enemies, persecutors and slanderers," 500, that was an old, old English prayer, when the Christians had many heathen enemies.

"Kindly fruits of the earth, in England, for Rogation Days," 1089.

"That it may please Thee to give us true repentance," 1089.

All the next part that comes is as it was used by the people in a beautiful cathedral called Salisbury. That Bishop took great pains with his services, and Archbishop Cranmer used them, you see, a very great deal, because the "Sarum Use," as the folks called it, was familiar to many of them already. Just notice how many times the date 1089 occurs as you mark the litany, and notice what beautiful parts are dated thus:

"Oh, God, Merciful Father," was written by Archbishop Herman, 1543.

The next part, with the responses, used to be said in the Sarum Use on the Tuesday before Ascension. So once more put down 1089.

Probably Archbishop Cranmer himself wrote the beautiful prayer, "We humbly beseech Thee, oh, Father."

The General Thanksgiving was written by an English Bishop, and used in 1662. When our American Prayer Book was arranged this Thanksgiving was put in at the end of the litany, because some felt that, no matter in how much trouble we might be, or how much we need to ask, we ought to end by thanking God for His goodness to us in Jesus Christ. No matter how hard and dangerous a time we may have, you know, nothing can separate us from the love of Jesus.

Next comes St. Chrysostom's Prayer, a very old one, 385.

And the last of all is the oldest of all—St. Paul's beautiful prayer for himself and his people, only thirty years after Jesus had ascended into Heaven.

So we come to Ascension time.

I have written you a long letter this month, but it seemed best to try to show you what a precious thing our Church service is, and how many people, for centuries past, have helped to make it so. People come in and say "What a beautiful service!" and go away. But we should understand and care so much for it that even in a strange place, away from organ, and lights, and incense, we could get out our Prayer Books and read over the proper service lovingly, because they are ours, wherever we are.

Here are the dates for this month's Collects:

May 1—St. Philip and St. James, 1549.
May 1—Rogation Sunday, 492.
May 5—Ascension Day, 590.
May 8—Sunday after Ascension, 1089. (They used to sing it as an anthem, in the Sarum Use, after the Gospel.)
May 15—Whitsunday, 590.
May 22—Trinity Sunday, 590.
May 29—First Sunday after Trinity, 492.

A GREEK PRAYER FOR ASCENSION-TIDE.

By John the Monk.

To God our Saviour, Who led His people through the sea dry-shod, but drowned Pharaoh and all his host in the waters, to Him alone let us sing, for He is glorified.

Sing we, all people, to Him Who was borne on the shoulders of cherubim with glory upward, even Christ; and Who seated us with Himself at the right hand of the Father, a hymn of triumph, for He is glorified.

Christ, the Mediator of God and man, the host of angels as they beheld in Body of Flesh entering the highest heavens were amazed, but in harmonious chorus sang their triumphant hymn.

To God, Who was manifested on Mt. Sinai, and gave the law to Moses, the seer of God, to Him Who in fleshly form was borne upwards from the mount of Olives, sing we all; for He is glorified.

THE SEWING SOCIETY.

The Ladies Sewing Society held its last meeting the Friday after Easter and decided upon Thursday of the following week for the exhibition of work and packing of boxes. The list of articles made and donated and the Treasurer's report is appended. This was a most successful Lent in the way of work and interest among the women of St. Clement's congregation. The work was equally divided between the two boxes packed: one going to the Rev. H. E. Chase, Shell Lake, Wis., for the use of his people, besides a good quantity of articles purchased for himself and family. The other half was sent to the Sisters of the Holy Nativity at Oneida for their work among the Indians. The remainder of the money in hand was put into hospital supplies, which were very much needed.

TREASURER'S REPORT.

Money received	$144.00
Expended:
Materials	96.70
Freight on boxes	4.79
For hospital supplies	43.51

PARISH NOTES

After June first, the 8 o'clock mass on Sundays and the 7.30 mass on weekdays will be omitted. The 9.15 mass on Sundays will be a low mass, with hymns, and without a sermon.

During the last month the clergy house has been thoroughly repaired and put in perfect order. There was much to be done owing to the settling of the building since its erection. The walls have been restored and tinted in soft tones, the wood work refinished and the rector's study enlarged.

On Ascension Day solemn mass was sung at seven o'clock, as usual, and a breakfast was served after the mass, in the parish building, for the choir. Owing to the coolness of the weather the boys preferred to postpone their annual picnic until the "water is warm enough for swimming," but in the evening they enjoyed a "circus party."

It is customary at this time to remind the congregation that the expenses of the parish continue during the summer. Last year the majority of the parishioners were thoughtful enough to remember this and in consequence the summer expenses were met without much difficulty. We should be careful that we do not fall behind this year.

THE CONSECRATION OF S. CLEMENT'S CHURCH

The following account is taken from a copy of the Episcopal Recorder, recently found in the Clergy House, bearing the date April 23, 1864

"S. Clement's Episcopal Church, at the corner of 20th and Cherry Streets, was consecrated on Tuesday, the 12th of April.

"The occasion was a very interesting one, and the ceremonies of a most imposing character. Three bishops and nearly a hundred clergymen, the latter mostly robed, were present. They all met first at the rectory, next store to the church and forming in procession, walked down the south side of the church and entered the porch where they were received by the wardens and vestry. The bishops and clergy then proceeded slowly up the middle aisle repeating the 24th psalm alternately. The densely crowded congregation rose and stood while they passed, and the organ sounded a low note which added to the impressiveness of the scene.

"Bishop Potter conducted the ceremony of consecration, assisted by Bishop Stevens and Bishop Lee of Delaware. Beside the Bishops, there were present inside the chancel rail, the Rev. Treadwell Walden, the rector of the church, Rev. Henry S. Spackman, the late rector, the Rev. J. Andrews Harris, the late assistant minister, and the Rev. Dr. Washburn of St Mark's, who was to preach the consecration sermon.

"Without the rails, on each side of the chancel, was a double row of clergymen; the Rev. Drs., Leeds, of S. Peters, Ogilby of Trinity Church, New York, Ducachet and Rudder of S. Stephen's, Lampson of the American Church in Paris, Dorr of Christ Church, Daniel Washburn, of Trinity Church, Philadelphia, and several others. We were especially pleased to notice the Rev. Dr. Bancroft Canon of the Cathedral, Montreal.

"The participation of this eminent gentleman in the ceremony was particularly gratifying as embodying the idea of a union of the British and American Churches. The rest of the clergy who could not find place in the chancel were gathered in pews reserved for them in the upper part of the middle aisle and their earnest sympathy and hearty responses added force to the universal interest of the occasion.

"The request to consecrate, engrossed on a roll of parchment, with pendant seal of the church, was handed to the Bishop by the rector.

"The Bishop then proceeded with the Consecration service, as arranged by the prayer book, assisted by Bishop Lee; and after the opening prayers, the sentence of Consecration was read by the Rev. Henry S. Spackman. Rev. Dr. Leeds followed with the Morning Prayers and the Rev. Mr. Lampson announced the proper Psalms, which were chanted by the choir and congregation.

"The first lesson, the magnificent Dedication of the Temple from I, Kings VIII, was now read by the Rev. Dr. Rudder; the second Lesson by Rev. Dr. Ogilby and the Creed and prayers by Rev. Dr. Dorr. After the proper selection of Psalms announced by the rector had been sung, the Ante-Communion Service was read by Bishop Stevens, and the Epistle and Gospel by the Rev. Dr. Ducachet. Old Hundred was then sung, and the Rev. Dr. Washburn taking his place in the pulpit, preached an earnest and forcible sermon, full of deep spiritual views and practical suggestions, which must have found a response in the mind of every thoughtful listener.

"This sermon, with the concluding prayers and benediction, ended the ceremonies of the morning; and the Bishops and clergy repaired, by invitation to the rectory, and partook of a bountiful collation which awaited them there. Thus terminated the impressive occasion that has given a heartfelt satisfaction to the congregation of this church and to its earnest and faithful rector.

"Seldom, indeed, have such results been known from the work of a single year on the part of pastor and people. One year ago, this church had a small and scattered congregation; it had no regular parish organization and laboured under a debt of $33,000; now, not only is the debt extinguished, but the pressure of parish work, the great increase of Sunday school, and the formation of sewing societies, a Soldiers Aid Society, and other benevolent undertakings, has forced the church to the erection of a parish building, for which a lot has already been purchased, in the rear of the church, and the sum of $6000 towards the building, raised by the efforts of the congregation; $3300 of which was the result of a single offertory on Easter Sunday.

"We heartily congratulate both the pastor and congregation on a result so happy; and earnestly hope that the growth of this church may be commensurate with its early promise; and that 'the whole building fitly framed together' may become increasingly 'a holy temple unto the Lord.'"

SOME MESSENGERS AND WHERE THEY WENT—X

In the case of Rev. S. Thomas, Missionary to South Carolina, persecutions began at once when he boarded the ship. On the way down the Channel, he was given the meanest accomodations, sleeping on a large box, cursed and treated with greatest unkindness He persevered in asking to read prayers daily ond after awhile this was granted with a very bad grace, and among many disturbances. When they arrived at Plymouth, he was so exhausted that he nearly died. But finally he got passage on another ship with a civil captain, and reached Charleston on Christmas Day, 1702. He had been three months on the way.

Naturally, the chief thought with him and with those who sent him, had been the opportunity of converting the heathen tribes in that part of America Much had been told about the savage Yammonsees, and the Society had voted quite a large sum of money to be spent in "stuffs for the use of wild Indians." But the devoted missionary found the greatest need among the white people at first. Nothing could be done with natives and negro slaves while the white people lived utterly godless lives, and brought up their own children in ignorance of the Christian religion. He began in a very small way among the leading families, and it was discouraging work for a long time. Only five could be found in the whole colony who would attend and receive the Blessed Sacrament. But the children are the missionary's hope. Through them, Mr Thomas gradually won the hearts of the parents, and something like real Church life began. Then he tried to help the slaves His greatest opponents were the owners, who resented the idea of slaves being equal with themselves in GOD'S sight, and the traders, who were spiritually the curse of the New World. One lady said: "if you baptize that slave of mine, I shall have to meet her in Heaven. The idea!" Another remarked that she did not think much of the Church; the highest privilege was Holy Communion, and the clergyman seemed to think the slaves had as good a right to it as the white people.

There were noble exceptions, and in time the religious education of the slaves, as held in trust for GOD, became a recognized duty. Two ladies, in particular, greatly encouraged the missionary by inviting him to visit and catechise their slaves. His first experience of this kind was described in a letter to the Society, with pathetic eagerness. It was at the end of his first year's work. He says:

> "Upon these gentlewomen's desiring me to come and examine these negroes, I went, and among other things I asked them, who CHRIST was. They readily answered, He is the Son of GOD and Saviour of the world, and told me that they embraced Him with all their hearts as such; and I desired them to rehearse the Apostles' Creed, and the 10 Commandments and the LORD'S Prayer, which they did very distinctly and perfectly. 14 of them gave me so great satisfaction and were and were so very desirious to be baptized, that I baptized these 14 last LORD'S Day"

The slaves themselves were eager, but many of their owners absolutely forbade attendance at services and instructions. However, in the case of those who where permitted, the story of the Early Church was repeated, the Christian slaves winning the confidence of even the enemies of religion by their diligence and reliability.

The Dissenters did their share in making things difficult. One leading man, visiting England ostensibly for the purpose of presenting a petition to Parliment in the interests of church people of the colony,—"being moved thereto, simply as a friend," really mis-represented them, and took his spare time in England to secure a number of Dissenting ministers, who actually came over on the same ship with one of the missionaries, and made things rather difficult for him.

The last and greatest problems lay in the condition of the natives. To this day, the Southern Indians are of two sorts: one gentle, trustworthy, having some ideas of a Deity and life after deoth. Curiously enough, they practiced circumcision The others were treacherous, hostile, and difficult to help.

In 1713, one of the natives, Prince George, was taken to England for an education. He was petted and made much of; but probably the humble work among the natives right there in the Colony did more good.

The white traders had oppressed the Indians and they brooded over their revenge, and were not prevented from it by any amount of kindness on the part of a few. In 1715 there was a general uprising; the inhabitants of a whole Christian village were massacred; at Port Royal, the few who did not make their escape in a ship to Charleston were tortured to death. It was a glorious Good Friday for some devoted Christians, who on that day met their LORD in Paradise. Finally, June 13th, the Indians were defeated.

During this awful time, the clergy become endeared to the suffered people. One devoted man, Rev R. Maule, was shut up in a garrison all that time, and ministered to the sick and dying, until his strength gave way and he died. Moreover, those who died helped those who remained, many missionaries bequeathing whatever personal property they possessed to the Church work of the Colony.

Churches and schools were built and endowed, the local Assembly giving hearty support, and finally, in 1759, the Society decided not to fill any more vacancies, as the colony itself was able to provide for them as they occurred.

North Carolina was included in the Charter granted in 1662 to certain who claimed that their anxiety for propagating the Christian religion among the American natives induced them to ask for it. The anxiety subsided, apparently.

At the beginning of the eighteenth century, the Carolinas were in utter heathenism; children grew up unbaptized, there were no Christian observances of any kind, and the dead were buried without prayers. In North Carolina, the thing that made missionary work almost impossible was the hostility or indifference of the white people It was not mere ignorance, yielding to effort, as in South Carolina, but real animosity. On one occasion the Holy Communion was burlesqued in a neighboring tavern. The clergy were subjected to such rough treatment that some died from the effects of it. Such support as they had came from the Society; the colonists seldom contributed. Settled clergy being in so much danger and so difficult to maintain, the Society finally arranged for itinerant missionaries. In the midst of this discouragement, there came to the Society a young man from North Carolina, who had been a magistrate, but had served as lay-reader in the absence of any regular ministry. He desired Orders, and, his wish being granted, went back to the Colony and to a life of the severest labor and hardship. For twelve years he was the only clergyman in hundreds of miles. As one of themselves, he succeeded much better than any one else had done. If only there had been an American Bishop to uphold him, and ordain others who could not manage the journey to England! This clergman, Rev. Clement Hall, was so successful in arousing interest, that often his sermons had to be delivered out-doors, there being no room large enough for the crowd. Once he baptized ninety-seven in a remote place. He died, exhausted by hard work and ill treatment, twelve years after, having in that time baptized over ten thousand people.

During the Revolution, the Church clergy were great sufferers. One, who "advertised in the Gazette," did not live long after the attention this brought upon him. It was not until 1783 that the Society was able to withdraw its support, nearly up to the time that the American Church held its first Convention, acknowledging, in the Preface to its Prayer Book, "a long continuance of nursing care and protection."

The Children's Corner

DEAR CHILDREN:—Let us first get the Collects for this month marked and dated, and then I will tell you a story.

This is the Trinity season, on which our dear Church lays so much stress, that the whole summer time is given to it, in the Sundays' teachings giving us time to realize the power and love and wonderful might of the Blessed Trinity.

As I said above, our Church dwells on the lesson of the Trinity. We are the only Christians who do this. The Greek and Roman Catholics have Trinity Sunday, but they reckon it as the First Sunday after Pentecost (Whitsunday), and in a Roman Catholic Prayer-book you will find the Sundays reckoned "after Pentecost," instead of "after Trinity," as we have them.

It is strange how careless many people are about trying to remember this great truth; they eagerly learn, and are ashamed not to know, all about King Edward, or Abraham Lincoln, or some leading man of the time, but the Great GOD Who made them, and by Whose mercy they draw breath, they just take for granted, and say, "Oh, I can't understand those things!" No one can understand GOD, but every one ought to think about Him, all the time, and the more you think, as you think, little by little, in your own life, you learn more and more about Him, and grow like Him.

If we never studied or believed anything but what we understood, we should have to stop thinking. Can you understand how the green things grow in the fields? But you believe they grow, don't you? When you see the green vestments and hangings in Church, think of GOD's gift of life, all about you, and the eternal life promised us if we live in Him, here.

It is impossible to understand about the Three Persons of the Blessed Trinity, but it is easy to believe, because there are so many little trinities all about us. You are a trinity, yourself. You have a body, a mind, and a soul; each of these has its part in you, and in your earthly life you cannot exist without all three. Without your body, you couldn't do things for others or for yourself; without your mind, you would be an imbecile—without your soul, you would be a brute.

The world in which we live is a trinity: it is composed of earth, air, and water; all perfectly distinct, yet indivisible in the life of the earth.

Now, let's see what the Collects give us to think of "in the power of the Divine Majesty."

June 5.—Second Sunday after Trinity. This was written in 492. The thought is "steadfast, fear and love." That kind of fear means reverence; it goes with real love; the more you care for one who is over you, the more you dread his displeasure. You know very well that the teacher you care for most in school is the one who makes you mind. You know that along with your love for your parents, and a part of it, is the feeling that they must be obeyed.

June 12.—Third Sunday after Trinity. This Collect was written in 590. It is easy to understand, except, perhaps, that word "adversities." It means the things that go against us, the little every-day things, that make us impatient and fretful. By the power of the Blessed Trinity, try to rise above such things, praying for patience and cheerfulness.

June 19.—Fourth Sunday after Trinity. This was written in 590. Please pay special attention to this Collect, it is so very appropriate to the story which I am about to tell you. "Temporal" means of this world.

June 26.—Fifth Sunday after Trinity. This is a very old Collect, written by Leo in 440. Perhaps he wrote this when he was about to go out to meet a heathen army, which was coming down from the North.

Now, for our story. We want a story about a man who feared GOD, turned to Him in all troubles, followed His guidance in every-day life, and longed for the Church to serve GOD better.

Once upon a time—a wonderful time, for it was just before Columbus discovered America—there was a beautiful garden full of roses, in a city of Italy, named Florence. You couldn't see that garden from the street, for it was an open court in the center of a group of buildings, the convent of San Marco. Could you have gotten in, you would have walked through cool, quiet rooms, stone-floored, with narrow windows, following a monk or one of the novices, to a sort of long hallway, open on one side to the weather, with arches all along that side. Stepping out, you would have come into a beautiful garden, with great bushes of damask roses. There you would have seen many famous men of the city, and behind them the Brothers in their habits, and back of them, again, the novices, all in white, lined up against the old grey walls, all listening eagerly to a man who stood under one of the rose trees, teaching in wonderful language. A stern-looking man, in the Dominican habit, his face sad and even harsh, till he warmed to his subject, when his great blue eyes would brighten and his face would glow, and the listeners could not take their eyes from him.

This was Savonarola, a monk in the convent of San Marco. He was called Fra Giralomo.

At that time it had become very unfashionable to be a really good Christian, and instead of learning the Creed and studying the Bible, people thought it was the thing to imitate the ways of the ancient Greeks and Romans, and to study the heathen philosophers. These were men who had, before Jesus Christ was born, puzzled about the universe and the beginning of things; they tried to reason out things, and refused to believe what they could not understand. So the people of Florence didn't like to be told about the Trinity and how we are to love GOD, they wanted to ask each other puzzling questions, and then see who could think of the smartest answers. After Savonarola had ben teaching in Florence for a while, he saw how wicked the city was growing, as the people grew away from GOD. As the taught in the convent, he began, little by little, to show his listeners how necessary it was to believe in God first, and to fear Him.

When he first came to Florence, people wouldn't listen to such teaching, and when he went out into the city to preach, sometimes not more than twenty people would go to hear him. But he went on with his work and preached as God inspired him, and after a while he was heard by a young man who had much influence with the city government.

At that time Florence was ruled by a wicked man named Lorenzo de' Medici. He used all the money in the treasury for pleasure and show; he was cruel to the poor, there were no schools or hospitals, such as we have, and when any offended Lorenzo he was very apt to do dreadful things to them. But the rich people didn't mind, because he gave them so much amusement, and the poor people couldn't help themselves. A great deal of money was spent on pictures and books, but the pictures were chiefly of heathen gods, and the books were often of a sort that had better never been written.

When Savonarola first came to Florence, and looked down from a hillside upon the beautiful town, he was filled with joy. Beautiful houses stood in fair gardens, and all about were olive trees and vineyards. Over all was the blue Italian sky. But later the saint's heart was sad as he saw the wickedness and suffering underneath all the beauty. He heard men who should have taught the Christian faith tell young people not to read the Bible because it "wasn't elegant language." And all by himself, in the rose garden at San Marco, as he waited for his scholars to gather for their morning lectures, he prayed God to keep him steadfast in the faith and that he might lead others into it.

The people about Lorenzo's court were not so happy as they pretended to be. When the soul is kept away from God, it gets hungry for Him, and the person to whom that soul belongs can't be really happy for any length of time. So a young man who belonged to the court, Mirandola, one of the gayest and brightest of Lorenzo's young men, and high in his favor, was yet restless and dissatisfied. One day he was present at a Council where Savonarola had to speak. The monk's earnestness and the stern, hard words he spoke, seemed to Mirandola to be just what he himself needed. He was sick of nonsense and amusement, and wanted to hear Savonarola talk about God, and justice, and preparation for another world. He felt as you might feel, if you had been where there was nothing to eat but ice cream and cake all day; when you came home, you were so glad to get some meat, after all those fluffy sweet things! Mirandola was hungry for religion, and he got Lorenzo to arrange so that Savonarola was kept at Florence all the time, instead of going through the country as a mission priest.

You who have made the Mission last fall know how it seems to see the Church filled with people come for a special preaching service. But the Florentines were not used to missions, and as soon as they knew that the court would permit, thousands went to hear Savonarola preach. Lent was his special time for these mission services, and very soon the little convent church of San Marco was too small, and he went to the Cathedral, which was soon filled, big as it was, with a great crowd.

Now, although the court had permitted this thing, when the courtiers and rulers of Florence realized what Savonarola was doing, they didn't like it at all. He preached that God would punish sinners, that men must serve God and study His Word, and that beautiful Florence would certainly suffer the penalty for its crimes. The enemies who arose against the preacher, to annoy him, and stop such teaching, were very powerful and made life very hard for him. But Savonarola prayed God to help him in all these dangers and adversities, and went right on preaching. It was a great sight, that Lenten preaching in the Cathedral. They didn't have pews, as we do, and sit comfortably back, listening. No, indeed, the congregation stood on the stone floor, and was glad of the chance to do that. One man who was there thus described it:

"The people got up in the middle of the night to get places for the sermon, and came to the door of the Cathedral, waiting outside till it should be open, making no account of any inconvenience, neither of the cold, nor the wind, nor of standing in winter with their feet on the marble; . . . then the silence was great in the Church, each one going to his place . . . and though many thousand people were thus collected together, no sound was to be heard . . . thus they waited three or four hours till the Father entered the pulpit. And the attention of so great a mass of people, all with eyes and ears attent upon the preacher, was wonderful; they listened so, that when the sermon had reached its end, it seemed to them that it had hardly begun."

I speak of the "court," as if Lorenzo had been a king or prince. Really, Florence ought to have been a republic, but Lorenzo de' Medici had gotten all the power into his own hands, the people had no sort of self-government. When he thought the people were getting discontented with his rule, he would plan some great public entertainment, and he kept things so gay that men were amused and pleased, and just let things go.

But Lorenzo himself was not happy. Down in the bottom of his heart he knew that he ought to restore the government to the people, and try to do them justice. But he couldn't make up his mind to do this. To ease his conscience, he sent all sorts of gifts to the convent, and tried to make friend with Savonarola. But the monk, who by this time was the Prior of the convent, would have nothing to do with him unless he would repent. Lorenzo would go to Mass and then hang about the convent garden in the hope of speaking to Savonarola, and dropped many gold pieces into the little alms-box, which had seldom held anything better than coppers.

Still, Savonarola let him alone, till at last Lorenzo lay dying in the midst of all the beautiful things he had loved. They only reminded him of the way he had gotten his wealth, the cities he had destroyed, the widows and orphans he had robbed. He was horribly afraid. But Savonarola was very gentle, and told him God was merciful and would surely forgive him if he would repent and try to undo some of the harm he had done, before it was too late. First, he said Lorenzo must give back their money and goods to the people he had robbed. Lorenzo didn't like that, but finally he said he would. Then Savonarola told him that he ought to sign papers and do whatever was necessary to make Florence a free city again. At this Lorenzo turned his face to the wall, and would not speak at all. So he died, and Savonarola went home, very sad. He knew that Lorenzo was a wonderful man in some ways, and he had hoped that at the last he would repent and be reconciled to God.

Lorenzo had a weak, silly son, named Piero, who governed Florence after a fashion for a while, and the people being rather easy-going and not knowing exactly how to right things, went along contentedly till a few months later. Then there came the invasion of an army from France, for Florence, with its treasures and its weak ruler, seemed like an easy prey. Piero went out to treat with the French general, but was so frightened that he surrendered the defenses to them at once. Then he scurried about like a scared rabbit, for he was afraid of the French, and the Florentines were so angry they would not let him into the town again. In their trouble the people turned to Savonarola, and he had to get up in the Cathedral pulpit every day and tell them what to do. Finally, they sent him out to see the French general. He told the general that he was probably sent by God to frighten the sinful Florentines, and urged him, for the love of God, to be merciful and spare the city.

The French invited themselves to visit for a while, and the people were taxed to the utmost to give them entertainment and not to offend them.

When they finally went away, the people felt their town needed some systematic government, so they gathered in the Cathedral, while Savonarola preached to them, and advised them how to restore the ancient freedom and train up a Godfearing people.

Particularly, he wanted to teach them to give up so much useless extravagance, and to live more simply. When the time came for the Carnival, he went to work with a will. The Carnival was a great annual festival, held just before Lent, and it had become a time for all sorts of foolishness; there were endless parades and games of all sorts. The boys of the city had great fun at that time. They used to place long rails across the street, and no one could pass till he had laid down a piece of money, which was laid aside for a great supper. They used to have immense bonfires in the middle of the street, and at these there were stone fights, at which boys were often killed. Savonarola loved boys, and they generally liked him. So, when Carnival time came, he got the boys of the city to organize into companies which patrolled the streets, working as hard for order as they had formerly worked to upset it. A spry, active boy can do a great deal when he sets about it, and these boys were the delight of Florence. Instead of the "stiles," or long poles across the street, there were small tables, at which the boys tried to see who could collect the most money for charity. Of their own accord they gave up the stone fighting, and as for the bonfire—! Savonarola gave them the biggest one they had ever had. It was called "The Bonfire of Vanity," and for days and days they collected the materials for it. The Florentines had enormous quantities of perfectly foolish trinkets, costing a great deal of money, besides bad books and pictures. Besides, they had always had a great deal of fancy dress at Carnival time, such as the New Year's shooters have here on Broad street. All these things were turned over to the boys, who in white robes, fed them to a glorious bonfire in the public square, while Savonarola looked on, smiling.

The climax came on Palm Sunday, when the people crowded the streets to see the Palm Sunday procession, boys, clergy, and monks, with Savonarola at the end, marching about the city, sometimes shouting praises to Jesus Christ, sometimes cheering for the city, and distributing the money which they had collected for the poor.

So much had been raised that Savonarola was able to establish relief stations for charitable work. This was a matter that had lain close to his heart, and he was happy—for almost the last time on earth.

For the people of Florence, like the people of Jerusalem on that other Palm Sunday, centuries before, cheered the leader because they thought he would help them to free their city, not because they wanted to have the city made better. While he was preaching and teaching about freeing Florence, they hung on his words, but when things settled down, and he tried to lead them to better ways, they tired of him, because he spoke so constantly of the need of purifying the city through the lives of its citizens.

His enemies took advantage of this and stirred up the people, so that, only two years after the glorious Palm Sunday, his enemies had grown strong enough to send him a very strange challenge. This was that he and those who opposed him should go through a trial by fire. Each side was to send a delegate, and they were to go through a fiery path, and the one who came out unharmed would be considered as the one whom God approved as the ruler of the city. This seems rather silly and rash to us, but in those days men often did such things; besides, Savonarola's wisdom had been so wonderful that many of his friends believed he could work a miracle for his followers, and wanted to prove it. He himself did not approve this idea at all, and for a long time would not approve it. It was a fascinating plan to his boy friends, and one of them sought him out in the garden one evening and begged to be allowed to take up the challenge. Savonarola embraced him, and blessed him, and was deeply comforted in his loneliness by the boyish devotion. He blessed the boy and and sent him home.

At last he yielded to this queer request of his friends and enemies, and great preparations were made for the trial by fire.

What were his enemies to do? They felt that if Savonarola's side won and came out unhurt, the city would be in their hands forever, and all these tiresome sermons about being good, and all these rules that forbade certain kinds of fun, would be at an end. The only way was to make Savonarola ridiculous by having the whole thing fizzle out, and this they proceeded to do. They understood the Florentine nature well. These people were ready to take up any cause, but they had become accustomed for years to constant excitement and the want of something new. They had been trained, too, to cruelty also, if their wishes were crossed. When the day arrived—it was two days before the Palm Sunday—there was a great time made. Out in the square there was a pathway made, and on each side of it blazed long lines of fire. The boys hung about, fascinated, and wondered how much fire either side would be able to stand. Inside the Cathedral there was a Solemn Mass, and then a procession came forth, the choir singing the Psalm, "Let God arise, and let His enemies be scattered." The people in the streets caught up that verse and sang it as an antiphon. Soldiers lined the street, and kept the crowd back. The monk who was to go into the fire on behalf of Savonarola's side wore a red cope and all the others marched before him. Close behind him came Savonarola, carrying the Sacrament. They marched down to the very edge of the fire, and waited for their enemies to send out their delegate.

Now came the time to delay things, just as the enemy had planned, till the people should get impatient. On one excuse or another the matter was delayed till nearly six o'clock; then the fire had to be given up and the procession started to return to the Church. But, just as had been planned, the crowd broke out in a rage because there was no show, and the soldiers had all they could do to get the party back safely. Palm Sunday night the mob broke into the convent church and the monks gathered in terror before the altar. Savonarola besought them not to resist, but to die as willing martyrs. He knelt in prayer and waited for the end. But the Brothers could not give up. It was a strange sight, the church filled with noise, and smoke, and the light of the torches, while the monks and novices, in their white robes, stood within the chancel or choir, and beat the crowd back. One of Savonarola's boy friends was the first to die. He was carried up to the altar step and the Prior gave him the Sacrament, he exclaiming, "I was never so happy as now!" At last a summons came for Savonarola to go under guard to the city hall.

He went into the convent and made a beautiful farewell speech to his monks. Then he was led out, and away, for the last time. All through Holy Week, till after Easter, his enemies tortured him, trying to make him sign papers which would seem to authorize their wicked devices and renounce the principles of purity and freedom for which he had worked so hard. But the brave soul was steadfast. The torture cripped all his limbs, but the executioners took care not to injure his right hand, hoping that at the last moment he might give up and write what they wanted. When they finally left off, and he was alone in his prison cell, he spent the time writing an exposition of the 31st and 51st Psalms.

At last, late in the spring, he was led out into the public square and executed. He died bravely, and his sufferings were short. As he was going up to die, there was a great crowd looking on, and he turned and looked at them in silence. He had just been reciting the Creed, and as he finished some one asked him to make a speech protesting his innocence of the lying charges which had been trumped up so as to get his death warrant. But he said, "Christ did not do so on the cross," and kept silence, only for the words of the Creed.

After his death, his followers made a careful record of his wonderful life and kept his teachings alive in men's hearts.

All his life he had loved the truth. At his last Communion, the day of his death, he broke out into this cry:

"My Lord, I know that Thou are that Trinity, Perfect, Indivisible, Distinct in Three Persons, Father, Son, and Holy Ghost."

To the very end he was in the holy fear of God, defended and comforted in all dangers and adversities, passing through things temporal in hope of the things eternal, by the power of the Ever-Blessed and Glorious Trinity.

INTROITS AND GRADUALS

It has been suggested that it might be helpful to the congregration if the proper Introits and Graduals were printed for the Sundays in each month. They will, therefore, appear accordingly. It would be an excellent plan to have them printed in book form, for use in the Church, if a sufficient sum could be raised to meet the expense.

Second Sunday after Trinity

INTROIT:—The Lord Who was my upholder, He brought me forth also into a place of liberty: He hath delivered me, even because he had favour unto me.

Psalm. I will love Thee O Lord my Strength: The Lord is my stony rock, my fortress and my Saviour.

Glory be to the Father, etc.

(Repeat antiphon)

GRADUAL:— When I was in trouble I called upon the Lord: and he heard me.

Deliver my soul O Lord: from lying lips and from a deceitful tongue. Alleluia, Alleluia.

God is a righteous Judge, strong and patient! and God is provoked every day. Alleluia.

Third Sunday after Trinity

INTROIT:—Turn Thee unto me and have mercy upon me O Lord, for I am desolate and in misery: look upon my adversity and misery, and forgive me all my sins, O my God.

Psalm: Unto Thee O Lord will I lift up my soul: my God I have put my trust in Thee, O let me not be confounded

Glory be, etc.

(Repeat antiphon)

GRADUAL:—O cast thy burden upon the Lord: and he shall nourish Thee.

When I cried unto the Lord He heard my voice: and delivered me from the battle that was against me. Alleluia, Alleluia.

I will love thee O Lord my Strength: the Lord is my stony rock, my defence and my Saviour. Alleluia.

Fourth Sunday after Trinity.

INTROIT:—The Lord is my light and my salvation, whom then shall I fear? The Lord is the strength of my life, of whom then shall I be afraid: When the wicked, even my enemies and my foes came upon me they stumbled and fell.

Psalm: Though an host of men were laid against me: yet shall not my heart be afraid.

Glory be, etc.

(Repeat antiphon)

GRADUAL:—Be merciful O Lord unto our sins: wherefore do the h:athen say where is now their God.

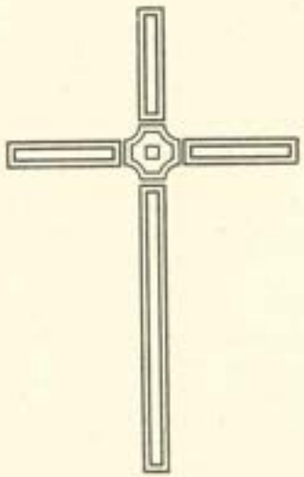
Help us O God of our salvation: and for the honour of Thy Name deliver us O God. Alleluia, Alleluia.

The King shall rejoice in Thy Str ngth O Lord: exceeding glad shall he be of Thy Salvation. Alleluia.

Fifth Sunday after Trinity

INTROIT:—Hearken unto my voice O Lord when I cry unto Thee: Thou has been my succour leave me not, reither forsake me O God of my salvation.

Psalm: The Lord is my light and my salvation: whom then shall I fear.?



Glory be, etc.

(Repeat antiphon)

GRADUAL:—Behold O God our defender: and look upon Thy servant.

O Lord God of Hosts: hear the prayers of Thy servants. Alleluia, Alleluia.

In Thee O Lord have I put my trust, let me never be put to confusion: rid me and deliver me in Thy righteousness, bow down Thine ear to me, make haste to help me. Alleluia.

THE LENTEN BOXES.

Both letters of thanks for the Lenten boxes have been received, and in both the articles seem to have been just what was needed, and everything is appreciated and enjoyed to the fullest extent.

The Rev. Fr. Chase writes that he and Mrs. Chase spent a delightful hour in unpacking their box. He says: "The many splendid articles sent to us will save us much expense and will relieve Mrs. Chase's mind of much anxiety. Mrs. Chase says she is proud of having so many choice things in the house. The clothing is the best we have ever received, all being so fresh and clean, new and warm; a very necessary thing in this climate. We are already planning where the things are to go, and are very happy. Thanks to all for their kindness to me and my family and people."

The Sister writes from Oneida: "Many, many thanks for the box of useful articles and for the hospital supplies. It was a joy to see such good things for our men and for the sick ones. We are all so pleased. The pink sacques we put to immediate use. They were given to an Indian woman who is lying helpless with rheumatism. She is always so patient and cheerful, and was so pleased when we gave them to her."

The remaining amount of money after all expenses had been paid was sent to the Sisters for their personal use. It seems that they had needed a rug for the room used as a chapel, and had been wondering where the money would come from, when our check arrived. They are very grateful for being remembered, and send their thanks to all those who have contributed to their happiness and comfort and that of their dear people.

Report St. Clement's Branch of the Church Periodical Club for the year ending Easter, 1910.

Sixteen members of the parish sent regularly church, current and secular periodicals.

A testament, a prayer book and hymnal and a devotional book were sent to a mission in the south.

Four packages of magazines and papers were sent to institutions.

Five dollars was given by members of the parish toward the expense of postage, expressage, etc, and for the annual contribution sent to the Central Branch, New York.

SOME MESSENGERS AND WHERE THEY WENT.—XII.

The Southern colonies suffered much from the encroachments of the Spanish and French. The English government, therefore, offered inducements to any who would settle south of the Carolinas and defend those regions. It was not an attractive offer, but at that time there were thousands of German Protestants driven from their homes, 45,000 in a single Bavarian province. In England itself, the debtor's prisons were crowded with miserable wretches whose only crime was their poverty. Hard as the conditions were, therefore, many were thankful to accept them, and the first settlers were "sober and industrious people."

That's what an ancient writer calls them; but they were certainly not very religious. The colony was founded in 1733, and thirty-five years after, the Rev. Samuel Frink wrote that the white people generally were as utter heathens as the Indians, and more hopeless; that there were only two churches in the whole country, and they 150 miles apart; and that any Christian work among the natives was almost impossible because of the hostility of the degraded whites.

It is very likely this hostility dated from John Wesley's well-meaning but tactless ministry. It is pathetic to read of his labors in Georgia, so earnest and unselfish, and so utterly misdirected! He was recommended to the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel (the "venerable S. P. G.") in January, 1736. By that time, however, he was already in Georgia, having started at his own expense, full of zeal, in October, 1735. He wished to serve the Church without salary, or any compensation except the necessary food and clothing. He was finally persuaded to accept a small salary, as involving just as much sacrifice and being more suitable to his clerical dignity.

Had there only been a "spiritual overseer" in fact, instead of in name (the Bishop of London had nominal oversight), to utilize that wonderful energy, and lead the ardent spirit wisely! Here was a devotee of twenty-five, caring for nothing except his work, ascetic in life, glad to give himself to the utmost. And yet he antagonized the Georgia colonists from the outset. He never got their point of view—or, "points" of view; his flock was composed of English, French, Italians,—but, most of all, perhaps, the Germans perplexed him. It takes a German some time to change his ways. These had certain ideas of doctrine and practice, such as they were; probably those who had been exiled must have had ideas sacred in their eyes. The other colonists had lost their hold on religious observances; in fact, the greatest laxity prevailed. Still, they were, on the whole, a kindly people; a missionary with tact and some knowledge of human nature might have laid noble foundations. But Wesley's method was to "rebuke with authority" (forgetting that this was urged by an Apostle who also said he felt obliged to be "all things to all men," and who further said, "Be pitiful, be courteous"). As many of the people didn't recognize the authority, the method failed—and more than failed; it hopelessly antagonized. For instance, he would baptize children only by immersion, which was a pretty harsh rule under existing conditions, and not justified by the Church's practice. Many times a family in deep affliction, longing for the consolation of religion, but unused to any of the Church's ways, would have the grace to send for a clergyman, and then would very likely be brought up sharply against one of Wesley's "Apostolic Constitutions."

The climax came when a lady in one of his congregations, an old personal friend, transgressed in some way, and he rebuked her sharply. She resented it, and answered in anger. Then he proceeded to say that if she didn't ask his forgiveness, she would not be admitted to the Holy Communion. Excommunication is a serious matter, implying great wickedness in the person so dealt with. And so the woman's husband took the matter to the civil courts, proceeding against Wesley for "defaming" his parishioner. It made a dreadful disturbance, and so upset Wesley's work that he resigned in December, 1737, one year and nine months from the time he came.

This is a sad little chapter, isn't it? There were, however, some who struggled along, and exerted an influence down to the time of the Revolution. Then, in Georgia, as all through the colonies, church people suffered for their adherence to the "Tory religion." Thirty-five were deliberately put to death in Augusta, where the Rev. J. Seymour remained with his congregation till he was imprisoned. Set free at last, he returned to his family, to find they had suffered so much from ill-treatment that one child lay dead, and the others were desperately ill. Soon after that they were evicted, stripped of all valuables, and the church turned into a hospital. Nothing daunted, the brave missionary went down to Florida, where he was welcomed, and ministered to English, negroes and Indians for many years.

ST. CLEMENT'S PRAYER.

Translated by Bishop Lightfoot of Durham.

"Grant unto us, Lord, that we may set our hope on Thy Name, which is the primal source of all Creation, and open the eyes of our hearts, that we may know Thee, who alone abidest Highest in the lofty, Holy in the holy; who layest low the insolence of the proud, who scatterest the imaginings of nations; who settlest the lowly on high, and bringest the lofty low; who art the Benefactor of spirits and the God of all flesh; who lookest into the abysses, who scannest the works of men; the Succor of them that are in peril, the Saviour of them that are in despair; the Creator and Overseer of every spirit; who multipliest the nations upon earth and hast chosen out from all men those that love Thee, through Jesus Christ Thy beloved Son, through whom Thou didst instruct us, didst sanctify us, didst honor us. We beseech Thee, Lord and Master, to be our help and succour. Save those among us who are in tribulation; have mercy on the lowly; lift up the fallen; show Thyself unto the needy; heal the ungodly; convert the wanderers of Thy people; feed the hungry; release our prisoners; raise up the weak; comfort the faint hearted. Let the Gentiles know that Thou art God alone, and Jesus Christ is Thy Son, and we are Thy people and sheep of Thy pasture—O Thou who art able to do these things, and things far more exceeding good for us, we praise Thee through the High Priest and Guardian of our Souls, Jesus Christ, through whom be the glory and the majesty unto Thee both now and for all generations and for ever and ever. Amen."

INTROITS AND GRADUALS.

Sixth Sunday after Trinity.

INTROIT:—The Lord is the Strength of His people, and he is the wholesome defense of His Anointed: O Lord save Thy people and give Thy blessing unto Thine inheritance, feed them and set them up forever.

Psalm. Unto Thee will I cry O Lord my Strength: think no scorn of me lest if Thou make as if Thou hearest not I become like them that go down to the pit.

Glory be, etc.

(Repeat antiphon.)

GRADUAL:—Turn Thee again O Lord at the last; And be gracious unto Thy servants.

Lord Thou hast been our refuge; from one generation to another. Alleluia; Alleluia.

O deliver me from mine enemies: defend me from them that rise up against me. Alleluia.

Seventh Sunday after Trinity.

INTROIT:—O clap your hands together all ye people: O sing unto God with the voice of melody.

Psalm. He shall subdue the people under us: and the nations under our feet.

Glory be, etc.

(Repeat antiphon.)

GRADUAL:—Come ye children and hearken unto me: I will teach you the fear of the Lord.

Come unto me and be lightened: and your faces shall not be ashamed. Alleluia, Allelulia.

Thou, O Lord, art praised in Sion: and unto Thee shall the vow be promised in Jerusalem. Alleluia.

Eighth Sunday after Trinity.

INTROIT:—We wait for Thy Loving kindness, O God, in the midst of Thy temple: O God, according to Thy Name so is Thy praise unto the world's end; Thy right hand is full of righteousness.

Psalm. Great is the Lord and highly to be praised: in the City of our God, even upon His holy hill.

Glory be, etc.

(Repeat antiphon.)

GRADUAL:—Be Thou, O God, my strong rock and house of defense: that Thou mayest save me.

In Thee, O Lord God, have I put my trust: let me never be put to confusion. Alleluia, Alleluia.

Hear my law, O my people: Alleluia.

Ninth Sunday after Trinity.

INTROIT:—Behold God is my helper, the Lord is with them that uphold my soul; He shall reward evil unto mine enemies: Destroy Thou them in Thy truth, O Lord, my protector.

Psalm. Save me, O Lord, for Thy Name's sake: and avenge me in Thy strength.

Glory be, etc.

(Repeat antiphon.)

GRADUAL:—O Lord, our Governor: how excellent is Thy Name in all the world. Thou hast set Thy Glory above the heavens. Alleluia, Alleluia. Sing we merrily into God, our strength: make a cheerful noise unto the God of Jacob; take the psalm, the merry harp with the lute. Alleluia.

Tenth Sunday after Trinity.

INTROIT:—When I called unto the Lord He heard my voice; and delivered my soul from the battle that was against me; yes, even God, that endureth forever, hath brought them down: O cast thy burden upon the Lord and He shall nourish thee.

Psalm. Hear my prayer, O God: and hide not Thyself from my petition; take heed unto me and hear me.

Glory be, etc.

(Repeat antiphon.)

GRADUAL:—Keep me, O Lord, as the apple of an eye: hide me under the shadow of Thy wings.

Let my sentence come forth from Thy Presence: and let Thine eyes look upon the thing that is equal. Alleluia, Alleluia. O Lord God of my salvation: I have cried day and night before Thee. Alleluia.

The Children's Corner

DEAR CHILDREN: You know what is meant by the "five Senses": Sight, Touch, Taste, Hearing and Smell. You often hear people say of a pleasure "that appeals to the senses," meaning our lower nature. Let us remember, though, that our "lower nature" is our human nature, which has been glorified by Our Lord Jesus Christ; that our bodies are the temples of the Holy Ghost; and that our senses are the means by which He, "the Lord and Giver of Life," enables us to grow toward God.

From Advent to Trinity, the first half of the Christian year, we study the Life of Christ, from His Birth to His Ascension; now, these Sundays after Trinity give us a chance to think of our own lives, and what we may do with them.

The thought of the Five Senses comes in pretty well with the Church's teaching for the five Sundays which, this year, come in July. You'll enjoy your Prayer-book better this month if you take it out doors to some pleasant spot where there may be some of the out-door things which we are going to consider. Take your pencil, too; for we won't forget to date our Collects.

July 3—Sixth Sunday after Trinity.

The Collect was written by Gelasius, so date it 490. It is full of promise. When Gelasius wrote it, he had, "O God, who hast prepared for those that love Thee, invisible things." But when Cranmer put this Collect into the English Prayer-book, he changed it to "such things as pass man's understanding."

When we enjoy an innocent earthly pleasure of any kind, we shall enjoy it twice as much if we bear in mind that happiness in this world is just a sort of promise to us of what shall be given us in Heaven; God has prepared for those who love Him pleasures which we can only faintly dream of as we use His gifts here.

Now let us take the gift of SIGHT. The creatures around us have sight, and have it given to them in ways that are very strange. Some of them have different kinds, which they use at different times. Suppose, for instance, you were an insect:—on each side of your head, covering the whole side of it, would be bundles of tubes, each made like a magnifying glass. If you were a dragon-fly, you'd have about two thousand of them. Next time you are out on the river, and a dragon-fly comes along, don't dodge, but look at his great eye-bundles. Each of those tubes in the eye-bundles is at a slightly different angle, so that Mr. Dragon-fly can see all around without turning his head.

He can't turn his head; if he did it would fall off, for he hasn't any neck.

A bird's eyes magnify everything fifty times. When that little bird comes along the walk, its magnifying eyes see every tiny bug and every grain of food. But you sit still, or you'll frighten it. If you met a man two hundred feet tall when you were going to dinner, wouldn't you be frightened? But that's the way you look to a bird.

All the wonderful eyes, though, are limited in their use. They merely enable the creatures to find food and to escape their enemies; in other words, they are for creatures who know nothing except this present time, and see nothing except to escape from it or to eat it. For instance, there are many keen-sighted creatures which fly about in the night, but they never even see the stars, for they are not on their bill-of-fare. But our eyes are to look beyond this world, to the sky, and read God's promises there. We can see the stars and the planets, and we can look up and think of the time when "we shall mount up with wings as eagles."

All that is beautiful in this world is just the merest suggestion of the beauty of Heaven. And the beauty of every-day things may be a help to us; if you train yourself to look for lovely things and enjoy them, it enables you when older to endure hard, monotonous lives.

Be on the watch for the little beauty-spots God scattered about to rest our eyes. And then, some glad day: "Thine eyes shall see the King in His beauty!"

July 10—Seventh Sunday after Trinity.

This Collect was, like last Sunday's, composed by Gelasius in the fifth century, and translated into English by Cranmer for the English Prayer-book. In this prayer, notice that we say, "Lord of all power and might." I suppose you think those words mean the same thing, and are just put in to sound well. Not at all! "Power" means authority, the lawful right to do things. "Might" means strength or ability to do them. You might be empowered to do a thing, but if you hadn't the might, you'd have to give up. Or you could have the might to do a thing, and no right whatever. But all power belongs to God, and all might, too.

"Graft in our hearts the love of Thy Name; increase in us true religion; nourish us with all goodness;" * * * these words apply to living religion. And the whole idea of the Collect is, that our God is able to make us religious. You can be pious, that is, exact about Church duties for instance, because you are used to such ways, but there are religious acts only when they are done for the love of God's Name.

If you go to Florida, and look down into the sea-water off that coast, you will see many lovely forms. Some are the branching coral, in white or lovely shades of pink, built up by time from the dead bodies of millions of tiny polyps. Others are frail sea-weeds, moving to and fro; and the poorest sea-weed is better than the most elaborate coral formation, because it has life. Now, there are Christian people who try to grow as the coral does, by piling works on works. They have just such things that they do in a set way; they pride themselves on the way they do everything, and all the time they are unkind, selfish and horribly conceited.

Let's go back to our sea-weeds. Down there on the rocks you may see queer, shapeless lumps of jelly-like stuff. They can't see, nor hear, nor smell, nor taste, and yet they have just one sense, the Sense of Touch. This sense is the foundation of all life, and the test of it. The jelly-fish has that sense, and sucks in any substance brought along by the water, that will nourish it. It is about the simplest form of life that there is, sensitive only to the touch of those substances on which it lives. As you go higher up in creation, this Sense of Touch begins to develop, and gradually come with it the feelings of pain or pleasure. A centipede can be fairly cut in two, and the two halves of him will go on walking for quite a while; but the mere touch of a whip will make a horse run, because the horse's feelings are so highly developed.

You see, the Sense of Touch is the test of whether a thing lives or not, and God developed that sense up through Creation, till at last he made man, whose body is furnished with thousands of tiny nerves. Our sense of touch is given, not merely to find food, as the jelly-fish, not merely for pleasure, as the cat rolling on the grass, but to bring us nearer to God.

When you go out in a motor boat, you can pull a certain rope, and the boat will point accordingly; when you drive a pet horse, you pull one rein, and the horse goes accordingly. The boat has to follow the touch of your hand, but the horse wills to; you may be driving the horse away from home, over an unpleasant, dusty road, but he overcomes his will so as to serve you; the Sense of Touch to the horse means self-denial and loving service.

How about your sense of touch, little Christian? Is it making you selfish, fond of smooth paths and easy ways, and a coward about pain? Or is it bringing you near to God, by giving you opportunities for enduring hardness as a good soldier of Jesus Christ? In the matter of pain, where our acute human sense of touch makes us capable of suffering, we can by the help of True Religion become the very highest of all created things. Yes, higher than the angels, for

> "They cannot suffer, neither can they die for Thee;
> But we can;
> And, blessed be Thy Name—let it be so." Amen.

July 17—Eighth Sunday after Trinity.

This is one of our oldest Collects, from the Service-book of Leo, 440. The thought is that God plans all things in heaven and earth, so as to keep hurtful things away from His creatures, down to the very smallest.

Why is it that a caterpillar crawls all over one plant and then stops at the very first leaf of the next? Because the first one was to it a "hurtful thing," the second was food; and it viewed its proper food by the Sense of Taste.

In a general way, the same is true of us. We don't want the kind of plants the caterpillar does, and they wouldn't taste good to us. But there are other plants containing substances that we need, and they do taste good.

This is going to be short in telling, but it's a life-long lesson: Upon the sense of taste depends your appetite, and your appetite can be made to serve God, by temperance and self-control, so that whether you eat or drink, you can do all to the glory of God. You can control and cultivate the Sense of Taste, as other creatures cannot. If the doctor tells you a certain kind of food is necessary, you can by degrees overcome your dislikes to it. Or you can so degrade your sense of taste—as for instance, by eating too many sweet things—that proper food won't taste good to you. Summer vacation is full of temptations of this kind; so suppose you say this Collect very often, and notice whether you are getting careless and self-indulgent. Remember, also, that this pleasurable sense is, like the other senses, a promise of better things in the Life of the World to Come, where we shall eat of the Tree of Life, which grows along the banks of the River of God.

July 27—Ninth Sunday after Trinity.

This is another Collect, written by Leo, but re-written by Gelasius. "The Spirit to think and do always such things as are right," to move in perfect harmony and order.

When it comes to the Sense of Hearing, it does seem at first as if other creatures had the best of it.

There goes a cricket; he can hear things that you can't, for his ears are on his legs. As he goes along the ground, he hears the ground-noises. The angle-worm, which to us is noiseless, is distinctly heard by the cricket; and as to a snake,—that must sound to him like a freight train!

But, in this matter of sounds, we have one great gift, a special gift of God, which utterly divides us from all other earthly creatures, and that is, Music. There is no doubt that it is a divine gift; certainly, there is no music in the natural world. Music, you know, has rhythm and melody—or, "time and tune," if you understand that better. Many naturalists have tried to reproduce birds' songs on a musical staff; they get music somewhat like the birds' song; but they don't get the song, because it really isn't music, it's just a lovely little noise.

Music didn't exist on this earth till long after the Creation. Then God inspired a man named Jubal, who invented a musical instrument (Gen. iv: 21), and he has special mention in the Bible as one of the early benefactors of our race.

But what has this to do with our Collect, "to think and do always such things as are right * * * we who cannot do anything that is good without Thee"? Well, to me, the Church of God is like a great chorus with different voices and different instruments, and the Master conducting it. But every performer must not only know his own part, but harmonize it with the others: he must have the "musical ear," the highest development of the Sense of Hearing, instantly distressed by a discord or false rhythm. Don't you see my little parable? We should be so sensitive to God's will, and anxious for order and harmony in His Church, that it would distress us to find a note of pride, anger, envy or any other kind of discord spoiling our part. It may be that some time you will hear a chorus of the blind children at our Overbrook School, singing the most difficult music in perfect time and tune, because the smallest child among them listens so carefully as he does his own part not to mar the general harmony. "Dearly beloved, as much as lieth in you, live peaceably with all men."

July 31—Tenth Sunday after Trinity.

This is another Collect, but we hardly know what the original one was. Leo wrote it, in the first place; then, when Gelasius succeeded him, he gave the Service-book a thorough going-over, and this was one of the many Collects that he changed a little; then Cranmer, in translating it into English, changed some, and added a few words; and finally Bishop Cosin went all over it again. Because a Collect has to be short, and yet the collect has to collect all that Sunday's lesson-thought in a very few words.

Prayer is the most important Christian duty, because it is as necessary to our souls, as breath is to our bodies. Your life without prayer must seem to God as unpleasant as a room where a person works all day with the windows shut. Now, let's see if we can't work out a little parable from the Sense of Smell. If you go into a "stuffy" room, or along a wood-path where there is a dead bird, or encounter any conditions not of purity and cleanliness, your Sense of Smell is at once offended. The other creatures don't notice a smell, except as it indicates food or danger. A dog has the keenest scent of almost any creature, but it was given him to furnish necessary information only, and thus he uses it. But we cannot have unpleasant odors about us; we can't bear them. And so, all through the Bible, you find good and holy things mentioned as having a "Sweet Savor," (odor) to God.

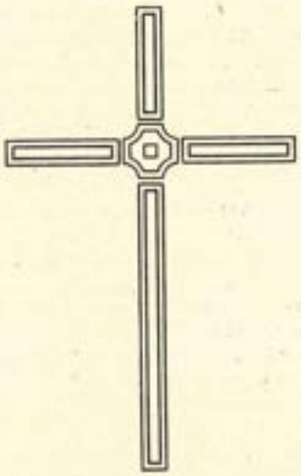
God, who ordered the worship of His ancient people, the Jews, carefully arranged that the simplest act of it should be a sort of object-lesson to teach them some truth, especially commanded as to the incense. Nothing is so sweet to Him as earnest, fervent prayer, free from selfishness; and so He even gave the very names of the spices (Exodus xxx: 34), and ordered them never to offer him any "strange incense," such as you find in the Chinese joss-sticks, for instance. And so we can and ought to say, "Let my prayer be set forth in Thy sight as the incense," pure and on fire with love.



And remember that not only in the Church worship, and in your regular times of private devotion, but in every little act, your life should be purified and sweetened by that constant Sense of the Presence of God, which is higher than all the earthly senses, and their governor.

May you so learn to use your Senses, as seeing Him who is invisible, as enduring hardness, as keeping your bodies in temperance, as according to His will, as worshipping in the beauty of holiness, that your lives may be unto God "a sweet savor of Christ."

St. James' Day comes in very well with our lesson, both because of the Collect, which prays for that absolute devotion to God, and because of his teaching, generally. You date the Collect—1549—and then get your Bibles, and find St. James Epistle. He closely followed Our Lord's method of finding in natural things a lesson in heavenly things; the clouds, the sea, the harvest-time, a horse being driven—well, you count and see how many every-day" allusions you can find.

Now, here is a word from him as to the right use of the Five Senses:

"Do not err, my beloved brethren; every good gift and every perfect gift is from above, and cometh down from the Father of lights, with whom is no variableness, neither shadow of turning * * * but let patience have her perfect work, that ye may be perfect and entire, wanting nothing."

THE BISHOP OF SALINA ON CANON XIX.

We reprint from the American Catholic (a paper that we heartily recommend) the following excerpt from the Convention address of our good friend, Bishop Griswold. As the time of the General Convention draws near we should be making it a matter for special daily intercession.

Bishop Griswold has spoken out about Canon XIX. In his address to the Missionary District of Salina he said:

We must face honestly a question which is the greatest of all to be answered by the next Convention. Many of us are looking forward with very grave apprehension, because we have come to the point where the division of ways is clearly seen. The question is, whether this Church will remain loyal to the position she has taken throughout her whole history, or whether she will stultify herself, will give us things necessary to Catholicity, will deny her Catholicity. There are some who persist in crying "Peace, peace!" when there is no peace. It will be very difficult to be sure that we have the right solution. Let us all pray to the Holy Ghost to guide us, and to save us from a very great schism. We do not allow ourselves to be excited by the extravagant statements of a few, but aside from them, we must realize that a very large body of loyal and faithful people are seriously concerned as to the action of the Convention regarding the ministry of this Church.

In the last hours of the last Convention an amendment passed the House of Deputies which would have allowed Protestant ministers to occupy our pulpits. The House of Bishops amended it so that it allowed proper persons to be licensed by the Bishops for special occasions; and the House of Deputies accepted it in this form. The public press failed to perceive the meaning of the canon and proclaimed it as an "Open Pulpit canon." Many people supposed it was, and acted, or tried to act, accordingly; and a few Bishops—a very few—allowed such action. Attention should be drawn to the fact that an inquiry made by the American Church Union has shown that with few exceptions the canon has worked as the Bishops intended it should work.

Yet because of the doubt which exists in some minds, it is likely that a new amendment will be proposed. This proposal may come from either side, I hope it will come from neither—and if it comes, it will compel the Church to say where she stands, to make a specific statement as to her doctrine regarding the sacred ministry.

Let this be clear in your minds. Even if a crisis is coming, times that will try men's souls—even if the Convention shall seem to declare a position contrary to the Catholic Church, of the Anglican Communion, and of this American Church during her whole history—let us remember that the Church's fundamental constitution is not declared by a mere canon. A canon which goes beyond the Constitution is ultra vires and the Church has not changed her attitude. For one, I cannot conceive, as I hear of schism, of my being driven out of the Church by any action of that sort whatsoever, because in the Preface to the Ordinal and the Constitution, her position is declared in such a way that even if the Church seemed to declare another position, it would be the duty of every one to stand—not contra mundum but even contra Ecclesiam Americanam. Not until the Church changes her fundamental law, denies Catholicity, and becomes a Protestant sect, not until then will it be time for those who believe in Catholicity to be pushed from the position where God has placed them. Let us pray that we may be so steadfast that no man or group of men can cause us to swerve.

Let us note the bearing of this matter on our district. We recognize that the question which has been raised as to Holy Orders must be answered, and the sooner the better. If it is answered in the negative I think we have no responsibility whatever except to get out and give up.

It is not merely a question of the historic episcopate. It is a question of the authority of the Church, and whether or no the authority has been committed to an Apostolic Ministry not only of Bishops but of priests as well. If there is not this authority of an Apostolic and a mediatorial priesthood, the sooner the fact is discovered the better. If this body is a little Episcopal sect, then we have no business whatever in Western Kansas. If this doctrine is true, if there is no authority which does not abide in men of all Christian sects, then of all sects this has the least reason for existing in Western Kansas. If we are the American Catholic Church, having jurisdiction and authority in America in contradistinction to a Roman Catholic Church submitting to an authority on the banks of the Tiber, then we have a mission, and even if we have only one baptized member in a place, we are called to go forward because God has sent us. It is not a question of counting noses, it is a question of passing on the gifts which God has entrusted to us. But if we have nothing of this sort to bestow, then it is an absolute sin of very grievious character—perhaps the unpardonable sin against the Holy Ghost—for us to be working in the smaller places of Western Kansas. If we are only a little Protestant Episcopal sect it is our duty to withdraw and leave the field to the Methodists, who have done such noble service and are here in such numbers, or to those who call themselves "Christians." We might continue to support services where we have sufficient numbers to warrant us in providing a form of worship which we prefer, but we have no right to go into the little towns if we are only another sect.

If it comes to counting noses, however, we must remember that by far the largest number of Christians hold the historic ministry, not as a thing merely useful, but absolutely necessary, so much so that men have declared such things as these: "No salvation out of the Church," "No Church without the Bishop." Where this attitude has been held by Catholic Christendom: by the English Church during the eighteen or nineteen centuries of her existence and by the American Church during the one hundred and twenty-two years of her separate corporate existence, we should hardly expect to see a change of front at this day. If the Church seems to do this, such a canon would be necessarily inoperative because ultra vires, just as in the case of the celebrated canon against ritual, which was without force, a dead letter until repealed. If people do not foolishly lose their heads, become unduly excited or overanxious, but pray earnestly to the Holy Spirit for guidance, we may be confident that neither the one side nor the other will move, but will quietly wait for the decision of the Bishops to answer to the petition of 1,163 memorialists, which has been in their hands for a considerable time; and peace will be restored.

EUCHARIST.

Two lights on a lowly Altar,
  Two snowy cloths for a feast,
Two vases of dying roses.
  The morning comes from the East
With a gleam for the fold of the vestments
  And a grace for the face of the priest.

The sound of a low, sweet whisper
  Floats over a little bread,
And trembles around a chalice,
  And the priest bows down his head
O'er a sign of white on the Altar,
  In the cup o'er a sign of red.

As red as the red of roses,
  As white as the white of snows;
But the red is the red of a surface
  Beneath which a God's Blood flows,
And the white is the white of a sunlight
  Within which a God's Flesh glows.

Ah! words of the olden Thursday
  Ye come from the far away!
Ye bring us the Friday's victim,
  In His own love's olden way.
In the hands of the priest at the Altar
  His Heart finds Its home to-day.

The sight of a Host uplifted!
  The silver sound of a bell!
The gleam of a golden chalice!
  Be glad, sad heart, 'tis well;
He made and He keeps love's promise
  With thee all days to dwell.

From his hand to his lips that tremble,
  From his lips to his heart a thrill,
Goes the little Host on Its love path
  Still doing the Father's Will;
And over the rim of the chalice
  The Blood flows forth to fill

The heart of a man anointed
  With the waves of a wondrous grace;
A silence falls on the Altar—
  An awe on each bended face—
For the Heart that beats on Calvary
  Still beats in the Holy Place.

The priest comes down to the railing
  Where brows are bowed in prayer;
In the tender clasp of his fingers
  A Host lies pure and fair,
And the hearts of Christ and the Christian
  Meet there and only there!

Oh! love that is deep and breathless!
  Oh! faith that is strong and grand!
Oh! hope that will shine forever
  O'er the wastes of a weary land!
Christ's Heart finds an earthly Heaven
  In the palm of the priest's pure hand!

FATHER RYAN.

SOME MESSENGERS AND WHERE THEY WENT.—XII.

The work in the Carolinas, described in our last chapter, was, with that in most of the other colonies, the outcome of long and patient effort on the part of the Venerable Society. Before proceeding any further it might be well to show how the way was prepared by the Society for those who afterward became its regular missionaries.

At the beginning of the eighteenth century, in all the length and breadth of the American colonies, there were established church services only in Virginia, Maryland, Philadelphia, New York, and Boston—and those insufficient. For the rest, John Eliot had labored among the Indians, who also had some memories of the Jesuits' teachings in earlier times. There was also a missionary society, called the "New England Society,' non-sectarian, founded in Cromwell's time, and reorganized by permission of Charles II. The Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in Foreign Parts decided to send out pioneer missionaries to see exactly what was wanted and to arouse the interest of the colonists themselves in the efforts which were being made for their spiritual welfare.

There volunteered for this work a man peculiarly well fitted—the Rev. George Keith. He had begun as a Presbyterian, then became a Quaker, and went over to Pennsylvania. There he became convinced that he had made a mistake, and returned to England to take Holy Orders in the Church. He had now just been ordained, and was eager to go back to the land whose needs he personally understood so well. With him went the Rev. Patrick Gordon in 1702. They had a very pleasant voyage, being in the company of the Governors of New England and New Jersey, who treated them most cordially. The chaplain of the ship, Rev. John Talbot, became so enthusiastic that he applied for work with the Society, and joined the Rev. Mr. Keith. All through the journals and records of that time and in the various hand-books one finds the expression "Keith and Talbot," as of a firm doing business. So it was—the King's business, and nobly these messengers did their part.

Mr. Keith made the following statement as to the extent of their labors:

"I have an entire journal of my two years' missionary travel and service on the continent of North America, between Piscataway River in New England and Coretuck in North Carolina; of extent in length about eight hundred miles, within which bounds are ten different colonies and governments, all under the Crown of England, viz.: Piscataway, Boston (colony called Massachusetts Bay), Rhode Island (colony included also Narragansett and other adjacent parts on the continent), Connecticut, New York, East and West Jersey, Pensilvania, Maryland, Virginia, and North Carolina. I traveled twice over most of those governments and colonies, and I preached oft in many of them, particularly in Pensilvania, West and East Jersey, and New York provinces, where we continued longest, and found the greatest occasion for our services.

"In all the places where we traveled and preached we found the people generally well affected to the doctrine that we preached among them, and they did generally join with us decently in the Liturgy and public prayers, and administration of the Holy Sacraments, after the usage of the Church of England, as we had occasion to use them. And where ministers were wanting (as there were wanting in many places), the people earnestly desired us to present their request to the Honorable Society to send ministers unto them.

"There is a mighty cry and desire, almost in all places where we have traveled, to have ministers of the Church of England sent to them in these northern parts of America. The poor Church has nobody upon the spot to comfort or confirm her children; nobody to ordain several that are willing to serve, were they authorized, for the work of the ministry."

For two years and twenty months Mr. Keith traveled through the English colonies, traveling by day, preaching, and at night writing out teachings by hand, besides circulating much devotional reading at his own expense.

The homeopathic doses of history given to the children in our public schools are generally sugar-coated. The early settlers in the various colonies are represented as exiles for their faith, martyrs to the cause of religious liberty, men who lived and died struggling for "the right to worship God according to the dictates of their own conscience." Perhaps you remember exactly how those words looked on a certain page.

Very good; except when some came into New England seeking religious freedom of some other kind. Then did the Puritans turn upon them with regular Old Testament fury. The Quakers suffered most, though tortures were generously handed out to any strangers whose theology did not suit the local powers.

The Quakers, in their turn, after being harassed and driven from place to place, found a resting place in Pennsylvania and New Jersey. And there they proceeded to add their share to the persecutions of the time. For, although their teaching forbade physical violence, it did not seem to restrain their tongues, and bitter was the war waged against the Church missionaries.

Certainly, though, it was a trial to them, this return of one who had worked in their midst for a number of years as one of themselves, and then had left them for the sort of religion which they most particularly disliked. Nevertheless, the missionaries worked quietly along, and Mr. Keith himself baptized two hundred of these very Quakers. At Frankfort, the Quakers' meeting was turned into a church.

In Virginia, although Church services had been established from the very first, the missionaries found great need of workers. Nominally the colony was divided into parishes, but these lengthened out as the colonists went farther into the wilderness, so that one was visited which was fifty miles long! In those days most of the business of Virginia was transacted with tobacco instead of money, so that even the clergy were paid in tobacco. There was one kind which had a peculiarly sweet, rich fragrance, and commanded a high price. It could be grown only in certain localities, so that one report gravely stated "the clergy show a preference for sweet-smelling parishes."

In Maryland, the missionaries were invited to a conference with the Quakers, at a place called Herring Neck. But Mr. Keith had hardly begun his discourse when he was interrupted without ceremony and abused in the most vigorous language. One sermon, however, preached in this locality, was so acceptable to the congregation that they subscribed to have it printed, and copies were circulated far and wide.

In New Jersey the missionaries had a warm welcome. The Governor—their traveling companion on the way over—had already written to the society, begging help for the colony. At Perth Amboy some faithful souls had patched up an old building into some semblance of a church and called for a gathering of the church people throughout the eastern part. They found that there were only twelve communicants to be found. Among the boys and young men gambling and drinking were on the increase, and there was little pretense at religion of any kind, except among the Quakers. Mr. Keith found there many old friends who had decided to come into the Church at about the time he did, and were glad to welcome him back as their leader. Mr. Talbot, a year after, settled down there and got the Church into very good condition, especially at Burlington.

Perhaps you have been wondering why Rev. Patrick Gordon's labors were not mentioned. He came over with Mr. Keith, but not as an itinerant. Some time before, the Society had received an urgent letter from Colonel Heathcote, commanding the militia in Westchester County, New York. He had found the people reserving Sunday for a day of general amusement, including fights and rowdyism of all kinds. After ineffectual remonstrances he had notified the militia that, as it seemed to be a day of special lawlessness, Sunday would have extra duties and special drills. To avert this severity, the men bestirred themselves and elected "Readers," who should hold some sort of devotional exercises to mark the day. Colonel Heathcote and others earnestly besought the Society to lose no time in sending over six missionaries. Mr. Gordon was the first sent in response. He laid down his life as truly as any saint of the Church ever did. Bearing his share of the fatigues and exposures belonging to an ocean voyage in those times, he reached his new parish, almost too worn out to enjoy the hearty welcome he received. He went about his work quietly, and made up his calendar for the first week, but was taken very ill the day before he was to have officiated in public for the first time, and died a few days later. This had a great effect on the colonists, and when Mr. Keith went there multitudes stood at the doors and windows to hear him—the churches being filled. At Oyster Bay, a justice of the peace was baptized, with his family.

In New England, the Puritans being so strong, there were only two Church clergymen. These received the missionaries at Boston, and a vigorous struggle began. For when, as often happened, Mr. Keith acceded to the general request of his hearers, and had his discourses printed—in New York, by the way; no Boston printer would dare—Mr. Increase Mather was moved to write and circulate many essays declaring Church teaching unscriptural. The effect was good. The young men, growing up in the northern parts, went into the arguments with interest; interest led to thought, and thought to conviction. Probably as a result of the discussions of this time, with the tracts and copies of the Prayer-book which were scattered everywhere, the president and two of the faculty of Yale College, the very stronghold of Puritanism, declared for the Church. Dr. Cutler and

Mr. Brown went to England for ordination, and returned to labor in New England for nearly half a century.

Now that we have some idea of the general state of things when the Society formally began its work in the colonies, we will go on, in the next chapters, and take up the Church growth in each colony separately, till the organization of the American Church in 1789.

It is hard for us, nowadays, to realize the bitterness of opposition from those outside the Church—yes, we ll admit that it was unchristian and in many instances shameful. But, hnmanly speaking, there was great excuse.

Was it from the Quakers? They believed in the guidance of the Holy Spirit, "lightening every man that cometh into the world," and in their own fantastic way they sought a genuine religion; not a religion protected by the government, prescribed by law; but of the individual, leading him to do right because it was right, and purifying his inner life. At that time, or just before, the spirituality of the Church seemed to be at low ebb, and many of the clergy, obtaining their livings through influence, led careless and self-indulgent lives. The very beginning of the S. P. G. was a protest against the selfish indifference of the Church generally to its people's needs. The Quaker idea is, so far as we can judge from those who live among us, a life devoid of worldliness, incessantly occupied in works of mercy. For a century, in England, for instance, the Quakers worked against the slave trade, with its unspeakable horrors. The abolition of it, in 1807, crowned the Evangelical Churchmen with glory; headed by the saintly Wilberforce, they had achieved this thing for the sake of humanity; but perhaps in God's sight, the depised Quakers had their share. And just as they had reached a point where a large region seemed to be at their disposal, in came these "hirelings of the Gospel," and the people ran after them!

Or the Puritans? When they adopted independent beliefs they had suffered exile, death, starvation; had struggled through the pioneer times; and now, into their hardly-earned homelands came preachers bringing the very sort of religion from which they had worked so hard to get away.

Or the Roman Catholics? Within the memory of some then living, the English, in the name of religion, had put Romanists to death, usually cutting the hearts out of their living bodies.

In those days religious intolerance was the lion in the way of the missionaries. Nowadays, tolerance is killing our spiritual life, with its cry, "One religion is as good as another; let well enough alone." Better the earnest opponent, who makes you defend your belief and live consistently in it, than the easy-going neighbors who smother every effort with good-natured ridicule and indifference. As an ancient warrior said, "God send us open enemies, and the strength to fight them!"

The Children's Corner

DEAR CHILDREN:—Here is the calendar for the month:

August 6—Feast of the Transfiguration.

This feast was kept by Christians in very early times, but as it was not in the English Prayer-book it was not put into our Prayer-book in America in 1789. But you know the Prayer-book was thoroughly gone over and revised in 1892, and this Collect was inserted then. I suppose you wonder why, if the Christian year from Advent to the Ascension follows the Life of Christ, this great event is not observed during that time. Probably the reason is that the first half of the Christian year follows His Human, everyday Life, as the Son of Man. It is meant as a pattern or ensample to us, to be imitated. The Transfigruation was just a momentary glimpse of His glory in heaven, which a few of His disciples were allowed to see, to strengthen them for the terrible trial of their faith which was about to follow, in His Crucifixion. As they came down from the Mount, He straitly charged them that they should tell no man about this till after His Resurrection. So you see, in following the Human Life of Jesus till His Ascension, and then, some time later, telling the story of the Transfiguration, we are doing just as the Apostles did.

It is a very good Collect to come in, just at this time, this thought of Jesus in His glory. During other parts of the year you are in harness, so to speak, and are constantly reminded of what you ought to do. But in summer there is no school and no Sunday school to make you keep up; and then we, who have to stay in town, do suffer so dreadfully from the heat that it is hard work, some days, to even say our prayers. Or perhaps you are out of town somewhere, having so much fun that you forget your prayers. Either way, people are very apt to grow careless and forgetful of heavenly things in the summer time.

Then along comes this dear Feast, and reading carefully the Gospel for the day we realize that we mustn't let the "disquietude of this world," either of discomfort or of pleasure, come between us and that dear God.

August 7—Eleventh Sunday after Trinity.

This Collect was written by Gelasius in 492. "Running the way of God's commandments" sounds a little like outdoor exercise, doesn't it? Once a boy I knew was training for field day in a town up in New England. Every day, when he started out, he had to think carefully what he might or might not do, so as to keep himself in good condition. And especially, the kind of food he ought to have was stated, and he had to have just so much of that—no more. So, every day, as we start out, we ought to ask God to give us just the sort of heavenly grace we need for that day's trials.

August 14—Twelfth Sunday after Trinity.

"Forgiving us those things whereof our conscience is afraid." Sometimes we are so ashamed of ourselves we hardly feel like praying; it seems as if God's patience must be exhausted! It's hard to understand, but it really is true: God wants our love, and the sooner we turn to Him for forgiveness the better pleased He is. Don't wait till you get over feeling so ashamed of it—you won t pray so earnestly then. This Collect is by Leo, 440.

August 21—Thirteenth Sunday after Trinity.

This Collect, and the next Sunday's, are also by Leo.

August 24—St. Bartholomew.

Collect by Gregory, 590.

August 28—Fourteenth Sunday after Trinity.

Both these Collects are full of reminders that on some happy day we shall go home to God, away from this world, through with all temptation and suffering forever.

I suppose you don't feel the need of such a thought so much as older people, and yet I know that a child often thinks of the Life of the World to Come, and is glad. It comes over one at unexpected times, as a child, just in a little brief flash, a glimpse, like the Transfiguration, and even if your life seems to go on in just the same old way, and some one calls you out of your happy thought to come in and set the table, or run an errand, yet you feel better for a long time. That's because, at such times, you are peculiarly close to God.

Once there was a young girl who had been away from home on a journey. She was considered old enough to come back by herself, and so she got on the train at New York and sped happily homeward. But she did not know that the train was losing so much time that she was missing the connection at the little junction town. When she reached there the local train had gone and there was no other that night. She knew this place well; she knew that on this particular night the miners were paid and the town would soon be full of rough drinking fellows. It was not possible to stay there, and there were no friends of hers living anywhere near. The only thing was to walk the long, rough way to her own home, more than five miles away, and this she did. It was pitch dark, but she was glad of that: it seemed safer. But she didn't know the way very well, and it was a very tiresome and dangerous thing for the youngster to be out alone among the iron mines at that late hour. She trudged along, and when it got almost too wearisome, she said to herself: "I'll see if I can think of a hymn that begins with A, and say it, and then I'll count a hundred steps and see how far I am then." What happened then was rather a startler—she encountered somebody's old cow, and was dreadfully afraid at first that it might be one of a herd of cross cows that occasionally wandered down from Mt. Riga. But there was only one cow, and it was good-natured, so she went on. Then she tried to think of a hymn that began with B, got one, said it, and then counted ninety steps. This really became rather interesting. I shall not tell you what the hymns were, because some time you might want to while away a hard time, and it's half the pleasure to think of the hymn yourself. When she got to G, though—I will tell you that, because it was so appropriate—the hymn was, "God shall charge His angel legions." "This certainly fits my case," she said to herself, "though these aren't 'hostile regions,' exactly." Just then she heard a loud noise, and as it came nearer she hurriedly climbed a fence and cuddled down into the grass in the dark, trembling very much. For the noise was made by a party of miners, who had been drinking, and now were quarreling. They stopped in the middle of the road and began to fight, but seemed to change their minds, and went on. So presently the little girl crept out, trembling very much, and went on. "I think these are 'hostile regions,' after all!" she said.

(I suppose you are asking, "Why didn't she telephone to her people?" Oh, you blessed twentieth century youngsters, they didn't have telephones in little country villages then. I don't believe there were any, anywhere, at that time.)

At last, at last, she reached her own gate, and turned in. Just for the joy of it she stopped by the window, and looked in. There were all the dear folks; the baby in his high chair by the table, playing with some blocks; her big brother, reading the evening paper. Oh, dear; how precious and comfortable it looked! She stumbled up the steps and into the house, and they all rushed to meet her, crying, "You dear child." And then, seeing how exhausted she was, her brother picked her up in his strong arms and carried her up to her own little white room, where a delicious hot supper was carried up to her, and she had all sorts of comforts and was very happy. But when she was all tucked up for the night, just as she was going to sleep, it came over her: "This is like getting to paradise, and when Brother carried me up here, it made me think of 'underneath are the everlasting arms.' I am glad, almost, that I had such a hard time to-night, it is so lovely to be safe and at home."

"Oh, Saving Victim, opening wide
The gate of Heaven to man below,
Our foes press on on every side;
Thine aid supply, Thy grace bestow."

"And God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes; and there shall be no more death, neither sorrow, nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain."

God bring us all safe home.

INTROITS FOR AUGUST.

Eleventh Sunday after Trinity.

INTROIT:—God is in His holy habitation, He is the God that maketh men to be of one mind in an house: He will give strength and power unto His people.

Psalm. Let God arise and let His enemies be scattered: let them that hate Him flee before Him.

Glory be, etc.

(Repeat antiphon.)

GRADUAL:—My heart hath trusted in God and I am helped: therefore my soul danceth for joy and in my song will I praise Him. Unto Thee will I cry O Lord: be not silent O my God, nor depart from me. Alleluia. Alleluia. Lord, Thou hast been our refuge: from one generation to another.

Twelfth Sunday after Trinity.

INTROIT:—Haste Thee O God to deliver me, make haste to help me O Lord: Let mine enemies be ashamed and confounded that seek after my soul.

Psalm. Let them be turned backward and put to confusion: that wish me evil.

Glory be, etc.

(Repeat antiphon.)

GRADUAL:—I will always give thanks unto the Lord: His praise shall be ever in my mouth. My soul shall make her boast in the Lord: The humble shall hear thereof and be glad. Alleluia. Alleluia. O come let us sing unto the Lord: let us heartily rejoice in the strength of our salvation. Alleluia.

Thirteenth Sunday after Trinity.

INTROIT:—Look upon Thy Covenant O Lord: and forget not the congregation of the poor forever. Arise O God, maintain Thine own cause, and forget not the voice of them that seek Thee.

Psalm. O God wherefore art Thou absent from us so long: why is Thy wrath so hot against the sheep of Thy pasture.

Glory be, etc.

(Repeat antiphon.)

GRADUAL:—Look upon Thy Covenant O Lord: and forget not the poor forever. Arise O Lord, maintain Thine own cause: remember how the foolish man blasphemeth Thee daily. Alleluia. Alleluia. For the Lord is a great God: and a great King over all the earth. Alleluia.

Fourteenth Sunday after Trinity.

INTROIT:—Behold O God our Defender and look upon the face of Thine Anointed: for one day in Thy courts is better than a thousand.

Psalm. O how amiable are Thy dwellings, O Lord of Hosts: my soul hath a desire to enter into the courts of the Lord.

Glory be, etc.

(Repeat antiphon.)

GRADUAL:—It is a good thing to give thanks unto the Lord: and to sing praises unto Thy name O Most Highest. To tell of Thy loving kindness early in the morning; and of Thy truth in the night season. Alleluia. Alleluia. O give thanks unto the Lord and call upon His name: tell the people what things He hath done. Alleluia.

PARISH NOTES.

Commencing September 18 solemn evensong will be resumed on Sundays at 8 p. m.

New albs are needed for the clergy. Will some members of the congregation make contributions toward the cost of the linen?

During the meeting of the general convention in October a service of intercession will be held in the church every weekday afternoon at 4.45 o'clock.

After October 1 the rector may be found on Monday, Wednesday and Friday mornings, from 9.15 until 10, in the Acolytes' room in the parish building. He will be glad to see at this time any who may desire to consult with him on any matter.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL.

We are apt to forget that, humanly speaking, the future of the American church depends upon the children of today. They are the laymen and laywomen of tomorrow. It is of the utmost importance then that the boys and girls of our communion should be receiving proper religious instruction and be in process of training to meet the responsibilities which will rest upon them in after life. Perhaps there is no department of parish work so difficult and so discouraging. Some years ago children went to Sunday school as a matter of course. In the present day and generation Sunday School is not in fashion. From many parishes we hear the same complaint—that the young people of the church are growing up in ignorance of religion which is becoming alarming. It is pitiable to-day to find, on the part of boys and girls baptized and reared in the church, an ignorance of the fundamentals of the Christian faith that seems inexcusable.

Almost at once, when such an assertion is made, the finger of criticism is pointed at the parish clergy. As they are called to instruct those in their care surely any lack of knowledge in their flocks must proceed from neglected duy. It may be—it probably is true—that no man, priest or layman, perfectly fulfills his vocation, but the fault does not lie wholly with the clergy. The children of the twentieth century are allowed to do pretty much as they please. A childish impulse to stay at home from church or Sunday School is rarely in these days over-ridden by parental authority—Jimmy or Mary must be allowed to do as they wish in the matter of religion, and while absence from day school or from work is a serious offense to the parental mind, the obligation of attendance at church or Sunday School is lightly considered, and the parish priest who tries to bring the children together for instruction on the Lord's day, is often met by the discouraging comment from a fond parent that "James doesn't like to go," which, in these days, is always a sufficient reason for his staying at home.

St. Clement's, in common with many other parishes, has had and is having its share of difficulties along these lines, and it is proposed this winter to make a radical change, both as to time and method, and to ask the earnest co-operation of the parents in this fresh effort.

The catechism, which heretofore has been held on Sunday afternoons, will be abolished. The sermon at the children's mass will be omitted and Sunday School will commence at 10 o'clock in the morning, lasting for about one hour. The children will go at once from church to the parish hall, and will be divided into classes for instruction in a regular course of lessons. It is believed that placing the Sunday School at this hour will insure a better attendance at mass and Sunday School, as there will be no further need of bringing the children to the church twice in the day, which is a burden to some who live at a distance.

The Sunday School will commence on the first Sunday in October, and it is hoped that parents will see to it that every child is there for the opening, and that the attendance may be as constant as possible. Every child belonging to the parish, without exception, who is old enough to receive instruction should be present, and should bring, if possible, some playmate who has no other religious affiliation.

Is it too much for the clergy to ask the intelligent and sympathetic interest of every father and mother in the congregation, and may we not beg the earnest intercession of all for this undertaking?

SOME MESSENGERS AND WHERE THEY WENT.

We will now take up the history of each American Colony in chronological order; for the sake of clearness we may repeat some things that have already been told, so as to present the record of each from its founding down to the organization of the American Church in 1789.

VIRGINIA.—Seven attempts had been made by Sir Walter Raleigh to found a colony in the New World. The first expedition sent out by him had aroused great enthusiasm, the Queen had named the new territory "Virginia," deeming it one of the treasures of her reign, volunteers had crowded forward. But the struggle against the Spanish diverted the attention of the sea-going men till after the destruction of the Armada, and Raleigh's last colony, waiting in vain for the help which their governor had gone home to obtain if possible, had perished or been scattered among the Indians. Half a century after, there were Indians with blue eyes and brown hair among the natives of that region; later colonists occasionally came across Indians who could "talk out of a book" and knew the ways of the white people.

Raleigh, after spending more than forty thousand pounds and losing all he had, including his own son, was at last imprisoned and finally put to death on political charges. In one of his last letters he declared that "Virginia would yet be an English nation."

But the memory of the beautiful country across the sea remained, although men realized, after Raleigh's disasters, that the undertaking was too much for any individual. Business men thought of that region as a possible source of wealth; statesmen thought of it as an extension of power, and the Church thought of it as a call to missionary effort. A company was at length formed and great enthusiasm was felt on the part of leading men, clerical and lay. The military commander appointed was Captain John Smith, just returned from a campaign in the East, where he had suffered incredible hardships, only whetting his eager desire for more adventure. He was, moreover, a faithful Christian man. Churchmen were active in this enterprise, the saintly Nicholas Ferrar deeply regretting that he could not himself embark upon it. He was occupied at this time in printing the poems of George Herbert, whose last writing had been full of the subject of American Missions.

King James granted the first charter on April 10, 1606. The company was to be divided into two branches, the London and the Plymouth, one in the southern part of the territory already explored by English discoverers, the other in the northern part. An ordinance was passed, under royal authority, declaring:

"The Presidents, Councils and Ministers shall provide that the Word and Service of God be preached, planted and used, not only in the said Colonies, but also, as much as may be, among the savages bordering among them, according to the rites and doctrines of the Church of England."

The expedition sailed for the southern part on December 9, 1606, taking with it one of the bravest and most patient missionaries.

The Rev. Robert Hunt, at the time that the expedition was being prepared, was settled in a parish in Kent, where he had been vicar for over eight years. He resigned this living in 1602, so as to give his entire time to the matter of the Virginia mission, and was one of the petitioners for the charter. He and Captain Smith became warmly attached to each other, and together they struggled with the difficulties of the journey, the hardships of the first settlement and the contrariness of the settlers themselves.

At the very outset there was trouble. Adverse winds hindered them, and they were kept in sight of the English shore for six weeks. The clergyman was not a good sailor; in fact, he was in such a miserable condition that it seemed as if he might die of exhaustion before they had even started. As one of his fellow travellers remarked, "he was within twenty miles of his old home and could have been put off to return thither, yet did he not give way!" His faithfulness shamed the weak-hearted and the daily services at which he exhorted them, as his strength permitted, helped to maintain the spirit of courage and trust in God.

There were no women in the company, so that there was no incentive to steadiness of purpose, and the men were more generally soldiers of fortune or penniless gentlemen, than the sturdy artificers whose skill and resource would have been a blessing. It was hard to induce those settlers to do any manual work; it was harder still to make them do it properly; they were like a set of spoiled children. But the Chaplain, having survived the long and trying voyage—they were four months on the way—began at once to get some sort of shelter where they could assemble for divine worship. There was about a month spent in exploring up and down the shores of Chesapeake Bay, which they had entered at Easter time; finally, May 13, the peninsula of Jamestown was determined upon. There was a great deal of quarreling, and the "sealed orders" opened as soon as the expedition landed, gave great dissatisfaction. But the messenger of the Prince of Peace proceeded quietly about his work. Captain Smith, his devoted friend and admirer, in his records of the colony, speaks thus of the services:

"I have been often demanded by so many how we began to preach the Gospel in Virginia, and by what authority, what churches we had, our order of service, and maintenance for our ministers, therefore I think it not amiss to satisfy their demands, it being the mother of all our plantations, intreating pride to spare laughter, to understand her simple beginning and proceedings. When I first went to Virgina, I well remember, we did hang an awning (which is an old sail) to three or four trees to overshadow us from the sun, our walls were rails of wood, our seats unhewed trees, till we cut planks; our pulpit a bar of wood nailed to two neighboring trees; in foul weather we shifted into an old rotten tent, for we had few better, and this came by the way of adventure for new. This was our church, till we built a homely thing like a barn, set upon cratchets, covered with rafts, sedge, and earth; so was also the walls; the best of our houses of the like curiosity, but the most part far much worse workmanship, that could neither well defend wind nor rain, yet we had daily common prayer, morning and evening, every Sunday two sermons, and every three months the Holy Communion, till our minister died. But our prayers daily, with an homily on Sunday, we continued two or three years after, till more preachers came."

It was under that "olde sayle" that the Holy Communion was given to the colonists for the first time. Bitter had been the wrangling, the faithful priest had labored to quiet it, and to minister to uneasy consciences, so that he might, at last, on the third Sunday after Trinity, June 21, 1607, feel that they were sufficiently at peace among themselves to properly attend the holy mysteries. Turn to the Collect Epistle and Gospel for that day and see how full of comfort to the lonely priest was the day's teaching, as well as to his flock, and how fitting was St. Peter's exhortation in the Epistle, "All of you be subject one to another."

The next day the missionary gathered his flock to pray for the safe passage and return of Captain Newport, who sailed for England, leaving one hundred and four men to carry on the work of the colony. Probably he had the wisdom to take the most troublesome back with him; at any rate, after his departure, the colonists seem to have set to work with, what little skill they had, to establish themselves against the coming winter and ever-present savages. So far these were not unfriendly; Smith records that the little bands, led out into the wilderness after game and fresh water, were directed to hold morning prayers and repeat a psalm at a certain hour. "The savages looked on with great amazement." Rough fortifications were thrown up, and within these houses of a sort were built. But the summer heat and the dampness brought on disease; good drinking water was not to be had. The little store of wines and liquors must be kept for the very sick; yet let it be recorded that the chaplain reserved the best of the wine for the Blessed Sacrament, for occasional services and for the dying. Let it also be recorded that the colonists seem to have agreed to this as a matter of course, while dying in torments of thirst. When we consider what sort of men many of them were, and the weakness of the governing body, it shows a wonderful hold gained over them by the devoted spirit of that brave man, Rev. Robert Hunt. He suffered with his people. Before autumn half the colonists had died and the chaplain was constantly attending the sick and reading the burial service. This had to be read, generally, within the fort, and then the dead were collected and buried hurriedly for fear the Indians would realize their losses and become bold.

Soon after Christmas a fire broke out, and the whole of the little settlement, the houses built with awkward pains, and the little rough church were destroyed. The missionary lost all he possessed, especially his precious store of books, but his courage and devotion never flagged. Smith admiringly speaks of this:

"Good Master Hunt, our preacher, lost all his library and all that he had (but the clothes on his back), yet none ever saw him repine at his loss. Upon any alarm he would be as ready for defence as any, and till he could not speak he never ceased to his utmost to animate us constantly to persist; whose soul, questionless, is with God."

Newport opportunely arrived with fresh supplies, and the settlers took heart again. But the missionary, worn out with hardships, having seen his flock out of their danger, went home to God.

The Ghildren's Corner

DEAR CHILDREN:—Some months ago you and I began dating portions of our Prayer-books, and especially we paid attention to the Collects. There was more than one reason for this. We wished to follow the Christian Year, and the Collects were convenient little sign-posts to point us on our way.

But there is another reason—the most important act of worship that we have is the Eucharist—the Holy Communion; and the Collects were originally composed for use at that time. If you were out of school some morning at 9 o'clock and were to attend the Morning Prayer in the Chapel—don't you ever? why not?—you would hear, at the very beginning of the prayers, the same Collect which was recited by the Priest at the last Sunday or Saint's Day Communion. It serves to remind us, all through the week, of the season's teaching.

Now, if you want to get out your pencils, you may mark the oldest parts of the Service. At the very beginning, the Lord's Prayer; just write "Jesus" on the margin of that; then, in the fine print, directing as to the Epistle and Gospel, write "since about 100"; then, mark the direction as to the Sermon "Earliest times." And, by the way, look up Acts XX:7. "Breaking Bread" was the name for the Communion there, and you see St. Paul was the preacher at that Eucharist. And then write, "Earliest times" in the margin where it begins "For in the night in which he was betrayed" . . . . and by the Sacred Words write "Jesus;" and think of Him when you hear those words in the Service. You will find that on page 235.

Before we go any further, let us look for a moment at the different names by which this Service is called.

By the Apostles it was called The Lord's Supper and The Holy Communion. There is a Greek name for it, which is beautiful, because it means "Thanksgiving," and we ought never to leave after the Service without thanking God. This idea of Thanksgiving was used by the Apostles themselves; St. Paul sometimes refers to it as "Giving of Thanks," and as he wrote in Greek, "Eucharist" may be considered a very ancient and proper name for the Service.

After awhile, when the persecutions were nearly over and Christians began to worship in Churches, openly, many were attracted to the services out of curiosity and others as "hearers" not yet ready to believe; and others came as catechumes, under instructions, but not yet baptized. So when the Service began, there would be many present who were not Christians at all, who could not understand about the Communion and from whom that secret mystery should be kept hidden. So, as early as in St. Clement's time, perhaps, when the Instruction part of the Service was over, before the faithful began their preparation of prayer, a Deacon would come to the chancel steps and say "Ite, missa est," which meant that those who were not Christians should leave. Those words became dear to the congregations, they seemed to shut them in, in a sort of a holy seclusion, with Jesus, and so the word "Missa" came to be used a great deal for that service which "dismissed" all outsiders and in which Jesus came to His own, as He came to His disciples on the first Easter Day, "the doors being shut."

Later the word became "Mass," which you are accustomed to use; but I want to make you think of the other names, as they are used all through the Church, although there is not, and never will be, any name which worthily designates that great act of worship.

There is a great deal more to tell you about this Service, but I must not make this month's letter too long.

Now, what Collects have we for this month?

September 4—Fifteenth Sunday after Trinity; Gelasius, 492.

September 11—Sixteenth Sunday after Trinity; Gelasius, 492.

September 18—Seventeenth Sunday after Trinity; Gregory, 590.

September 21—St. Matthew the Apostle and Evangelist.

This Collect was written in for the English Prayer-book in 1549, though it was kept as a holy-day as far back as 703. It is very suitable, coming at this time; the Gospel for the day is taken from St. Matthew's own Gospel and tells in his own words of how he left his business and followed Jesus into Ministry.

September 25—Eighteenth Sunday after Trinity.

This was written by Gelasius.

September 29—St. Michael and All Angels.

The Collect is by Gregory.

I want you, just for a moment, to think of the humility of the Angels. They have their places in Heaven, near God, worshipping Him, yet "succor and defend us on earth." What a mission! To be so near to God and yet to cheerfully attend us, at His command, all through our wretched little simple lives—no place so wretched that you Angel will not follow you there, promptly and cheerfully, simply because he knows God loves you and therefore he must do the will of God and help you. Too many times we come out of Church, from the worship of God, and turn away from some person or duty, because it isn't pleasant; or worse still, despise some forlorn creature we see on the next corner. Let the holy feelings of prayer stay in our hearts and move us to pray silently to our Dear God to bless them as He is blessing us. "Acts of the Presence of God" we are often to make, but if you form a habit of making a quick, earnest prayer for every person you pass on the street who seems to need help or comfort, your whole life will be an act of the Presence of God.

INTROITS AND GRADUALS FOR SEPTEMBER.

Fifteenth Sunday after Trinity.

INTROIT:—Bow down Thine ear O Lord and hear me; My God save Thy servant that putteth his trust in Thee: be merciful unto me O Lord, for I will call daily upon Thee. Comfort the soul of Thy servant: for unto Thee O Lord do I lift up my soul.

Glory be, etc.

(Repeat antiphon.)

GRADUAL:—It is better to trust in the Lord: than to put any confidence in princes. Alleluia, Alleluia. O God, my heart is ready, my heart is ready: I will sing and give praise with the best member that I have. Alleluia.

Sixteenth Sunday after Trinity.

INTROIT:—Be merciful unto me, O Lord, for I will call daily upon Thee: for Thou Lord art good and gracious and of great mercy unto all them that call upon Thee.

Psalm. Bow down Thine ear O Lord and hear me: for I am poor and in misery.

Glory be, etc.

(Repeat antiphon.)

GRADUAL:—The heathen shall fear Thy name O Lord: and all the kings of earth Thy majesty. When the Lord shall build up Sion: and when His glory shall appear. Alleluia, Alleluia. Ye that fear the Lord put your trust in the Lord: He is their helper and defender. Alleluia.

Seventeenth Sunday after Trinity.

INTROIT—Righteous art Thou O Lord and true is Thy judgment: O deal with Thy servant according to Thy loving mercy.

Psalm. Blessed are those that are undefiled in the way: and walk in the law of the Lord.

Glory be, etc.

(Repeat antiphon.)

GRADUAL:—Blessed is the people whose God is the Lord: and blessed are the folk that He hath chosen to be His inheritance. By the Word of the Lord were the heavens made; and all the host of them by the breath of His mouth. Alleluia, Alleluia. The right hand of the Lord bringeth mighty things to pass: the right hand of the Lord hath the preeminence. Alleluia.

Eighteenth Sunday after Trinity.

INTROIT:—Give peace to them that wait for Thee O Lord and let Thy prophets be found faithful: hear the prayers of Thy servant and of Thy people Israel.

Psalm. I was glad when they said unto me: we will go into the house of the Lord.

Glory be, etc.

(Repeat antiphon.)

GRADUAL:—I was glad when they said unto me: we will go into the house of the Lord. Peace be within Thy walls: and plenteousness within Thy palaces. Alleluia, Alleluia. I was glad when they said unto me: we will go into the house of the Lord. Alleluia.

PARISH NOTES.

The regular schedule of services for the winter has been resumed.

The poor fund is at present much in need of funds, and the rector will be glad for contributions for this object.

Rev. Fr. Day, who has been with us during the summer, has accepted a curacy at Mt. Calvary Church, Baltimore.

The parishioners are reminded that the names for commemoration on All Souls' day should be sent in not later than the 31st of October.

The clergy are again in residence after their summer holiday. As the members of the parish return one by one, let each ask himself: "What can I do this winter for the glory of God in St. Clement's Church?"

Sunday School will be resumed the first Sunday in October at 10 o'clock, as noted in the Magazine for last month. Parents are urged again to co-operate with the clergy in bringing together all the children of the parish.

A very handsome morse has been presented to the Church. It was specially designed, and consists of a large topaz, set in copper. The inscription reads "In memory of Fannie C. Cooper, died May 20, 1905. JESU, mercy."

The Summer Outing Fund amounted to $240.97.

Eighty-one women and children were invided to spend from one to two weeks in the country or at the seashore. Of this number thirty-seven declined, either because they could not leave home, or because they had made other arrangements for their holiday.

Those who accepted the invitation were much benefited by the rest and change.

On the whole, the Summer Outing Fund has proved a successful experiment.

SOME MESSENGERS AND WHERE THEY WENT—XV.

After the death of their chaplain, the Virginia colonists met another disaster. Smith was so badly hurt by an explosion of gunpowder that he had to return to England. The colony struggled along as best it could. The Indians were generally hostile; while the fort was building, one Englishman was killed. The Indians hid in the long waving grass and were an ever-present terror. Still, in their ignorance of hunting and fishing, the colonists were fain to make what peace they could with the red-skins, whose visits, when they were friendly, meant supplies of food to be bartered for trinkets.

It wasn't unendurable till winter. Then the settlers had no meat, for the Indians drove away their hogs. The cold was unusually severe, and the whites were afraid to cut down wood in the forests on account of lurking Indians. Little by little, doors, furniture, even the palisades, were torn down for fuel. The death of many whole families from cold and starvation left empty cabins, which the survivors seized upon. Meanwhile at home preparations were being made for their relief. Lord de le Ware—or, as he usually is called, Delaware—was pushing forward a large expedition, and the leading men of the Church and State were assisting him. It is more than likely, however, that the first and perhaps the largest subscriptions were his own.

As a sort of object lesson, the service held in Temple Church, when the expedition was about ready, was made a very imposing occasion. There was some military display, and an enormous congregation. This was to be a missionary venture, and the sermon—the first missionary sermon preached in the English Church since the Reformation—was most inspiring.

It was not possible for Lord Delaware himself to start with the expedition, unless he delayed it for some months, so Sir Thomas Gates was appointed Lieutenant-Governor. There were nine ships, but only six of these reached Virginia. A storm wrecked them near the Bermudas and they barely escaped with their lives. Six months were spent in this enforced exile. The only thing possible seemed to be to build such craft as they could from the wrecks of their ships and what wood they could get. They seem to have found cedar and to have worked patiently at their discouraging task. The chaplain, the Rev. Richard Bucke, held daily services; there was one wedding; they were saddened by six deaths. When they finally finished their ships, after six months' hard work, they set up a cross with an inscription, as a token to any who should afterward come that way, of "God's great mercy to them."

Men of this temper could not but bring a blessing wherever they went, though when they reached Virginia, where some of their party had arrived some months before, they found a desperate state of things, to which they brought "only so many more hungry mouths," as one writer says.

But they had brought also trust in God. Landing, the first act was a solemn procession to the battered little church, where the chaplain read prayers. And then Gates formally assumed command and a council was held. It was impossible to remain as they were, and they decided, now they had at least the means of transportation, to creep up along the coast, hoping to reach the Newfoundland fishing banks.

On the morning of June 17, they left Jamestown, as they thought, forever; it had been more like a cemetery than a home, and there was no regret. But the very next day, at noon, they met the ships of Lord Delaware's own relief party, and at once turned back. Delaware's landing was worthy of all that is told about this Christian gentleman. As he stepped to the shore, he knelt at once, and there were a few moments of silent prayer. Then he headed the procession to the church, where a service was held, as before, followed by a council. It was a pitiful little colony over which he governed. Sixty half-starved people only survived the original five hundred settlers. But they went eagerly to work, and Lord Delaware devoted himself to them. There was this much in their favor, those who had survived such hardships were naturally pretty strong and would not be easily dismayed by privation or hard work. And the newcomers had been chosen more wisely than at other times, and were for the most part artisans and laborers.

The church was rebuilt and enlarged; pews were made of cedar and an altar of black walnut. Services were read daily, and on Sundays the church was decked with wildflowers and gay with the scarlet colors of the Governor's body-guard.

From the first, the Church of England was established by law; its ministers rendered an account of all baptisms, weddings, and burials, their salaries were fixed by law, and lands allotted to them. The Society for the Propagation of the Gospel, therefore, although it visited this colony, found things so much better churchwise that generally only two missionaries were at work there. In 1639 the brick church was built at Jamestown, whose tower still stands.

Really, the first clergymen of Virginia were its missionaries. Most of them lived to see prosperity of a sort replace the extreme suffering of the early settlers, but they were men whose ability had already earned them a place in the church at home, who sacrificed a great deal in coming to the wilderness. Especially was this the case with the Rev. Alexander Whitaker, whose delightful home in England, which he cheerfully left, called forth words of appreciation from a writer of that time. Speaking of this priest, he thanked God for the "wondrous blessing bestowed on us in this our Minister, who had left such a warm nest, to endure with us in the wilderness."

In 1685 the Rev. James Blair went as a missionary to Virginia, where he served as rector at Henrico for nine years, being made a commissary in 1698. He saw the need of a College, and in 1691 he went to England to raise funds for it. Obtaining the patronage of the King and Queen, the College was accordingly named "William and Mary," and Doctor Blair was appointed its first president. A condition was that it should provide training for the Ministry. The buildings were designed by Sir Christopher Wren.

Doctor Blair had quite a struggle to keep up the College for a long time; as usual, the very people in whose interest it was founded took the least interest in it. It was not fashionable to educate young men in the colony; they were sent to England. Many of the clergy, too, did not favor it; so, though the first commencement, in 1700, aroused much interest, it was years before the College really had any hold on the youth of the colony.

There was another and graver reason, for which we must go back a little. The Indians had ceased their open hostility with the arrival of Delaware, and for a long time mingled with the English in the most friendly intercourse. The leaders of the colony never lost sight of their promise to convert the heathen, and steps were taken to found a school where young Indian boys should be educated till they were twenty-one years of age, and then given equal rights with the English lads. Great enthusiasm was felt at home, £3500 had been subscribed, 10,000 acres of land reserved for endowment, Bibles, Prayerbooks and Communion plate given. The Rev. George Thorpe was appointed first rector of the school, and came over, eagerly welcomed, to begin the work. Hardly had he arrived, when, without any warning, the Indians arose and slew as many of the colonists as could not fight or escape; a few families were warned, at the shortest notice, and fled with the Christian Indians who had brought them word; but there were between three and four hundred killed in the massacre. Among them was the saintly Thorpe. It is not strange, therefore, that the survivors' families could not be roused to interest in the scheme which had terminated so fatally.

The church clergy in Virginia did not have the struggle that they had in almost every other colony. Perhaps for that reason they were decidedly lax as time went on. As the situation became less difficult, it ceased to attract such ardent souls as had first come over, and probably many of the Virginia clergy could not possibly have held parishes at home. It is a fact that many parishes preferred lay-readers to clergy, when they had the choice.

The outbreak of the revolution was the test of their sincerity. Some compromised, omitting the prayers for the King objected to by the "patriots." Others closed their churches and did not officiate. Others left the country. Others enlisted, and of these two became brigadier-generals.

But there were faithful souls who did not concede the right to a council of war to absolve them from their ordination vows. These went on their way, and of one faithful priest, who kept his church open, and used the Prayer-book without change, it is recorded that he was not molested, was treated with the respect due to a brave man, and that his house became an asylum for others.

After the Revolution, when the American Church was organized, the Rt. Rev. James Madison, of Virginia, was one of its first Bishops, being consecrated in 1790.

The Ghildren's Corner

DEAR CHILDREN:—Last month we began to study the Holy Communion, to see how ancient an act of worship it was, begun by the Lord Himself, and always the essential parts retained, under the guidance of the Holy Spirit, in all lands, through all the changes of language, only added to here and there as the Church grew in the knowledge of Our Lord and Saviour, Jesus Christ. The different parts of the Service, even, are named, generally from the very beginning.

To begin with that part following the Sermon. This is called the Offertory, and was a part of the earliest worship. At first, in the times of the Apostles, the bread and wine which the Lord had commanded were not easy to get. The early Christians had to manage very carefully, you know, often at the risk of their lives, and many of them were the poorest slaves, with nothing they could call their own. Therefore the bread and wine were "offered" in those times, not only as a solemn preparation for the Communion, but also as a personal gift from some of the congregation, perhaps at the imminent danger of their lives.
